Israeli troops kill three
25 wounded in 'worst' rioting

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Israeli troops shot and killed three Palestinians on Sunday and hospital officials said at least 25 others were wounded. Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek declared that "coexistence between Jews and Arabs has collapsed."

Widespread demonstrations rocked the occupied territories of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip in one of the worst days of bloodshed since the protests began Dec. 8. Jerusalem also suffered as Arab activists cut a water main, leaving several neighborhoods dry.

Two other Arabs — a 15-year-old boy hit in the head by a soldier Saturday and a 10-year-old boy struck by a bullet last week — died of injuries suffered earlier and dozens more were hospitalized after they were beaten and teargassed by Israeli troops.

The disturbances began after Jewish settlers launched an overnight attack on Arab-owned cars in Hebron. Other attacks by Jewish vigilante groups were rumored to have occurred around the West Bank.

The United Nations said the fatalities brought to 48 the number of Palestinians killed in more than two months of demonstrations against the Israeli occupation, which began in 1967. A woman killed Saturday in the West Bank was not included after the United Nations said it could not confirm that she was killed by Israeli soldiers.

"This is the worst day I have ever seen," said Dr. Hani Abdeen, an internist at Mukassad Hospital in Jerusalem, where 31 Palestinians were treated Sunday for gunshot wounds, beating injuries and tear gas poisoning.

In addition, 32 Palestinians were hospitalized in Gaza City with beating injuries, hospital officials said.

Jewish settlers in the West Bank apparently angered by stonings and firebombings of Israeli vehicles drove into Hebron overnight and smashed windows of Arab-owned cars, an army spokesman said.

News of the vandalism in Hebron sparked rumors of other vigalante action Sunday, including a report denied by the army that Jewish settlers had entered two Arab villages near Bethlehem driving bulldozers to uproot trees and fences.

The most violent clash came in the West Bank village of Beit Ummar where three people were killed. Arab reports said 10 were wounded and 15 were injured by tear gas and beatings.

A Palestinian interviewed in his Mukassad Hospital bed where he was recovering from a bullet wound in the shoulder, said residents blocked the village entrance after rumors spread that Jewish settlers were planning an invasion.

At 9 a.m. several carloads of settlers arrived, and "they started to shoot the people from 500 meters away," said the man, who identified himself only as Khaled because he feared reprisals.

Khaled said the army had promised to protect the villagers from the settlers but "instead the soldiers started to attack."

The army denied settlers were present and said violence began after dozens of Palestinians thronged to the entrance of Beit Ummar throwing stones and chanting.

The army chased the Palestinians away from the main road, firing tear gas and bullets, officers said.

Quoting officials from six hospitals, the Palestine Press Service listed the names, ages and hometowns of 25 Palestinians it said were wounded by Israeli gunfire throughout the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

The army said it could confirm seven Palestinians were wounded.

Israeli authorities clamped curfews on 15 refugee camps or towns, including the Shufat refugee camp within Jerusalem city limits.

Series to address violence

By Victoria Ohmacht
Collegian Reporter

Half the women in the United States will experience violence in their relationships, and one in every three women will be raped.

The Women's Resource Center is trying to raise awareness of the problem beginning today during "Susan B. Anthony Awareness Week." Lectures this week will focus on the issues surrounding violence against women.

Katherine Parker, director of the center, said experts estimate that one in every two women will experience violence in their relationships with men.

"One in every three women will be raped in their lifetime. That's a lot of people," she said. "These are our sisters, our friends — it's us.

"That estimate may be high, but the fact is a lot of us do experience (violence)," Parker said. "We need to educate ourselves so that we recognize this is not a private problem ...this is not something personal you are experiencing and no one else is."

Although a week-long discussion on violence may not be the most upbeat way to celebrate the birthday of a famous American, the issue of violence against women touches everyone, Parker said.

"How can we help someone who comes into our room one evening and says, 'I accepted a ride with this man and he raped me'?" she asked. "What do we do as friends?"

The programs "are not designed to put down men. They are to help educate us, so we can start changing things," Parker said.

The program will begin today at noon in Union 212. A discussion on the relationship between pornography, sex and violence will be led by Sandra Coyner, director of Women's Studies.

Parker and Therese Meyer, senior in psychology, will discuss "Power Dynamics in Dating Relationships" today at 3:30 p.m. in Union 206. The program will look at the ways men and women relate to one another and the influence of coercion and manipulation in relationships.

At 7:30 p.m., the movie "Not a Love Story" will be shown in the Union Little Theatre. This film about the pornography industry is "a very powerful movie," Parker said. A discussion will follow the showing.

"I urge people to attend who have never thought about the issue of pornography other than 'there is nothing wrong with reading Penthouse or Playboy,'" Parker said.

Children under high-school age should not see the movie, she said.

"It's very, very graphic, and it is very important that it is always followed by discussion," Parker said. "Parents should attend, so the discussion can continue at home."

The movie will also be shown Wednesday at 3:30 p.m. and Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in Union 207.

Denny Orr, coordinator of residential life at Emporia State University, will lead a discussion on "Valentines and Violence" Tuesday at 3:30 p.m. in Union 206. Orr will help participants identify abusive situations and tell ways of helping others out of damaging relationships.

Self-defense tips for women will be offered at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Union Little Theatre. Phyllis Bauman and Beverly Oettle, both of the Wichita Area Sexual Assault Center, will present the program.

Abusive relationships will again be the topic Wednesday as Judy Davis, Crisis Center of Manhattan, leads a discussion on "Intimate Violence" at noon in Union 212.

On the same day, Skip Saal, professor of psychology, will lead a panel discussion with student leaders at 7:30 p.m. in Union 207 on the topic "Our Attitudes and Actions: Men Discuss Violence Against Women."

In order for the situation to change, men have to change their attitudes toward violence, Parker said. The panel discussion will focus "on what men can start doing to help end the violence against women."

Bush, Dole prepare for Iowa
Caucuses to begin

By The Associated Press

DES MOINES, Iowa — Vice President George Bush distanced himself Sunday from charges his campaign has been leveling at chief GOP presidential rival Bob Dole as candidates of both parties began cooling their rhetoric on the eve of Iowa's crucial precinct caucuses.

The Democrats, with a tightly bunched group of front-runners, focused on attacking U.S. policy in Central America, with Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis suggesting he'd be willing to tolerate a Soviet client state in the region as long as it wasn't a platform for offensive military operations or the subversion of neighboring governments.

The Washington Post reported that Dukakis, like Democratic rival Rep. Richard Gephardt, deducted from Iowa campaign spending limits half of a $82,000 television buy there at the end of last year. By stating that the ads were a fund-raising tool, his campaign relied on a technical provision in election law that exempts fund-raising expenses from the spending cap.

On the eve of the Tuesday caucuses, many of the candidates are pushing Iowa's spending limit of some $760,000.

Bush, appearing on ABC's "This Week with David Brinkley," "offered to totally apologize" to Dole's wife, Elizabeth, if a Bush campaign statement offended her, but declined to extend an apology to Dole.

"I don't think he's mean-spirited," Bush said. "But I don't think the charges that that campaign has leveled against me over and over are true at all."

Bush was questioned about a statement issued by Iowa campaign manager George Wittgraf which attacked Dole for "mean-spiritedness" and raised questions about management of his wife's finances.

"I looked at that and saw nothing that I felt was a criticism of Elizabeth, but if so, I would totally apologize to her," Bush said. "She's a friend."

Dole, interviewed on NBC's "Meet the Press," said of the feud with Bush "as far as I'm concerned it's over."

Dole couldn't resist, however, a shot at Bush on the Iran-Contra arms deal.

"I do think there's a feeling out there that somehow, obviously, Bush is more closely tied to that than any of the rest of us," Dole said.

The campaign flurry came as 11 of the 13 Republican and Democratic presidential candidates stumped across Iowa, with only Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore Jr. and and former Secretary of State Alexander Haig staying away.

It comes on the heels of a survey showing Dole with a double-digit lead over Bush in a poll published by the Des Moines Register, while indicating Missouri Rep. Richard Gephardt led Illinois Sen. Paul Simon and Dukakis among Democrats.

The candidates planned an exhausting series of speeches as they tried to fire up backers to turn out in each of Iowa's 2,487 precincts on Monday. It's the first test for Democrats, and an important early battle for the GOP.

Appearing at a Cedar Rapids breakfast, Gephardt bragged about Wednesday's House vote rejecting aid to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels.

"For six long years, we've had this senseless policy of sending our tax dollars to soldiers in Nicaragua," Gephardt said. "Last Wednesday night we decided in the House of Representatives, that we couldn't wait until November to change America."

Dukakis, questioned on the NBC program, went a step further, citing

Investigator accuses Contra committee of unethical tactics

By The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — The congressional committee that investigated the Iran-Contra affair consciously set out to discredit the president, retired Lt. Gen. Brent Scowcroft said Sunday.

Scowcroft, a member of the Tower Commission, which conducted the first official investigation of the scandal, told American Bar Association members the committee focused excessively on the president's role in the scandal and failed to examine the larger constitutional issues.

"The Contra controversy is really a constitutional confrontation between an executive who has a foreign policy in which he believes deeply is important to the United States and a Congress which is ambivalent or negative about it and wants to do something else," he said.

"What the hearings did not do was to examine how to make the system work when there is this kind of impasse."

In separate speech Sunday to about 200 people at the ABA's midyear meeting, FBI Director William S. Sessions admitted the agency had faults but defended its work and called on attorneys to help recruit new FBI agents.

Both Scowcroft and President Reagan's counsel, Arthur B. Culvahouse, said the congressional investigators acted more like

1,500 protest at U.S. Air base

ATHENS, Greece — About 1,500 protesters converged on a U.S. Air base near Athens Airport on Sunday to protest the American military presence in Greece.

"Out with the Americans — people don't want you here," the crowd shouted during the peaceful demonstration.

Demonstrators blocked traffic and painted anti-American slogans on the tarmac. They demanded that the United States pull its four military bases out of Greece when the installations' current operating agreement expires at the end of the year.

Premier Andreas Papandreou's Socialist government has begun talks with U.S. officials about a new agreement.

Gadhafi: U.S. should get out

WASHINGTON — Libyan leader Col. Moammar Gadhafi said he expects U.S.-Libya relations to improve after the November election, but said Americans should get out of the Arab world "for their own security," according to a published report.

Gadhafi asserted that Americans "definitely must have learned some lessons from the Reagan presidency" and that tensions between Tripoli and Washington have lessened in recent months, The Washington Post reported in today's editions.

Correspondents from the newspaper, along with Washington Post Co. Chairwoman Katharine Graham and Newsweek magazine, interviewed Gadhafi in Algeria, the newspaper said.

Gadhafi appeared to welcome the lessening of tensions with the United States and attributed the problems solely to the failure of "all the American attempts to attack us, which were mad," the report said.

Elephants trample town, kill 2

KATMANDU, Nepal — Wild elephants went on a rampage in southern Nepal, killing two people, trampling homes and destroying food supplies, it was reported Sunday.

Three elephants emerged from the jungle in the evening hours during the past three days, according to RSS, Nepal's national news agency.

Two villagers were attacked and killed by the beasts, which also destroyed grain stores in the area, the agency reported.

Nine die in Indian bus crash

NEW DELHI, India — A bus filled with Hindu pilgrims and a truck collided in the desert state of Rajasthan, killing nine people, the United News of India reported Sunday.

The news agency said all the victims were bus passengers. It quoted police as saying 11 other passengers were injured in the accident Saturday night, and four of them were in serious condition.

The crash occurred near the town of Balotra, 410 miles southwest of New Delhi, UNI reported. The bus was en route to a temple at Nakoda to the north, it said.

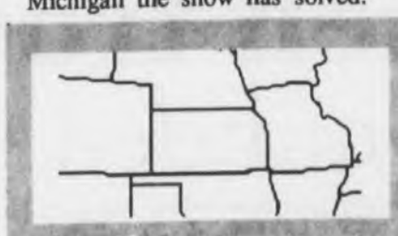
Mystery show leads to arrest



MOSES LAKE, Wash. — A network television show on unsolved mysteries led to the arrest of a couple accused of robbing and killing a Michigan gas station employee, authorities said Saturday.

Jerry Strickland, 26, and Melissa K. Munday, 17, also watched the program Friday night and were waiting for police when they arrived at their home early Saturday, police officer John Mays said.

After the two were mentioned in the NBC television program "Unsolved Mysteries", police received 15 to 20 phone calls from area residents, Mays said.

The show pictured Strickland as wanted for questioning in a 9-month-old unsolved homicide in Waterford Township, located just north of Pontiac, Mich.

"It's a fantastic show," Waterford Township Sgt. Don Bailey said of "Unsolved Mysteries." "That's the third crime from Michigan the show has solved."

No KU investigations, FBI says

LAWRENCE — The FBI has said it did not investigate University of Kansas critics of U.S. foreign policy toward Central America.

"FBI agents did not conduct any surveillances or interviews of individuals or groups at the University of Kansas in Lawrence...," Robert B. Davenport, special agent in charge of the FBI office in Kansas City, said in a statement Friday.

An FBI document obtained by the Center for Constitutional Rights contained a reference to an investigation at KU by agents in Kansas City.

A spokesman for the FBI said Friday that Lawrence is in the jurisdiction of the Kansas City office, but that evidence could not be found of any such investigation.

Hutchinson burger disputed

HUTCHINSON — A controversy over the definition of a hamburger has a Hutchinson restaurant owner sizzling, an Indiana firm fanning the flames and the manager of a mall sandwiched between the two.

It's now up to the courts to decide whose beef is legitimate.

Gary Hutchison, operator of the Orange Julius concession at the Hutchinson Mall, says Melvin Simon Associates, parent firm of the Hutchinson Mall, agreed in writing to let him sell gourmet hamburgers known as "Juliusburgers." They then threatened to kick him out of the mall for selling them.

So he's suing them in Reno County District Court for more than $10,000 in damages.

Artwork selected for contest

"Root Bound," an acrylic on black paper by Margo Kren, professor of art, has been selected for a juried exhibition of original art by Kansas artists.

The exhibition will be on display through Feb. 21 in the Mulvane Art Center at Washburn University of Topeka.

Kren's artwork was one of 365 entries submitted by 153 artists.

Juror Paul Brach, a nationally known painter who lives in New York, selected one work by each of 42 artists.

The contest was sponsored by the Kansas Arts Commission.

Corrections

Due to an editor's error, it was erroneously reported in a story in Thursday's Collegian that University Physical Facilities would save $150 on the cost of redwood trash receptacles by building them itself. The cost of the receptacles will be reduced from $536 to about $150, resulting in a savings of about $385.

Contras a charity, says U.S.

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department says private supporters of the Nicaraguan Contras can legally raise funds for the rebels.

The Contras' backers will have to step gingerly, though, if they want to avoid past mistakes that have led to criminal charges or made them — both wittingly and unwittingly — part of the Iran-Contra affair.

For instance, U.S. law would prohibit the private backers from shipping arms now in the United States to the Contras without State Department approval.

And the department would have to agree before U.S.-made arms could be sent from other countries to the rebels.

Other laws prohibit the launching of private military operations from U.S. soil and require registration of anyone operating as an agent of a foreign entity.

Internal Revenue Service rules say that tax-exempt charitable organizations must raise money for food, clothing and shelter — not for weapons.

Private Contra backers said last week they would try anew to raise money for the rebels because of the House's rejection of $36.2 million in aid.

"Based on my conversations with lawyers here in the department, it's my understanding that there currently are no laws which prohibit a private citizen from donating money to the Contras," Justice Department spokesman Terry Eastland said.

Last year, public relations executive Richard Miller and conservative fund-raiser Carl R. "Spitz" Channell pleaded guilty to conspiring to defraud the government. Independent Counsel Lawrence Walsh charged them with illegally using a tax-exempt foundation to raise $3 million to arm the Contras.

The government was cheated out of tax revenue from donors, who were wrongly told they could deduct the funds from their income taxes, Walsh said at the time.

Wilson Fadely, an Internal Revenue Service spokesman, said tax-exempt organizations "will have to show us evidence" that money is raised for humanitarian aid. If a group can't do so, it will lose its tax-exempt status, and also could be subject to criminal laws — such as the conspiracy statute used against Miller and Channell.

Individual contributors, who take a deduction for donating to a group that later loses its tax-exempt status, are safe from penalties.

But Fadely said the IRS could collect back taxes from anyone who took a deduction knowing that the tax-exempt group was not raising money for charitable purposes.

Last Nov. 25, the IRS revoked the tax-exempt status of the U.S. Council for World Freedom, headed by retired Maj. Gen. John Singlaub. That action was taken because of the group's earlier fund-raising activities for the Contras.

On Thursday, Singlaub said he plans to raise money anew, commenting, "We will make every effort, everything humanly possible within the law, to raise money."

Singlaub and other conservatives said they would join forces to sell Contra war bonds to raise money for military equipment, food and supplies.

Fund-raisers also have to follow the 200-year-old Neutrality Act, which prohibits the launching of a military expedition from the United States against a nation at peace with this country.

A Justice Department source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said it would be illegal to use private funds to support such an effort.

But the source said the department believes there is no violation when money is raised in the United States, and sent to aid a military operation launched from another country.

The source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said it would be illegal if private funds went to support such a military expedition sent from U.S. soil.

Local merchant receives award

By The Collegian Staff

The Riley County Council of Social Agencies awarded Bruce E. McMillan its annual Business Sector award Friday afternoon at a luncheon held at Kennedy's Claim.

The award is given out to the individual who exhibits commitment and devotes time to furthering local social agencies in Riley County.

McMillan, whose social service list is a long one, received his master's in business administration at the University of Missouri at St. Louis and a master's degree in architecture at K-State, where he taught both engineering and architecture. He is currently the sole proprietor of Bruce McMillan A.I.A., an architectural business.

McMillan served as president of the Riley County Mental Health Association. He was also president of the Manhattan chapter of the American Diabetes Association.

Currently he is a member of the Fort Riley Historical Society, Manhattan Arts Council, Downtown Jaycees, Chamber of Commerce, Rotary Club, and Manhattan Mainstreet Advisory Board. He is also an advisor for the Public Housing Club.

"I'm humbled by these proceedings," McMillan said. "I would like to say that any involvement I've had, hopefully, has come from the heart."

Technological advancements only make life, choices harder

Commentary

MARK SCHREINER
Collegian Columnist

I read an article stating that in 25 years cars will be guided by magnets in the road. The article was written in 1955.

I have seen predictions for domed undersea cities and orbiting space colonies, cities full of happy and content families.

I say undersea cities are for sea monkeys.

Hi-tech future cities have several problems. One is economic, and another is political. Who taxes a city off the coast of California?

The biggest problem is moral. The move from sharp rocks to Sharp products was faster than the move from "an eye for an eye" to the Golden Rule.

A space or undersea city could never justify wasting room for religious services, and the citizens could not waste the energy and time.

Super-tech opens up the possibility of super disasters. Manhattan can survive for a few days without electricity, but a space city would die in an hour without it. Who gets blamed and who fixes things when an O-ring fails?

Technology makes evil easy. It also makes freedom hard. How can I disagree with the government if it can cut my oxygen line at any time?

I am not saying hi-tech cities cannot be built; I am saying humans do not have the abilities or the organizations to support them.

I may sound anti-technology, but it is only because I am. Technical knowledge grows like cloned rabbits, but the moral knowledge guiding its use grows slowly.

We did not worry about whether destroying the world was right until we had the atomic bomb. Biological weapons kill people we cannot see. Archers were once called cowards because they would not battle their enemies face to face.

If we cannot build million-gallon oil tanks, we cannot spill a million gallons of oil.

Technology dehumanizes in the worst way. Bombing Japan saved American lives. But it sure didn't save Japanese lives. We said Americans are more worthy of life than the Japanese. We played God and dehumanized the Japanese.

Perhaps pure technology is not bad in itself — as in "machine guns don't kill people; people kill people." But it makes bad so easy. Mel Gibson in "Lethal Weapon" killed a man from 500 yards away in high wind.

Technology also steals the activities that make us human.

Soon, labor-saving machines will save us from all labor. We will be left to eat, sleep, use the bathroom and learn multiplication tables. After that, we will have nothing but television. Our job will be to absorb entertainment.

But entertainment will fail us. We are a strange mix of body and mind, and we are happiest when the two mix. Technology uses only the mind, and so we look for substitutes to stimulate the body.

We already have some substitutes: jogging trails and recreation centers. We have passed the point where technology saves us from deadly or deathly dull work to where it steals all stimulating work away.

I know this from having worked in an office programming computers. My coworkers and I protected ourselves from our bodiless task each day with caffeine and nicotine and music.

Feeling is a bodily function. When it doesn't get exercised, we pour in caffeine or television or music. We love music because supposedly it is as close as we can get to artificial emotion without injecting stimulants.

Space and undersea cities will not work because they will not have room for jogging tracks and they will play Muzak instead of rock.

Confederate flags don't belong on state capitols

Confederate flags are flying over the Alabama state Capitol, the South Carolina Statehouse and the Oklahoma capitol building. Confederate designs can also be found on the flags of Mississippi and Georgia.

Recently, these flags have caused angry confrontations. In Alabama, 14 black lawmakers — including the Alabama NAACP president — were arrested last Tuesday in an attempt to tear down the Confederate flag atop the Capitol.

The governor of Alabama, Gary Hunt, promised that no one could rip down the flag until legislators have decided what to do.

Not only do these flags cause anger and resentment among blacks, but they also represent an enemy of the United States. The Confederacy fought against the possibility of becoming united with the other states. The Confederacy lost. Its flag should have been relegated to museums, not to capitol buildings of the country that won the war.

The Confederate flag is of historical value and should not be completely forgotten. But, it should never have been given a place of prominence and respect. Many people may consider it a symbol of the South or of the Southern way of life and may not realize it is a powerful reminder to blacks of the slavery they once endured.

To blacks, the Confederate flag is as much a symbol of repression as the swastika is to a Jewish person.

Individuals have a right to display any flag they want, and that right should not be taken away. If people choose to display a Confederate flag, they should at least know what the flag is a symbol of and what it says to others.

However, this right does not extend to flying offensive flags over state capitols.

The people of Alabama, South Carolina, Oklahoma, Mississippi and Georgia should take immediate action to remove this racist and contradictory symbol which flies so serenely over their capitols.

For the sake of blacks and other conscientious people, the Confederate flag should finally be given the ceremony it deserves: a funeral.

Demand answers

Editor,

K-State has a problem more glaring than its football team. A lack of courage on the part of the students is leading directly to the poisoning and destruction of our state.

Universities in our society are supposed to function as institutions of inquiry that are removed from the political process. We confer tenure upon our professors so that they may look to the long-term good of our state and its people. The danger is that once established beyond recall, these experts will consider their own comfort ahead of the needs of the citizens. The watchdogs for Kansas' citizenry must be our students who confront the established experts and demand the consideration of the health of our state.

For several decades, K-State's experts in many fields have been short-sighted and destructive. We have an allegedly scientific establishment that has recommended the destruction of our soil, water and air in the name of efficiency and profit. The pain of these policies is everywhere in our state. Agriculture is being treated as an industry, and Kansas is being treated as a mine.

You must demand that the experts standing before you are considering the good of our state. You must ask "What will happen to the people and planet as a result of this action?" The experts most responsible for our current illness will be the hardest to confront. They will counter with ridicule and threats. Remember! They do not know the limits of the possible!

Only a few of you will be brave enough to demand answers. You will feel isolated and inadequate, but across the state other isolated people and groups are starting to demand accountability. The poisoning of our state and the dislocation of our people are very real facts. Tomorrow's news will reveal today's experts as fools.

You must have the guts to demand accountability within the University or carry the responsibility for a poisoned planet. If you are willing to stand meekly in line, then you will surely get what is coming to you.

Poor coverage

Editor,

My letter concerns the lack of campus coverage by your newspaper. While we have the Manhattan Mercury, Kansas City Star and Times, Wichita Eagle-Beacon and others to cover local, state and national events, the Collegian is given the sole opportunity to cover campus events — and you don't!

Every day, your paper is filled (with the possible exception of parts of the front page) with Associated Press and syndicated columns while campus groups like the debate squad, Students Against Multiple Sclerosis, greek affairs and other go uncovered and unreported. I have even heard from a source at the Riley County Police Department that there was a rape on campus sometime early this year — why wasn't it reported in the Collegian?

Are there other major crimes around campus going unreported, lulling us into a false sense of security? There are many other sources for state and national news; as a student newspaper, I feel the Collegian should give more consideration to covering events here at K-State. If you don't, who will?

AIDS assistance

Editor,

Thanks very much for the first-rate coverage you have given to the issues surrounding AIDS in our community and elsewhere. I admire your sensitivity and courage, and many share my gratitude, believe me.

Those of your readers who would like to help educate the public about AIDS, to assist in caring for those who have AIDS or AIDS-related complexes and to offer encouragement to their families and loved ones may wish to join the Topeka AIDS Project as volunteers. The Project for several years has given substantial assistance to AIDS and ARC patients and those close to them, and it sponsors a support group for men and women who have the AIDS virus but have not developed the illness itself. The Project is entirely manned by volunteers, and although based in Topeka, accepts patients here and also will welcome newcomers from K-State and its neighborhood to its volunteer corps.

Any of your readers who would like to enlist can reach me at 532-6730 or 776-4499. I can promise them gratifying work and unparalleled gratification.

Misleading article

Editor,

Audra Dietz's article of Feb. 1 concerning opposition to the licensure of dietitians in Kansas is a perfect example of why we need controls in this important health area. The misinformation contained in this one article was enough to convince any legislator to vote "yes" on this important view.

To clarify some of the misleading statements which Ms. Dietz reported:

■ Health food stores would NOT be "forced to hire a dietitian," thus forcing prices up. Such stores could continue to sell their products unimpeded — but any "counseling" of clients would have to be done by someone licensed as qualified to do so.

■ Licensed dietitians CANNOT "prescribe drugs and specialized diets." This has been, and will continue to be, done by licensed physicians.

■ The American Dietetic Association was characterized in Ms. Dietz's article as being unsupportive of licensure. This is untrue; the Association is strong and outspoken in its support for the licensure effort in all states seeking the certification, but for protection of the public from unscrupulous practitioners of nutrition quackery.

■ Dietitians DO take a national examination which tests for knowledge in several areas of dietetic practice, namely normal, therapeutic and community/public health and food science. A minimum of a B.S. degree encompassing prescribed coursework as well as 900 hours of supervised practical experience must be achieved before one is allowed to take the national examination.

Dietitians and nutritionists with degrees from accredited colleges and universities are the ONLY health professionals trained to provide sound nutrition information for the public. It is this type of rigorous education and training which is recognized by licensure. The same is true for numerous other health occupations.

Thanks, Audra, for your article. It proved once again that misinformation is all too easily peddled to an unsuspecting public.

Admissions cost unknown

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

One state legislative leader is not sure if any savings could be realized from the qualified admissions proposals currently being considered by the Kansas Legislature.

It costs the University about $150,000 to $200,000 a year to conduct remedial education classes at K-State, said House Majority Leader Joe Knopp, R-Manhattan. However, he has not compared those costs against projected costs of administering a qualified admissions program.

Knopp, appearing at the biweekly Eggs and Issues Breakfast sponsored by the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, was responding to a question from Hermann Donnert, professor of nuclear engineering.

In his question, Donnert suggested the cost of administering a qualified admissions program may actually exceed the cost of conducting remedial classes.

Reducing the cost of the remedial education has been a justification used by the Kansas Board of Regents and lawmakers for supporting qualified admissions.

Remedial classes may be required even if the qualified admissions program becomes state law because of the need to assist some foreign students with meeting curriculum requirements, Knopp said.

Knopp also said that cost-of-living increases are being considered by the Legislature.

Cost-of-living increases for classified state employees have been considered by past Legislatures but only after other spending issues were considered, he said.

Taxpayers in Manhattan Unified School District 383 can anticipate as much as a 12-mill increase in the school district's tax levy next year, said Sen. Don Montgomery, R-Sabetha.

He said the increase would be prompted by a decrease in state aid to USD 383 by as much as $257,000. The decrease was recommended in Gov. Mike Hayden's school aid proposal.

The 12-mill increase in the tax levy would only allow USD 383 to maintain present levels of support, Montgomery said.

Rep. William Bryant, R-Washington, called a letter sent to state legislators by the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce "mildly parochial."

The letter promotes returning all the windfall revenues to the people of Kansas with the exception of funds earmarked for the Margin of Excellence program, he said.

Another area congressman, Rep. Ivan Sand, R-Riley, explained legislation under consideration that would require extensive disclosure of information regarding the sale and purchase of real estate.

The information would include cost of the real estate, names of the borrower and lender, amount borrowed and interest rates paid, Sand said.

Judge orders trial to Junction City

By The Associated Press

JUNCTION CITY — A Geary County District Court judge has ordered a change of venue for the trial of a Newton man accused in the Oct. 26, 1987, rape and murder of a rural Goessel woman.

The defendant, Oliver K. Smith, 25, is tentatively scheduled to stand trial Feb. 29 in Geary County District Court, according to Marion County Attorney Ed Wheeler.

Wheeler said Judge George F. Scott gave a number of reasons for moving the trial, including pretrial publicity, but emphasized that the defendant's race was the primary concern.

Smith is black and there are only 15 blacks among the 13,373 residents of Marion County, according to information presented in a motion by Smith's court-appointed defense lawyer.

Smith either knows or is related to all 15 of the black residents, so they could not serve on the jury. Having the trial in Marion County would amount to the systemic removal of blacks from the jury.

Bledsoe saves ship, ensures 'Cats' win

K-State keeps conference lead with victory over Cornhuskers

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

The battleship was in danger of going down, and Wildcat forward Charles Bledsoe was the only man who could save the sinking ship.

Bledsoe found himself at the charity stripe with two seconds left and the score tied, 63-63, in K-State's battle with Nebraska Saturday in Ahearn Field House.

If shooting free throws could be compared to swimming, Bledsoe — the team's worst free throw shooter with a 44.2 percent average going into the game — was having problems mastering the dog paddle.

"Charles wanted to be up there. That's the most important ingredient. He shot free throws relatively well on the day."
—Lon Kruger

"At that point, I had no choice but to be on the line," Bledsoe said. "I had some butterflies in my stomach and (Cornhusker guard Henry T.) Buchanan said to me, 'You ready to miss these free throws?'"

Inspired by Buchanan's words, Bledsoe hit both shots to give the 'Cats a 65-63 win which enabled them to move to 14-4 overall, and to stay atop the pack in the Big Eight Conference race at 6-0.

Bledsoe hit 10-of-15 shots from the stripe — just nine under his season total— and finished second to Mitch Richmond (who had 16 points) for team scoring honors with 14 points.

"Charles wanted to be up there. That's the most important ingredient," K-State coach Lon Kruger said. "He shot free throws relatively well on the day. I think that helped his confidence a lot."

Even though Bledsoe's teammates could joke about the senior forward's performance from the line following the game, it could easily be termed nervous laughter. The 'Cats trailed Nebraska by 6, 57-51, with 5:55 to go before Richmond's two consecutive three-point shots tied the score.

"We were in trouble," Kruger said. "Nebraska...simply came in here and outfought us. That's one of the things we hate to say after a ballgame ends. When we say that, very likely it's going to be a tough win for us."

Richmond led the team in scoring for the 13th time this season, but was less than impressive in hitting 5-of-10 shots from the field and three-of-eight from the free-throw line.

"I guess I didn't come ready to play tonight," he said, adding that he was "praying" on his two three-pointers late in the second half.

Nebraska had a chance to win before Bledsoe's heroics, but Buchanan's shot from just inside the top of the key failed to drop and Pete Manning fouled Bledsoe going for the offensive rebound.

"I wanted something with a little more penetration, but (Buchanan) has been in that situation before," Nebraska coach Danny Nee said. "We had some chances before to win the game and we didn't go after it."

In the first half, K-State built a 37-33 advantage at the intermission behind eight-point efforts from Fred McCoy and William Scott.

The 'Cats had a 10-2 advantage early in the half before Nebraska rallied to tie the game four times late in the half. Eric Johnson scored eight of his team-high 16 points in the opening stanza for the Cornhuskers, who drop to 12-10 overall and 3-3 in the conference.

Nebraska took the lead for the first time, 51-49, with 8:41 left in the game after Buchanan ripped off a five-point run. The 'Huskers definitely didn't look like the same squad which had lost by 16 Thursday to Oklahoma State.

"After the O-State game we promised ourselves that we would never play a game that bad again," Buchanan said.

K-State outscored NU from the free-throw line 24-11, but was outrebounded for only the third time this season. The Wildcats' 6-0 start in the Big Eight is the best since the 1969-70 team won its first six on its way to the conference title.

Leaders continue to win in Big Eight action

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Missouri must be getting REAL tired of playing Oklahoma — in all sports.

The 1986 Oklahoma football team gave Missouri its worst beating in history — a 77-0 thrashing.

Now the Oklahoma basketball team has also entered the Missouri record book. In a 120-101 clobbering of the defending Big Eight champs Saturday, the Sooners scored the most points ever recorded against Missouri since the Tigers took up basketball 82 years ago.

"They got a little rhythm started and we were never able to take that away from them," said Missouri Coach Norm Stewart. The previous high against a Missouri team was 112 by Kansas in 1974.

"I still think Missouri has an excellent, excellent basketball team," said Billy Tubbs, coach of the high-scoring, seventh-ranked Sooners. "This was a good win for us, to say the least."

Elsewhere in Big Eight action Saturday as the conference season neared its midway point, Kansas State raised its conference log to 6-0 with a 65-63 victory over Nebraska, Oklahoma State downed Iowa State 80-78 in overtime, and Kansas broke a four-game losing skid by whipping Colorado 73-62.

Stacey King led Oklahoma with a career-high 40 points and Mookie Blaylock set a school record for steals in a season as the Sooners raised their overall record to 20-2 and their conference log to 6-1. Missouri fell to 13-5, 3-3, and seems in dire jeopardy of not defending its conference championship.

King, a 6-foot-10 center, hit 12 of 19 field goals and also had 12 rebounds and four blocked shots. Blaylock's five steals gave him 93, three more than Tim McCalister made two seasons ago. Derrick Chievous scored 32 for Missouri.

"Missouri was tough to stop," Tubbs said. "They beat us down the floor. When you're shooting the ball well, things do seem to click. But keep in mind, no one plays quite as well on the road as they do at home."

"Forget the game. Let's go to another one," Stewart said.

Iowa State has fallen upon hard times, too. At one time thought to be a title threat, the Cyclones have dropped to 16-7 overall and 2-5 in the conference after losing at home to the Cowboys, 12-8, 3-3. Iowa State has not won since Jan. 20.

"We had some opportunities, but the ball just didn't bounce right," said Iowa State Coach Johnny Orr. "We'd go up there and rebound and it would bounce right to their guy and then he makes the shot, which you have to give him credit for."

Oklahoma State's John Starks hit an 18-footer with four seconds left in overtime to beat the 16th-ranked Cyclones, who will surely fall out of the Top Twenty this week. Iowa State's Jeff Grayer led all scorers with 35 points while Lafester Rhodes had 13 points for the Cyclones.

Starks and Sylvester Kincheon scored 21 points each.

"I thought Iowa State did an excellent job fighting back toward the end of the game," said Oklahoma State Coach Leonard Hamilton. "We thought we had the game under control, then they turned the level of play up defensively and caused us some turnovers."

Danny Manning scored 23 points and Kevin Pritchard scored 17 as Kansas won at home for the first time in three games. The Jayhawks raised their record to 13-8 and 2-4 while Colorado plunged to 4-15 and 0-6.

"It wasn't pretty but it's a win," said Kansas Coach Larry Brown. "We're going to get better. I think we're going to get a lot better. But this team doesn't have confidence right now."

A team with plenty of confidence would be Coach Lon Kruger's K-State Wildcats. Now 6-0 in the conference and 14-4 overall, the Wildcats seem to be charging to their second straight NCAA Tournament appearance.

Oddly, after winning the game with clutch free throws, Kruger decried his team's performance at the line. Forward Charles Bledsoe made two free throws with two seconds left to lift the Wildcats to victory.

"It was a pretty bad day at the line," Kruger said. "It's ironic we had a pretty tough day and Charles steps up there and saves us."

NOTES...K-State's Mitch Richmond averages 28.8 points per game on Saturdays. In six Saturday contests to date, he's scored 173 points. His worst effort took place Saturday in Ahearn Field House, where he scored 16 points against Nebraska...During the decade of the '80s, Missouri is 150-21 when shooting 50 percent or better from the field.

This afternoon looks promising for Top 20 hopefuls

On March 2, 1982, I turned 18. I could vote, buy a drink in a bar (times were different then), do just about anything my heart desired. I was legal.

On that same date, a group of men coached by Jack Hartman was ranked in the Top Twenty in college basketball by the Associated Press.

It was the last time a K-State men's basketball team was ranked — until this afternoon.

Although the Wildcats struggled Saturday afternoon in posting a 65-63 win over Nebraska to maintain their top spot in the Big Eight Conference with a 6-0 record and a mark of 14-4 overall, K-State should break back into the poll today for the first time in just under six years.

Lon Kruger's squad just missed being ranked among the nation's elite last week, earning a No. 21 spot in the AP poll released a week ago today.

Since that date, K-State has posted consecutive conference wins over No. 16 Iowa State and unranked Nebraska.

In addition, six of the seven teams rated just above K-State in last week's poll lost on Saturday.

It's a legitimate possibility, then, that the Wildcats could enter the poll as high as No. 15.

On Saturday, No. 14 Georgetown lost to Connecticut 66-59. The Hoyas now have a record of 14-6. Vanderbilt, a team on a win streak much like that of K-State as of late, will likely lose its No. 15 rating after a 94-79 loss to LSU. Vanderbilt is now 14-5.

Iowa State, as mentioned, lost to K-State Wednesday and then lost at home Saturday to Oklahoma State, 80-78, in overtime. Look for the Cyclones, now 2-5 in Big Eight play and 16-7 overall, to drop from the Top Twenty.

Illinois, ranked No. 17 last week, fell Saturday to a team likely to join K-State in entering the Top 20 this week — Indiana. Bobby Knight's boys downed the Illini (now 14-8) 75-74 and appear to be peaking at the right time.

Bradley, ranked No. 18 and now 14-3, was the lone Saturday survivor among those teams ranked No. 14 through No. 20, beating Drake 85-67.

Florida, now 16-6, fell to Auburn 58-57 Saturday night at home and will likely drop from No. 19 right out of the ratings.

St. John's could join Iowa State and Florida in falling from the ratings. The No. 20 Redmen fell to No. 12 Syracuse 79-62 Saturday to fall to 14-5.

With the exception of Bradley, K-State has fewer defeats than any of the teams ranked No. 14 through No. 20 last week. The Wildcats have as many wins — 14 — as five of the seven teams rated above them last week.

Mitch Richmond and his teammates have made their case for Top Twenty recognition, and the powers that be will probably give them that recognition today.

Don't look for Wildcat players and coaches to get too excited about it, however.

"It will be nice to be there, but there's a lot more important things on our minds right now," Kruger said after the win over Nebraska.

"It doesn't really mean anything, but it is something that's nice to say, I guess," guard Steve Henson said of the possibility the Wildcats might crack the Top Twenty.

It's not a possibility anymore — it's a probability.

I'm a month away from birthday No. 24 now, Kruger has replaced Hartman as coach, and a group of men from Manhattan and good old K-State are about to be ranked in the Top Twenty in college basketball by the Associated Press.

It's about time.

Daredevils 'spectacular'

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

"He flies through the air, with the greatest of ease. The daring young man on the flying trapeze."

They weren't exactly swinging through the air from rafter to rafter in Ahearn Field House, but the Budlight Daredevils performed spectacular dunks with the greatest of ease.

During halftime of the K-State-Nebraska men's game Saturday, the Daredevils, out of Memphis, Tenn., used trampolines, gymnastic skills and basketball ability to entertain the crowd.

Ty Cobb, the Daredevils' founder, said the whole show was never intended to become as popular as it has become.

"When I was in college (at the University of Mississippi) the yell leaders challenged each other at halftime to do different stunts with a mini-tramp," Cobb said. "After I graduated, we decided to see if we could turn the halftime show into a traveling show around the country.

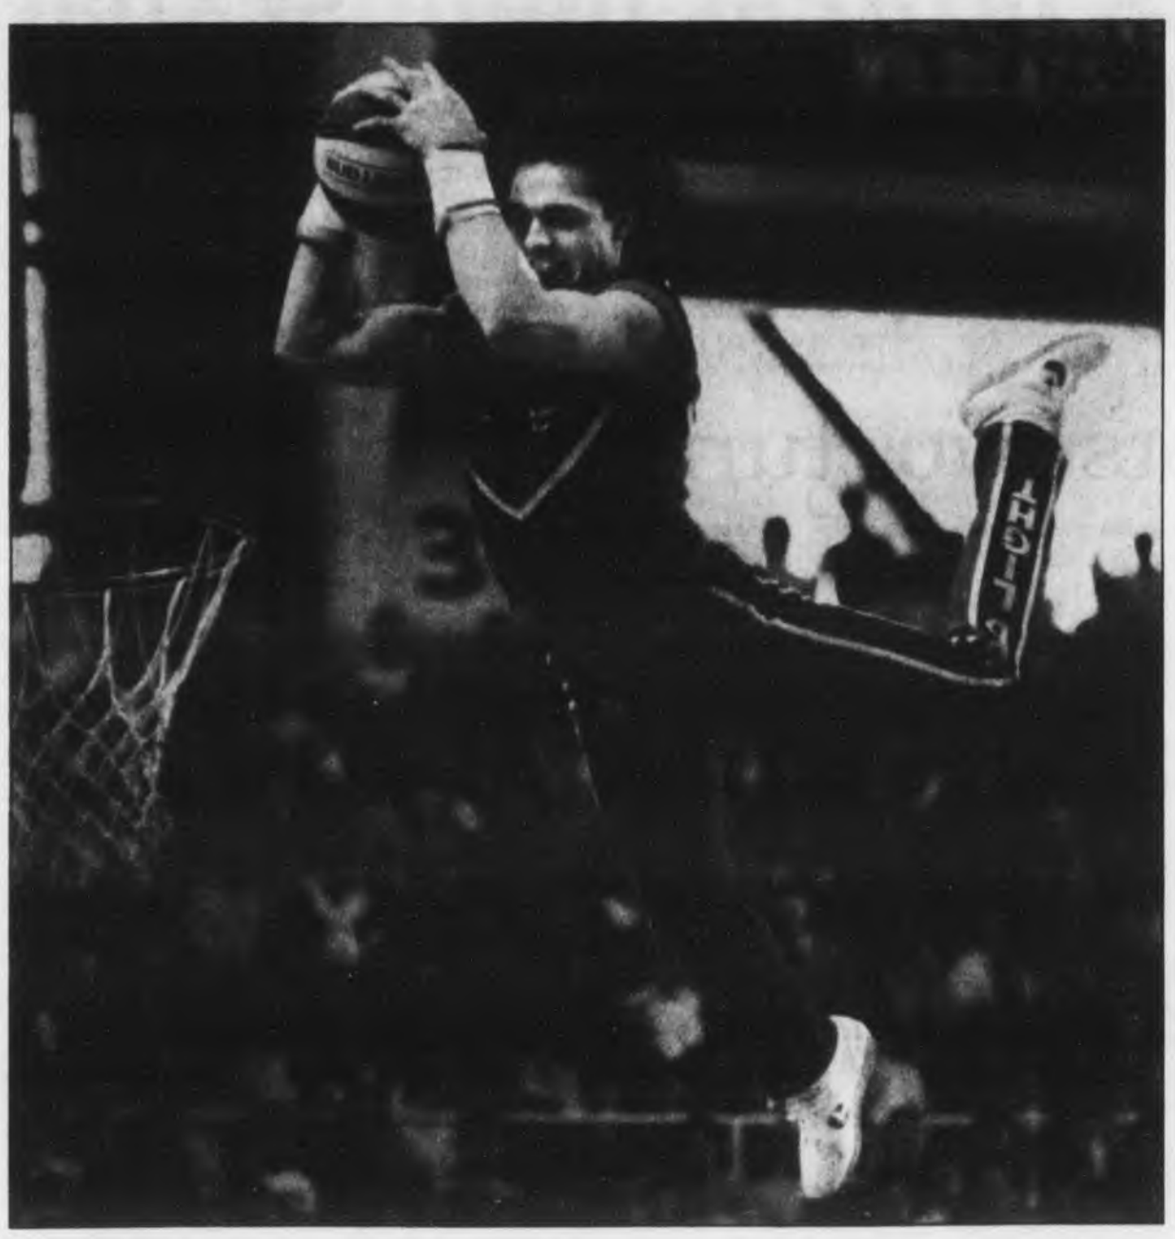
"I knew some people at Anhueiser-Busch in St. Louis," he said. "They helped sponsor us at first, and since then, we've had a good relationship with them."

The team consists of Cobb, his brother Guy, Tim Lancaster and Keith Eldred.

The popularity of this team has taken them to over 150 colleges and into every National Basketball Association arena.

It's that kind of travel that wears on the team members more than the show.

"You go to one show, and as soon as you're done, you go to the next," Lancaster said. "It gets kind of tiring, but the shows get you so pumped up that you don't feel so tired."



The act consists of an eight-minute slam dunk and acrobatic routine. Two of the more spectacular feats are the "Flip Dunk" and the "Kongo Dunk". The "Flip Dunk" has a team member (wearing a hockey mask for protection) springing off a mini-trampoline with a basketball in his hands, executing a foward flip as high as he can get in the air and slamming the ball on the way down.

Lancaster, who performed this stunt Saturday, said he enjoys taking the risk just for the crowd response.

"Sure it's dangerous," he said. "But to hear the crowd response is great. All entertainers will tell you that they enjoy the crowd response and that's why we're doing this."

The "Kongo Dunk" has three team members performing consecutive flips in front of the rim, passing the ball from one team member to the next with the fourth catching

K-State's track and field teams were able to combine for seven first place finishes in the non-scored Jayhawk Invitational held in Lawrence Saturday.

The women's two-mile relay competed for the first time this season and came up with a first place finish in 9:25.20. Individually, Kim Kilpatrick took top honors in the 55-meter hurdles in 7.9 seconds. Joy Jones finished first in the 300-yard dash in 35.4 seconds with Kilpatrick on her heels, while DeDe Henderson took top honors in the high jump with a jump of 5-7¾ .

For the men, the two-mile relay won in 7:41.3, while Chuckie Allen finished first in the 300-yard dash 31.1 seconds. For the second consecutive week, Pat Hessini set a new school mark in the 1,000-meter run, with a winning time of 2:28.20.

Jeff Reynolds, coming off a case of chronic tendonitis, returned to competition for K-State. He ran in only one heat and will gradually come back to full competition, said Coach John Capriotti, who was pleased to have him running again.

"Our team did a good job," Capriotti said. "Joy Jones, Kim Kilpatrick and DeDe Henderson did a great job for the women. We are coming around and are about where we want to be."

MEN'S RESULTS

Two-mile relay—1, (Zwahlen, Goertz, Stahl, Hessini), 7:41.3.

West loses All-Star game by five, 138-133

Jordan scores 40, garners MVP honors

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Michael Jordan was the king of All-Star Weekend, reigning supreme on his own court.

Jordan followed up his NBA slam-dunk title with a 40-point, Most Valuable Player performance in Sunday's All-Star game, leading the East to a 138-133 victory over the West.

"The whole weekend was fun," Jordan said. "I felt I was home. It really felt good."

Jordan, who routinely treats his hometown fans to spectacular feats as a member of the Chicago Bulls, did it again in front of a sellout crowd of 18,403 watching the NBA's best players. He was 17-for-23 from the floor and his 40 points was two shy of the all-time All-Star record of 42 by Wilt Chamberlain in 1962.

"It was my first opportunity to win the MVP," said Jordan, who scored a total of 18 points in his two previous All-Star appearances. "It's something to remember and it goes along with everything else. But my ultimate goal is winning a world championship."

Dominique Wilkins, Jordan's slam-dunk rival in Saturday's competition that went down to Jordan's final dunk, was overshadowed again as he scored 29 for the East, which now leads the series 25-13.

The East built a 15-point lead in the fourth quarter, and the West got no closer than the final score the rest of the way as Jordan, troubled by foul trouble in the second half, scored 16 points in the final 5:50.

"The players were paying me a homecourt tribute," Jordan said. "It was a display of great gratitude from my peers."

East Coach Mike Fratello, Wilkins' coach with the Atlanta Hawks, said Jordan and Wilkins formed an unstoppable duo.

If they played on the same team, Fratello said, "I don't know if we would have enough seats in Atlanta to handle the people."

"We wanted to put on a good show," Wilkins said, "and he (Jordan) did it. It's his town and he played very well. Naturally, all the attention goes to him. I was just here to have fun."

Magic Johnson, who had 17 points and 19 assists in a losing effort for the West, said Jordan's performance was all the more impressive because he scored 40 points without taking a lot of shots.

"He showed me a lot in that he did it by hitting a high percentage of his shots," Johnson said.

Karl Malone led the West with 22 points, Akeem Olajuwon had 21 and Lafayette Lever scored 17.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar scored 10 points and became the all-time leading All-Star scorer with 247 points in 17 appearances.

Magic Johnson had 17 points and 19 assists for the West.

The West, which trailed by as many as 10 points in the first half, got two three-point plays from Johnson to close the deficit to 78-75 with 6:43 left in the third quarter. Jordan went out with his fourth foul at that point, but the East went on an 18-8 run to regain control. Wilkins had three baskets and Danny Ainge two 3-pointers during that spurt.

Ainge had his third 3-pointer and Doc Rivers hit a free throw, giving the East a 109-94 lead with 9:16 remaining, and Jordan's return moments later helped assure the East of the victory.

Jordan scored 18 points in the first half as the East opened a 60-54 halftime lead.

The East spent the first quarter playing catch-up, tying the score four times but never taking the lead.

Malone, making his first All-Star appearance, scored eight points in the first 8:05, lifting the West to its largest lead, 24-16. A 9-2 spurt by the East made it 26-25 before Clyde Drexler scored six points in less than two minutes as the West gained a 34-27 advantage with 11:37 left in the half.

Netters defeated

The K-State women's tennis team ended its hopes for defending the championship crown Saturday in the KSU Pepsi Doubles Invitational.

It was an all-Wichita State championship and consolation finals, with three teams competing for the two crowns. Other schools competing this weekend were Creighton and Missouri.

For K-State, Sigrid Ivarsson and Annika Emtell reached the winner's draw semifinal, along with Tara White and Shawna Smith playing in the consolation semifinal before both teams were defeated.

K-State coach Steve Bietau said the play of Wichita State was better than before and that it pointed out the K-State flaws.

"Wichita State played much better this weekend than when we played them this fall," he said. "We have a lot of things to work on. This tournament brought out areas we need to improve on. We need to get everyone healthy and playing again for this next weekend."

Next action for the Wildcats will be Feb. 12-13 when they travel to Springfield, Mo., for the Southwest Missouri Invitational.

Semifinals winner's bracket results:

M. Vanden Heever/Di Laura (WSU) def. Ivarsson/Emtell (KSU) 7-6(7-2), 6-1 C.Vanden Heever/Baldwin (WSU) def. Rive/Conner (Open) 7-5, 6-2.

Championship winner's bracket results:

M. Vanden Heever/Di Laura (WSU) def. C. Vanden Heever/Baldwin (WSU) 6-4, 7-5.

Consolation semifinals results:

Elliot/Logan (Open) def. Smith/White 2-6, 6-2, 6-2.

Boon/Clark (WSU) def. Nagel/Richmeir (CU) 6-2, 6-1

Nebraska upends Lady Cats, 66-60

By Daran Neuschafer
Sports Writer

On paper, Saturday's matchup between K-State's Lady Cats and the Nebraska Cornhuskers might have appeared to be a lopsided victory for Nebraska. Going into the game, the Cornhuskers were leading the Big Eight Conference race, while K-State found itself at the bottom end of the standings.

But as anyone knows, games are decided on the court, not on the stat sheet. And Saturday's game proved why.

Nebraska did come away with a 66-60 victory in Ahearn Field House, improving its record to 17-3 overall and 7-1 in the conference, but the Cornhuskers did not have the easy time of it one might have expected.

And had the Lady Cats, who drop to 8-13 overall and 1-7 in the Big Eight, been able to get a little more production from their offense, K-State might have knocked off the league leaders from up north. K-State led the game at halftime, just like it did in the first meeting between the two teams in January at Lincoln, Neb., But the Lady Cats were unable to hold on in the second half.

"I think it boils down to our inability to execute on offense," said Lady Cats' coach Matilda Mossman. "We can't find that one person who will step up and be a consistent scorer. But I guess that is one of the things about having such a young team."

It appeared Mossman had found that person in the first half, as sophomore Janet Madsen scored 14 points in the first 20 minutes to help the Lady Cats to a 35-33 halftime lead. The 5-foot-9 forward scored 12 of K-State's first 18 points, as the Lady Cats built a 22-17 lead midway through the first half.

Nebraska steadily stayed close and eventually went ahead, 33-29, before the Lady Cats scored the last six points of the half. Madsen sank a 10-foot baseline jump shot from the left side with six seconds remaining to give K-State its halftime lead.

But the Cornhuskers made adjustments during the intermission, and were able to shut things off in the middle for Madsen and the other Lady Cat post players. K-State was able to muster only eight points in the first 10 minutes of the second half and found itself trailing, 48-42, with 9:00 remaining.

"I picked up two quick fouls (her third and fourth of the game) early in the half, and when I went back in I was a lot more tentative, but they (Nebraska) were really clogging things up in the middle," Madsen said.

K-State stayed close behind the efforts of freshmen Nadira Hazim and Kristie Bahner. The newcomers scored all but four of K-State's final 16 points, with Hazim bombing away from the outside and Bahner picking up the slack in the middle.

Nebraska continued to pull away and eventually built a commanding 62-52 lead before a desperate K-State rally fell short.

Even though Nebraska helped out their own cause on the defensive end, Mossman said the difference in the game was at the free-throw line.

Both teams made 11 field goals in the second half, but Nebraska was 11 of 12 from the line in the period, while K-State connected on only three of six chances.

Catholics protest homosexual discrimination

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Nearly two dozen Roman Catholic homosexuals, singing "We Shall Overcome," were arrested Sunday following a protest Mass in front of St. Patrick's Cathedral.

The demonstration was the latest in a series of protests by Dignity, an organization of homosexual Roman Catholics that has been banned from using facilities of the New York archdiocese.

A judge issued an injunction last week that barred Dignity members from demonstrating inside the cathedral, as they have done by standing during Mass on several recent Sundays. Because of the ruling, this week's demonstration was held outside despite the 15-degree temperature.

While about 50 shivering demonstrators celebrated their own version of Mass on a sidewalk across the street from the cathedral, Cardinal John J. O'Connor told worshippers inside that the church cannot alter its teachings against homosexuality.

"We have no animosity toward those who do not preach the Gospel as preached by the Catholic Church. We have no hatred," O'Connor said in his sermon. "But we cannot alter the Gospel."

At the end of their protest Mass, the demonstrators, many wearing signs reading "Another Gay Catholic" or "Another Lesbian Catholic," crossed Fifth Avenue and gathered on the sidewalk in front of the cathedral.

About two dozen of them sat down and 23 were peacefully arrested by police officers massed in front of the cathedral. They were issued summonses for disorderly conduct and released, a police spokesman said.

"Our message is in the streets, unfortunately," said one of the demonstrators, Frank Soda Jr., who was not among those arrested. "As much as we'd like to be inside, we're not welcome."

A separate group of about a half-dozen demonstrators handed out condoms outside the church to protest the church's opposition to the use of condoms to prevent the spread of AIDS.

At a news conference, O'Connor reiterated his position that homosexuals are welcome in the church but that the church will not alter its teachings regarding homosexuality.

Man shoots two, turns gun on self

By The Associated Press

HOT SPRINGS, Ark. — A man who police believe killed three people, including his father, at a family anniversary celebration died Sunday, hours after he turned the gun on himself.

Police believe 33-year-old Thomas Schrader killed his father, William Schrader, 66; older brother Steven Schrader, 38, and his own girlfriend, Celine Catalan, before shooting himself while the family celebrated his parents' 39th anniversary and his daughter's 14th birthday. No age was available for Catalan.

"We had had dinner and birthday cake and I was clearing off the table when I heard what sounded like firecrackers," the brothers' mother, Betty Schrader, told the Hot Springs Sentinel-Record after the Saturday night shootings.

Schrader died Sunday morning at AMI Hospital in Hot Springs. Police Sgt. Harold Turner said Schrader died of the self-inflicted wounds

Garland County Coroner William Mashburn said Sunday that Thomas Schrader may have been under a psychiatrist's care.

Police found several bottles of prescription medicine for Schrader in a search of the home.

Officials ordered autopsies on the four bodies.

"I knew this was going to happen," said Schrader's former wife, Kathy Schrader.

Grace Mooney, a neighbor of William Schrader, said she noticed a change in Thomas Schrader's behavior about 18 months ago.

"There's been something wrong with Tommy for awhile," she said. "He started staying in his front bedroom with the drapes closed all the time. He never came out."

"He was welcoming his girlfriend, ex-wife and daughter from Texas," said Mooney. "They were the best people I ever knew."

Another neighbor and longtime friend of the family, who asked not to be identified, said she talked to Betty Schrader shortly after the shooting.

Marijuana seized in Santo Domingo

By The Associated Press

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic — The Dominican armed forces announced on Sunday the seizure of 332 bales of Colombian marijuana believed bound for the United States.

Lt. Gen. Antonio Imbert Barrera, the armed forces minister, said officials found the marijuana following a sea chase of a Honduran-registered vessel.

The shipment "is the biggest we have confiscated," Imbert Barrera said at a news conference. He did not provide estimates of the weight and value of the bales, each of which is about 4½ feet square.

Professor to receive governor's award

By Ann Iseman
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Harold Schneider, associate professor of English, will receive the Governor's Arts Award for creative writing today during a statehouse ceremony at 3 p.m. in Topeka.

Each year the Kansas Arts Commission selects winners of the Governor's Arts Awards in the areas of creative writing, visual arts, performing arts, arts organizations and arts patrons.

The awards will be presented by Lt. Gov. Jack Walker.

Schneider has been the editor of the Kansas Quarterly literary journal for the past 18 years. During that time, Kansas Quarterly, which is edited and published at K-State, has twice been named the best fiction magazine in the United States by Writers Digest.

"The material we publish allows writers to be seen and read," Schneider said. "That is essentially what we're being recognized for."

Kansas Quarterly was also the seventh most frequently mentioned serial publication in a poll of writers, editors and scholars conducted by Literary Magazine Review.

"I'm very pleased for the Quarterly," Schneider said. "The recognition will help it become better known in-state as well as out-of-state."

Schneider insisted that although he is the one being honored at the statehouse, the award was for the Quarterly and all of its editors.

"I want to emphasize it is an award for the magazine and the editors, with me accepting for the others," he said.

The Arts Commission referred to Schneider as the editor in chief of the Quarterly, but Schneider said he is just one of the editors.

"We meet and discuss and read and work with the material," Schneider said.

The journal lists the other editors as Ben Nyberg, associate professor of English; W.R. Moses; John Rees, professor of English; and Homer Socolofsky, professor of history. Some past guest editors are Robert Kent Donovan, associate professor of history, and George Wedge.

"We also have advisory editors at KU and WSU. They all, in a sense, deserve credit," Schneider said.

Schneider said he "oversees the daily work, writing, replies, requesting of materials, and working with guest editors."

"All the time I don't spend teaching, I spend on the Quarterly," said Schneider, who is teaching two courses this semester.

The award letter Schneider received three weeks ago thanked him for his "devotion to the highest standards of excellence and dedication to providing publishing opportunities to which Kansas writers can aspire."

Schneider said the journal is two years behind on publishing and has to reject at least three times the amount of writing that it accepts.

"We can't publish everything that is publishable," Schneider said, as he sat in his Densison Hall office, surrounded by boxes and piles of manuscripts.

Schneider's desk and shelves were also piled high with books, including "Open to Language," "Fiction International," "Classics of Modern Fiction," and "The Short Story."

Although the Quarterly focuses on the culture, history, lifestyle, art and writing of mid-America, it is not restricted to that.

"We want to publish Kansas writers, but we receive and publish manuscripts from all over the United States," Schneider said. "At least 35 of the 50 states have contributions in any one year. We also receive some foreign work."

"Our Kansas writers are just as good as other writers," he said.

According to the Kansas Arts Commission press release, Schneider was selected as the 1988 Governor's Award for creative writing because of his "contribution to the excellence and growth of the arts in Kansas.

"By maintaining high editorial standards and seeking financial stability, Professor Schneider has guided Kansas Quarterly to a place of honor among small presses while providing an opportunity for writers across Kansas and the United States," the release said.

Although the first goal of the Quarterly is to publish and review poetry and other works of fiction and history, Schneider has also had to maintain the financial stability of the journal.

"We are very grateful to the Manhattan Mercury and The Wichita Eagle-Beacon for noticing and reviewing the Quarterly," Schneider said. "We depend on recognition."

"The Quarterly began its fourth life in 1933 at K-State when members of the journalism department started it," Schneider said.

Sailing club raises funds with sandcastles

Staff/Brad Camp

Janna Petry, Manhattan, attempts to blow a boat down a 6-foot trough filled with beer during the K-State Sailing Club's sixth annual beach party fund-raiser at Charlie's Neighborhood Bar Saturday night.

By Jeff Stead
Collegian Reporter

A beach party with a sandcastle-building contest and boat races isn't exactly what could be expected as entertainment in Kansas on a freezing February night.

But that's exactly what the K-State Sailing Club did to raise funds Saturday.

About 300 people attended the club's sixth annual beach party, which raised about $200, said Brad Stowe, senior in marketing and commander of the sailing club.

Money from the fund-raiser will help pay for equipment maintenance and to pay dues in three different sailing organizations the club is affiliated with, Stowe said.

The club pays about $300 a year for storage alone, he said.

The fund-raiser included entertainment by two local bands, raffle tickets, contests for the best and worst tans and sandcastle building.

For the castle-building contest, competitors were each given a little beach — a tub of sand. Contestants could also participate in an indoor boat race by blowing their miniature sailboats down a 6-foot trough.

For a 50-cent donation, the club offered a chance to win a champagne cruise for two on Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

Stowe said he was "more than happy" with the results from Saturday night's activity; however, the money raised won't last long because of the expense of marine equipment.

"We need all the help we can get," he said. "We also accept donations if anybody wants to donate boats — that's how we've acquired most of our boats."

The sailing club, which currently has 30 members, was established in 1983 to teach sailing and to sponsor an intercollegiate racing team.

The club's members compete nationally through the Central State Sailing Association and the Southeastern Intercollegiate Sailing Association.

The season starts in early April and continues through the summer, Stowe said.

The club races the University of Kansas twice every year and also races in Oklahoma and Texas. In May, the K-State and KU sailing clubs take a cruise together in the Bahamas, he said.

"We are really interested in building our racing team. We've lost a lot of people through graduation and we need to get in touch with anyone who is interested in racing," Stowe said.

The sailing club is open to everyone affiliated with the University, whether they know how to sail or not.

"We're really big on teaching people how to sail. You don't have to know how to sail to join the club," he said.

Dues for the club are $20 for the academic year and $30 for the summer.

politically biased prosecutors than fact-finders.

"The thrust I would describe as by and large an intent to push up complicity, guilt, as high up the executive branch as possible, hopefully toward the presidency," Scowcroft said.

Culvahouse said the committee suppressed testimony from former National Security Adviser John Poindexter, who admitted not telling Reagan of the secret diversion of funds to the Contra rebels fighting Nicaragua's Sandinista government.

Poindexter's admission was not disclosed to the public until the televised congressional hearings in July — a month and a half after it was obtained, Culvahouse said. The public first became aware of the scandal in November 1986.

Poindexter was fired for his role in coordinating private supply efforts for the Contras from 1984 to 1986, during which time Congress had banned U.S. aid. He and his associates secretly diverted to the Contras money from the sale of U.S.-made weapons to Iran.

U.S. Senator George Mitchell, D-Maine, a member of the congressional panel, agreed that the committee failed to "get anywhere near the real story," but said it was hampered by the death of CIA Director William Casey.

"I cannot recall an aggregation of witnesses with as faulty memories as occurred in these hearings," he said.

treaties banning interference in the internal affairs of other nations in the region.

"That's the framework now and it's a very good framework," Dukakis said. "We have signed and ratified those treaties. We are violating the terms of those documents."

Pressed as to the conditions under which he would tolerate a Soviet client state in Central America, Dukakis said:"If you're talking about the introduction of offensive weapons from the Soviet Union, we have every right ... to take action against that.

"If they introduced offensive military weapons, then of course we would take action and we have every right to do so," Dukakis said.

The presidential campaign also swung into Iowa's churches on Sunday, as New York Rep. Jack Kemp sought support in fundamentalist churches, making it clear he's not conceding the evangelical Christian vote to former television evangelist Pat Robertson. Both are courting conservatives and hoping for a third-place finish in Monday's straw vote of GOP activists.

In other campaign action:

■ Former Delaware Gov. Pete du Pont joined in an indoor minature golf tournament that snaked its way through a skywalk system linking buildings in downtown Des Moines.

■ Simon, interviewed on the ABC program, defended his proposals for new spending programs and a balanced-budget amendment.

Love confession from an anthemaniac.

As you know, anthemaniacs like myself just go crazy around flowers. So what does my Valentine send me on Valentine's Day? The FTD® Love Note Bouquet!

Well, let me tell you, when I saw those beautiful flowers in that fine porcelain bowl it drove me wild.

Besides, this glorious bouquet also came with a note pad and pencil with which I've written my Valentine every day.

And smart Valentines know it doesn't cost much to send us anthemaniacs into this flower frenzy. Just ask your florist to have FTD send one for you.

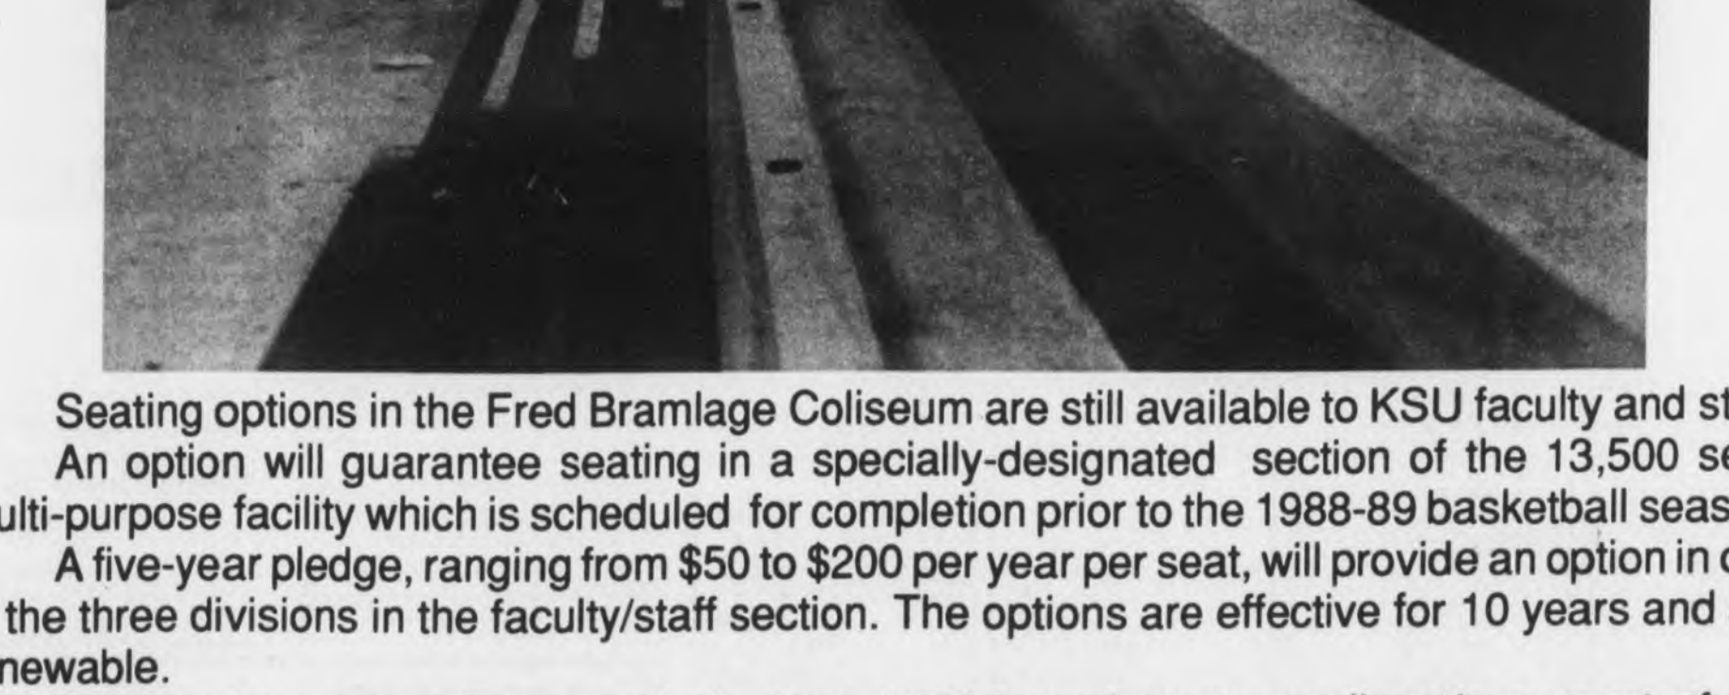
FACULTY/STAFF OPTIONS FOR THE BRAMLAGE COLISEUM



Seating options in the Fred Bramlage Coliseum are still available to KSU faculty and staff.

An option will guarantee seating in a specially-designated section of the 13,500 seat, multi-purpose facility which is scheduled for completion prior to the 1988-89 basketball season.

A five-year pledge, ranging from $50 to $200 per year per seat, will provide an option in one of the three divisions in the faculty/staff section. The options are effective for 10 years and are renewable.

Seat assignments will be made in June 1988 based on an applicant's support of the Coliseum Capital Campaign, support of the athletic department, and number of years season basketball tickets have been purchased.

Options payments must be 80% fulfilled prior to seat assignment and 100% complete by December 1988.

For more information, contact Dotti Downey at the KSU Foundation, 532-7151.

Dole, Gephardt win

Iowa caucus offers surprise

By The Associated Press

DES MOINES, Iowa — Sen. Bob Dole scored a convincing triumph in Iowa's Republican presidential caucuses Monday night while Pat Robertson dropped a faltering Vice President George Bush into third place. Rep. Richard Gephardt claimed victory over Sen. Paul Simon in a tight Democratic race.

With 69 percent of the Democratic caucuses reporting in the first big test of the 1988 presidential campaign, Gephardt, of Missouri, had 27 percent of the total and led in the separate vote to apportion Iowa delegates to the national nominating convention.

Simon, of Illinois, had 24 percent and Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis had 21 percent.

At the back of the pack, Gary Hart's comeback bid failed dramatically. He had scarcely 1 percent of the total in the state that catapulted him to national prominence in 1984.

The GOP returns were almost complete, with Dole at 37 percent, Robertson 25 percent and Bush at 19 percent.

Bush, the national front-runner as the evening began, conceded defeat and vowed to work harder in New Hampshire's lead-off primary next week. "I'm a fighter ... I'm not going to be slinking around," he said.

Dole's aides crowed about the magnitude of the vice president's embarrassment. "I think it mortally wounds him," said Sen. Chuck Grassley of Iowa, who campaigned extensively for the winner.

Dole, who urged Iowans to regard him as "one of us," said he hoped his win would help him in New Hampshire, where he has picked up strength in a fresh public opinion survey released by ABC.

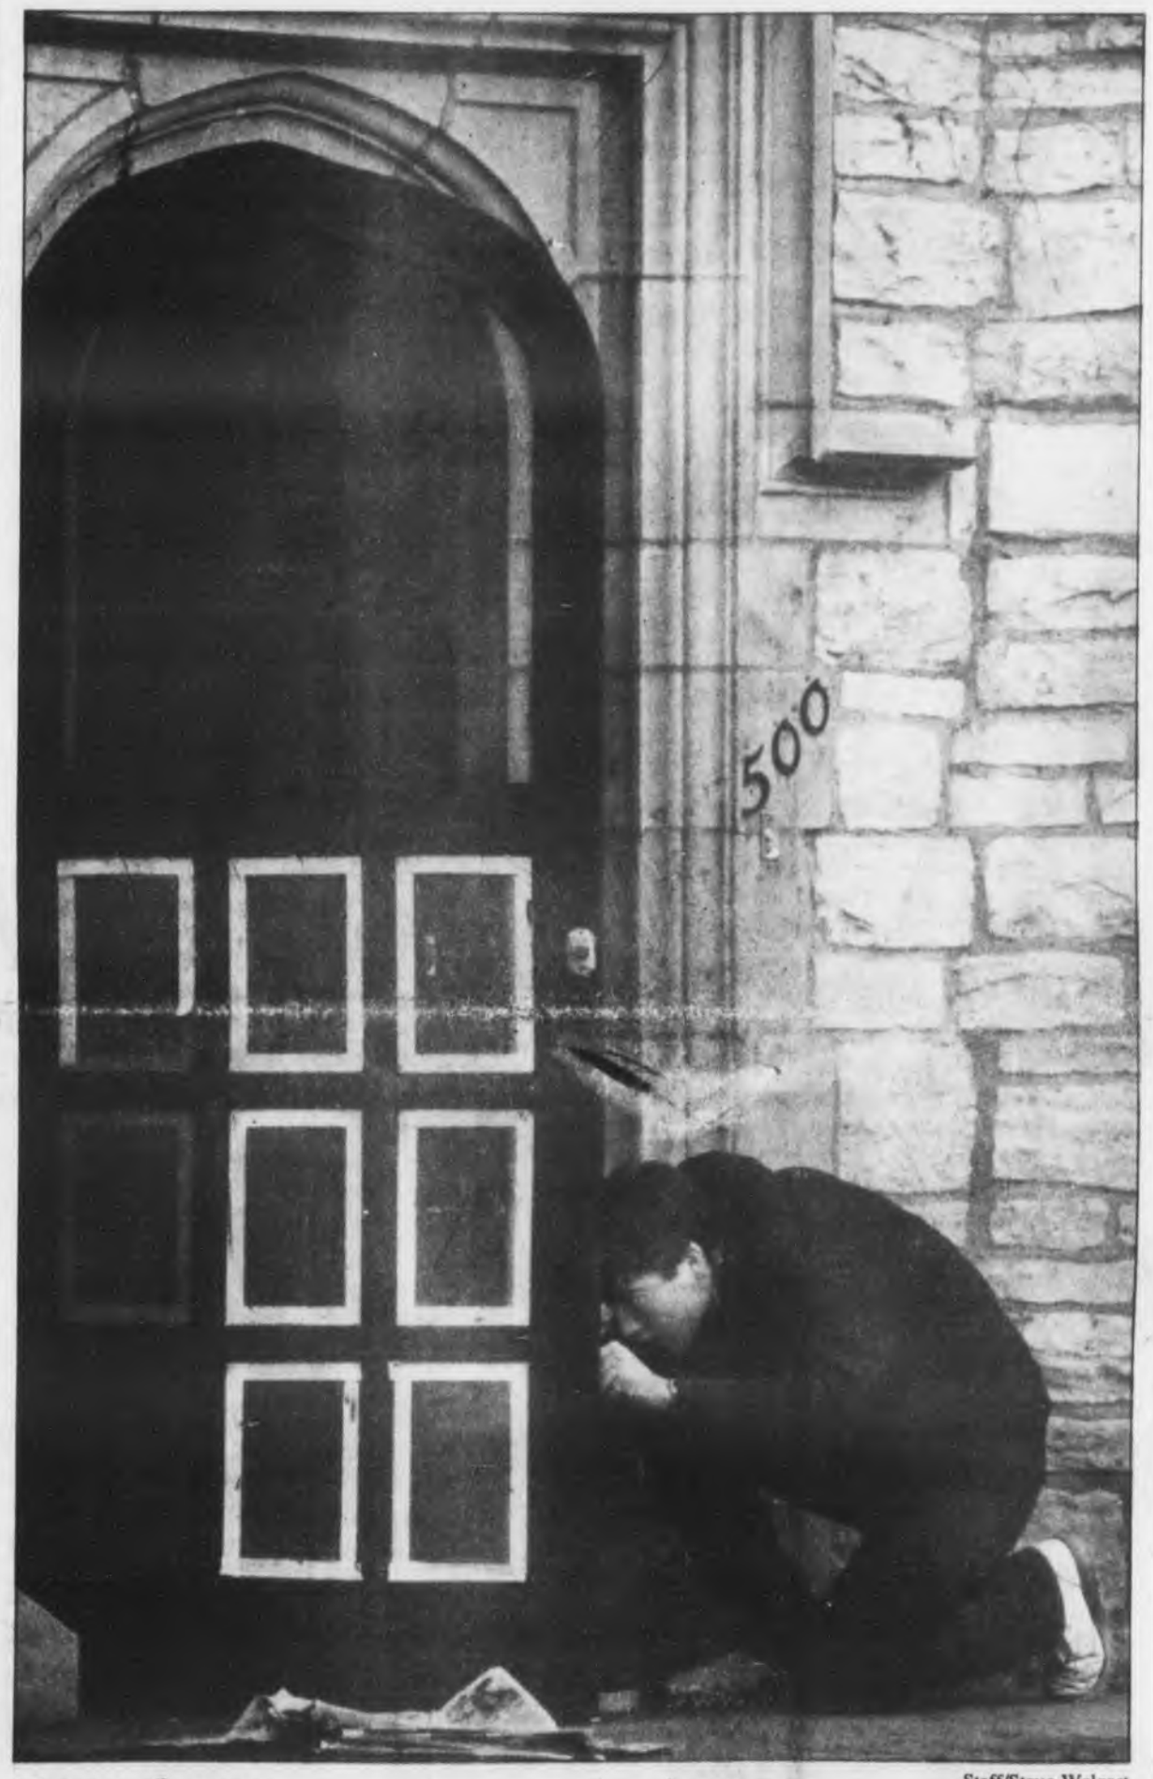
Dole's double-digit margin in Iowa was roughly in line with the pre-caucus polls — but the same polls showed Bush finishing ahead of Robertson.

The former television evangelist said his showing was a victory for voters "who wanted us to restore the greatness of America through moral strength." A CBS survey said more than a third of the Republican caucus participants identified themselves as fundamental or evangelical Christians and half of them favored Robertson.

As Dole and Bush indicated, the final votes hadn't even been counted before the contenders turned their eyes toward next week's test in New Hampshire.

Bush and Dukakis lead handily in polls there — but Dole's aides said the Republican numbers would shift dramatically — and quickly. If history is a guide, the same will be true for the Democrats.

With 97 percent of the Republican precincts reporting, Dole had 39,923 votes, or 37 percent. Robertson had 26,230 for 25 percent and Bush — the nationwide front-runner who scored a dramatic triumph in Iowa's caucuses in 1980 — had 19,827, or 19 percent.



The rest of the Republican field trailed far behind — Jack Kemp with 11 percent, Pete du Pont with 7 percent and Alexander Haig, who didn't compete, had a smattering of support.

The Democratic vote was slower to tally, but with 70 percent of the caucuses reporting, Gephardt had 24,058 votes for 27 percent. Simon had 21,333 for 24 percent and Dukakis had 17,990 for 21 percent.

Jesse Jackson was winning the battle for fourth place, with 9,042 votes and 11 percent to 7,510 and 9 percent for former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt. Sen. Albert Gore Jr., had abandoned his Iowa campaign and criticized the process here. He was running behind even non-candidate Mario Cuomo, 221 votes to 174. Six percent were uncommitted.

Hart had 835 votes and pronounced himself "disappointed but not discouraged." He said his sixth place finish

Pornographic 'message' addressed in discussion

By Lori Ingmire
Collegian Reporter

Sex shops outnumber McDonald's restaurants 4-to-1 in the United States and contribute to the $8 billion per year pornography industry.

Pornography was addressed Monday afternoon in a discussion titled "Pornography, Sex and Society" led by Sandra Coyner, director of Women's Studies. The discussion marked the beginning of "Susan B. Anthony Awareness Week." Sponsored by the Women's Resource Center, the week's activities are designed to raise awareness of the issues surrounding violence against women.

"Pornography has a gender-specific message," Coyner said. "It directly involves women and relays the message that men can turn on women with violence."

Coyner said two distribution networks of pornography exist — the mainstream and the semi-underground.

The mainstream network includes such publications as Playboy and Penthouse, in addition to X-rated movies. Coyner said people do not show as much concern for this network compared to semi-underground operations.

The semi-underground network encompasses different types of pornography, with each being highly specialized. Examples of this network include publications dealing with only one concept or group, Coyner said, citing as examples bestiality, sado-masochism, pregnant women and black women.

"You won't know anything about this semi-underground network unless you look for it," Coyner said. "It is so sleazy that most publishers don't want everyone to know."

The two distribution networks and pornography in general have expanded dramatically in the last 20 years, Coyner said. A change in content has occurred with women and children subjected to more violence. Currently, violence dominates the semi-underground network and is present in the above-ground network.

Coyner cited recent studies which reported that in films, violence — not sex — prompted negative perceptions of women.

"After seeing certain films, men were more callous toward women and violence," she said. "That is, the viewer was desensitized against violence toward women."

Coyner cited four voices being heard on pornography today. The first is the pornographers, who run the operations and make the money. This group, including such individuals as Hugh Hefner, believes its work indicates sexual liberation for women.

The second group is the American Civil Liberties Union. The ACLU believes the First Amendment protects free speech. Its views do not support censorship of any kind.

The third and fourth groups are anti-pornography groups — the religious right and feminists opposed to violence. The religious right wants all pornography censored, while feminist groups are making efforts to raise consciousness on the violence issue.

Although all women are affected by pornography, Coyner said those who work in the porn industry are the most victimized. She used Linda Lovelace, star of the semi-underground film "Deepthroat," as an example.

In an autobiography, the retired porn star revealed she had done the film against her own will. She said she was physically coerced into doing the film through drugs, imprisonment and beatings.

Arms race lecture tonight

By The Collegian Staff

The arms race and its influence on international politics will be the topic of tonight's Lou Douglas lecture at 7:30 in Forum Hall.

Richard Rhodes, author of the book "The Making of the Atomic Bomb," will discuss "The Arms Race, the Background of Hope."

Tonight's lecture will center on how the arms race has forced nations to negotiate for world peace and how the threat of the atomic bomb forces nations to peacefully coexist.

Rhodes' book, a history of the atomic bomb's creation, has won the National Non-Fiction Book Award, the National Book Critics Circle general non-fiction award, and has been nominated for the Pulitzer Prize.

Rhodes has also written non-fiction and fiction books and articles for Harpers, Atlantic, Esquire and Playboy magazines.

An interview with Rhodes before the lecture will be broadcast on KSDB-FM, KKSU-AM and KMAN-AM radio stations at 9:30 a.m.

Following the lecture, there will be an open reception in the Union Key Room sponsored by graduate students in English.

Black student enrollment up 18 over 1987

By Vince Huser
Collegian Reporter

Although the number of black students at K-State only increased slightly last year, the University was the only one of the seven regents schools to note an increase.

Based on fall 1987 enrollment figures, K-State's black student enrollment increased by 18 while Emporia State University, Fort Hays State University, the University of Kansas, Pittsburg State University and The Wichita State University all reported decreases.

However, Wichita State officials have said that they expect their decrease to turn around this semester.

K-State's black student population increased from 426 to 444 during the period of 1986 to 1987. Blacks make up 2.5 percent of the student body population at K-State, an increase of less than 0.1 of 1 percent.

Hakim Salahu-Din, assistant director of admissions, is responsible for much of the minority student recruitment for K-State.

"Black student enrollment is a serious concern across the nation. Enrollment is dropping across the nation. K-State is just basically holding its own," Salahu-Din said.

According to a story in The Wichita Eagle-Beacon, from 1976 to 1984 the number of blacks on American college campuses decreased from 9.4 percent of all students to 8.8 percent. During the same period, Hispanic, Asian American and American Indian student enrollments stayed steady or rose, according to the latest figures compiled by the National Center for Education statistics.

Institutions are currently facing tremendous obstacles in minority enrollment, Salahu-Din said.

"The political climate right now and the economic climate are causing a lot of belt-tightening right now," he said.

Veryl Switzer, assistant vice president for minority affairs, said there are a variety of reasons for the national decrease.

"There are a multitude of reasons for the lack of an adequate recruitment pool for minorities, particulary black students. Finances are certainly a major barrier," he said.

To reach a larger number of prospective minority students in Kansas, K-State's recruitment projects and activities attempt to increase not only black enrollment, but the overall minority enrollment.

In 1987 the Office of Admissions sent out more than 5,000 informational items to prospective minority students answering questions about K-State.

In addition, more than 625 minority students visited K-State in 1987 through visitation programs set up by the Office of Admissions.

"Just during the Martin Luther King convocation (this year), (K-State) had 110 black students on campus," Salahu-Din said.

Group visits allow prospective students to see the campus and to experience the University's setting.

The K-State Way, a minority student newsletter, is sent to prospective minority students. The newsletter discusses issues that ethnic minority students face at K-State.

The Office of Admissions also sends out Alliance, a K-State student ethnic newspaper used for recruiting minority students.

Mudslides, floods kill 161

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil — Torrential rains hindered rescue efforts Monday in southeastern Brazil, where six days of mudslides and floods killed more than 161 people and left more than 6,000 homeless.

Hardest hit by the flooding was the wealthy mountain resort city of Petropolis, 40 miles north of Rio. Civil defense spokesman Bruno Ruy Avila said at least 141 people died and more than 2,000 were made homeless in that city of 300,000 people.

At least 20 were killed elsewhere in the state, and more than 4,000 lost their homes, Avila said.

Branches of the International Red Cross in France, Switzerland and Canada sent telegrams to the Brazilian government offering to send special emergency crews and supplies, according to TV Globo, Brazil's largest private network.

Products inspected for radiation

WASHINGTON — The government has ordered inspections of beer, soft drinks, baby formula and dental and cosmetic products from more than a dozen plants across the country because of possible radiation contamination, officials said Monday.

Production was briefly halted over the weekend at several Coca Cola plants but they were reopened after no contamination was found in product samples, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and officials for the company said.

Similar surveying was under way at Anhauser-Busch breweries in St. Louis and Jacksonville, Fla., and at an Abbott Laboratories-owned baby formula plant in Arizona, an Avon cosmetics plant in Illinois and a dental products plant in New Jersey.

NRC and Food and Drug Administration officials emphasized that no contamination has been found so far in examinations of the products at any of those plants.

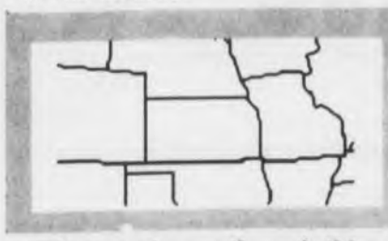
Peace negotiations postponed

MIAMI — Leaders of the Nicaraguan opposition announced Monday they have postponed scheduled negotiations with the ruling Sandinistas, saying last week's congressional defeat of a Contra aid package had undermined the peace process.

The rebels pledged to continue their opposition to the Nicaraguan government with the help of private funds to be raised by two Washington-based foundations.

The decision will cost lives by prolonging the violence, Nicaragua's Sandinista government said.

Paramedics fail to save woman



PITTSBURGH — A 65-year-old woman died of a heart attack after paramedics based just a mile from her house got lost and took a half-hour to reach her, authorities said.

Pittsburgh's emergency system came under fire last week when a woman was raped after police, responding to her frantic 911 call, searched only the outside of her home for a burglar and then left. While the officers searched, the woman was being held at knifepoint in the house.

Ronald Taylor said his mother, Elvira, was dead by the time paramedics arrived at her home Friday.

Robert Kennedy, chief of Emergency Medical Services, said an investigation is under way.

"There was certainly a problem with this call," Kennedy said. "We can't say the woman would still be alive if we had gotten there sooner. ...That's open to speculation. This is certainly not our usual response time, and we consider this to be highly out of the ordinary."

Piggyback-riding monkey dies

AMAZONIA, Mo. — Molly Bee, a piggyback-riding monkey that became somewhat of a legend in northwest Missouri, is dead — apparently the victim of old age.

Molly Bee was found dead in a field about two weeks ago, said Fabian Cobb, who provided a home for the 40-pound female rhesus monkey for about 15 years before his family sold its hogs last year.

The monkey eventually wandered to the nearby farm of Marvin Holiman, where there were pigs and other livestock. That's where she died.

Molly Bee arrived mysteriously in the fall of 1965 at the Amazonia apple storage shed. She promptly adopted the pig population in the area — cavorting in livestock pens on the backs of pigs and other animals — but had little to do with humans.

Cobb said he believes Molly Bee originally hitched a ride to Amazonia in an apple hauling truck.

Law students to help Cubans

LEAVENWORTH — With law students at their side, Cuban detainees at a federal penitentiary began facing reviews Monday that could set them on the road to freedom or return them to the homeland they had fled.

More than 100 law students, from the University of Kansas at Lawrence, Washburn University in Topeka and the University of Missouri-Kansas City, have volunteered to represent the Cubans before panels of officials from the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

The panels will recommend to the INS office in Washington whether the detainees should be released, remain in prison or be repatriated, officials said.

About 370 Cubans who were transferred to the U.S. Penitentiary at Leavenworth from riot-torn prisons in Atlanta and Oakdale, La., will appear individually before panels of two INS officials.

Temporary repair planned for Hollis House

By Brian Hummell
Collegian Reporter

Hollis House has a leaking roof.

But since the University plans to raze the building in about four years for Throckmorton Hall's expansion, funding is scarce for its permanent repair, said Paul Watson, director of buildings and utilities.

It was a maintenance decision not to spend $6,000 to $9,000 on a new roof that would last about 20 years — longer than needed, he said.

However, plans are in the works for a temporary fix.

The University is considering placing a foam roof on Hollis House that would be cheaper than a new roof if the contractor allows the University to provide some of the labor, he said.

"I'm not real thrilled about the foam roof," said Christine Johnston, director for alumni administration and finance. "I just hope we get a tight roof for as long as we are here. I understand (Watson's) problem with the budget."

The leaking occurs after heavy snow begins to melt on the flat deck portion of the roof. The water drops into the records room, where about 10 people work.

The records area deals with updating the current status of alumni. So far, the only damage from the leak is to the ceiling tiles.

"It's bad, but not that bad. There's another department building with 12 buckets hanging from the ceiling," Watson said. He refused to name the second building.

Johnston, who has worked at Hollis House for 4½ years, said the leak is "a chronic problem."

"It's a nuisance," she said. "There is some shifting of people because of it."

Buckets and plastic are placed across the floor and on desks to catch the water from the leaks.

But Karen Jones, keyboard operator II, said the worst problem with the roof's leak is that it causes the building to smell.

"When it gets warm the smell is really rank," she said. "The smell goes throughout the building; it's kind of a musty mildewy smell."

Watson said he has people working on the roof almost every day, but his top priority is work on academic buildings, not service buildings.

The KSU Foundation and the Alumni Association are located in Hollis House.

"If (the Foundation and the Alumni Association) would provide the money for the materials, we would provide the labor," Watson said.

But Johnston said since Hollis House is a state-owned building, she believes the Alumni Association would only pay part of the cost of repair as a last resort.

"It's an interesting proposal, but we're not sure if we're in a position to do that," she said.

Senate has excess money

$92,000 plus held in unused funds

By Chris Doll
Special Projects Editor

Student Senate has $92,467.22 for which it has no immediate plans.

Senate receives $32.90 from each full-time student every semester. That, along with money left over from other years and investments, has bolstered its reserve funds.

The money is kept in five accounts:

- $1,820.62 is in the long-standing projects account.
- $5,540.69 is in an account set aside for equipment purchases.
- $12,163.91 is in a contingency account that has been left over from other years or is unallocated money.
- $18,942 is in an account with the KSU Foundation which draws interest.
- $54,000 in interest is in an account at the Foundation. A total of $116,000 was generated from refinancing bonds in fall 1985. The $116,000 cannot be used, but the interest money can. However, Senate cannot allocate any part of the $54,000 unless the project meets requirements it set in November 1986.

Reserves must be kept by Senate for insurance against unplanned costs, said Sally Routson, coordinator of student activities.

Routson said she would like the $54,000 to go to a special project.

"You don't want it nickeled and dimed to death before you can do a big project," she said. "So I don't advertise it much."

So far, no one has requested any part of the $54,000 that meets the Senate's guidelines. The criteria include:

- The group requesting the money has demonstrated that alternative sources of funding are unavailable.
- The project must be student-oriented.
- The expense is not a recurring one.
- The project will provide a long-term benefit to the University.
- The project does not duplicate another project on campus.
- The project is not the responsibility of the State of Kansas.
- The project is feasible.
- Money cannot be requested prior to its availability.

"The Senate's attitude has been, 'You need to get as much as you can on your own, then come to us,'" Routson said.

Of the $32.90 fee full-time students pay each semester, $17 is allocated to the Union; $4.80 goes to Student Publications Inc.; $2.50 is for recreational services; 85 cents goes to KSDB-FM; and the remaining $7.75 is used for funding student activity groups.

For the 1987-88 school year, Senate allocated $260,097.72 to more than 25 student-oriented groups. In March, the Senate Finance Committee will begin hearing requests for next year's allocations.

At K-State, enrollment usually drops 8 percent in the spring semester. This year, however, it increased by 800 students, so Senate will have more money to work with.

But the increase in money does not mean the groups requesting money from Senate will receive more money. Senate must support the objective of the program, said Mark Burns, finance coordinator and junior in finance.

"It is up to Senate. If the money is justified, then obviously (the group) will get their money," he said. "But it won't be a situation this year where we have to cut a budget even though we think it is a good program."

Afghans prepare for Soviet exit

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Mikhail S. Gorbachev said Monday that the Kremlin would begin pulling its troops out of Afghanistan on May 15 and complete the withdrawal within 10 months if U.N.-brokered talks on the conflict reach a settlement.

Gorbachev also said his country wants no say in who governs Afghanistan or its politics after the estimated 115,000 Soviet troops battling Afghan guerrillas come home.

"The Afghans themselves will decide the final status of their country among nations," Gorbachev said. Afghanistan's future "is none of our business," he said.

Gorbachev's remarks left the future of Afghanistan's Marxist president, Najib, in serious doubt. Foreign observers believe Najib, 41, won't be able to retain his grip on power if he is deprived of Soviet military might.

Najib also went on radio and television in Afghanistan to announce the timetable for Soviet withdrawal.

"If the Geneva talks have positive results, the limited Soviet forces will return to their country on May 15, 1988," Najib said on Radio Kabul in a broadcast monitored in Islamabad, Pakistan. "Of course it will be completed within 10 months."

The Soviet leader's statements were the clearest indication yet that he is moving rapidly to extricate his country from the conflict he has termed a "bleeding wound."

The Kremlin sent troops, tanks and military hardware into Afghanistan on Dec. 27, 1979, and presided over the replacement of one Marxist ruler by another.

The invasion has been a major irritant in Soviet relations with the United States and has soured Kremlin relations with many Moslem and Third World countries.

It also has been opposed at home as Soviet casualties have mounted. Western diplomats estimate as many as 10,000 Soviet soldiers have been killed in the war and that tens of thousands have been maimed. The cost of the Soviet involvement is thought to total billions of rubles.

Monday's statement was the first mention by Gorbachev of a specific date for the withdrawal of the Red Army units in Afghanistan to prop up Najib's government against a widespread insurgency.

Gorbachev said the date of May 15 was fixed for the beginning of the Soviet pullout based on the assumption that U.N.-sponsored negotiations in Geneva will reach an agreement no later than March 15.

Soviet television interrupted a serial film of Mikhail Sholokhov's "And Quiet Flows The Don," to broadcast Gorbachev's statement, assuring that his remarks would have the widest distribution.

Palestinians protest boy's death

Fighting follows funeral; soldiers blamed for killing

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — A Gaza Strip teen-ager was beaten to death, and crowds of Palestinians fought with Israeli soldiers after his funeral Monday.

Relatives and U.N. officials said soldiers beat 15-year-old Iyad Mohammed Aql to death. Israeli gunfire wounded 10 people in the occupied territories, hospitals reported.

An Army spokesman confirmed Aql died of head injuries soon after midnight, but said an investigation showed he was not beaten by soldiers. He said the cause of the injuries was not clear.

Soldiers had 11 Arab towns and refugee camps in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip under curfew Monday, confining 245,000 people to their homes. About 1.5 million Palestinians live in the territories, which Israel captured from Jordan and Egypt in the 1967 Middle East war.

Arab riots began Dec. 8 and 49 Palestinians have died at the hands of Israelis, according to U.N. figures, nearly all of them shot by soldiers.

In Arab east Jerusalem, riot police commandeered a Palestinian bread delivery van and used it to advance on rock-throwing Arabs in the Silwan neighborhood as they flung tear gas canisters.

Soldiers opened fire on Arabs who rioted after Aql's funeral in the Bureij refugee camp, wounding an 11-year-old girl and a 15-year-old boy, an army spokesman reported. He said the army was checking reports of wounded elsewhere in the occupied territories.

Officials at the Ahli Arab hospital in Gaza City said soldiers wounded two other Arabs when the protest spread to neighboring Nuseirat camp.

The army said it was investigating the death of a 23-year-old Palestinian who was shot in the head at Kafr Qaddum near Nablus in the the West Bank.

A military spokesman said soldiers discovered the 23-year-old in a taxi they stopped at a checkpoint.

Procedure for tenure stresses wrong areas

In the beginning, tenure for faculty members offered a mechanism to protect them from the fickle winds of public opinion and the firings that sometimes resulted. Tenure allowed the faculty members to teach less popular or more controversial ideas without the fear of retribution. It was granted on the basis of teaching ability and performance.

Today the decision to grant tenure seems to be based more on brownie points than ability.

Actually, receiving tenure today is based primarily on four criteria: teaching, scholarly activity, research and community service, according to K-State Provost James Coffman.

What might seem like four very appropriate areas to base such a decision could turn into a nightmare for some faculty. This includes the "publish or perish" syndrome experienced in some departments.

In other areas it could come down to being a member of the right club or service organization, or even taking the right committee assignment whether one likes it or not.

How much could meeting these criteria really tell us about the skills of any faculty members? The only thing indicated by three of the four areas — not including teaching — is the faculty members' willingness to meet the expectations of their peers in places outside of the classroom.

Tenure was originally meant to protect those teaching; it seems this intent is being overshadowed by other factors. While it is true that outside activities and achievements do contribute to the development of the professional teacher, they should not weigh as heavily in the decision-making process as teaching skills.

It is time that more attention be paid to what makes these professionals valuable to the University — their abilities as teachers. Those who are exemplary should be awarded with tenure and students should not be burdened with those who may fill the bill in other areas, but who are not capable educators.

U.S. learns defectors carry premium price

Defectors don't come cheaply these days.

According to a report by the Los Angeles Times/Washington Post news service, the federal government will pay $800,000 in stipends, rewards and consultant fees to defector Roger Miranda Bengoechea, a former high-level aide to Nicaraguan Defense Minister Humberto Ortega.

It is the largest amount ever paid by the United States to a defector.

Since his defection, Bengoechea has conducted news conferences, interviews and lectures on behalf of the U.S. policy toward the Sandinista regime in Nicaragua.

But compared with what the United States paid Arkady Shevchenko, $800,000 doesn't seem to be buying much of a bargain.

In the mid-1970s, United Nations Deputy Secretary General Shevchenko defected to the United States. Prior to his U.N. service, Shevchenko had been a high-level aide to Soviet President Andrei Gromyko. At the time of Shevchenko's defection, Gromyko was Soviet foreign minister.

In the 18 months before Shevchenko left the Soviet intelligence-gathering apparatus, which is the Russian mission to the United Nations, he spied for the United States at great risk to his own survival.

After his defection, Shevchenko's wife was bundled off to Moscow. She was later reported to have committed suicide after returning to the Soviet Union.

Shevchenko wrote in his memoirs that his wife's fall from a building window was facilitated by the KGB.

The United States gave no money to Shevchenko immediately after his defection. Shevchenko had to rely on the kindness of strangers for the first few years after he crossed the Iron Curtain.

Now, Shevchenko is receiving stipends and consultant's fees. It is estimated that he will receive $600,000 from the federal government during his lifetime.

Shevchenko does not spend his time traveling the United States trying to convince Americans that the Soviet Union is a threat to our country.

He doesn't have to. Most Americans believe Russia is an enemy that must be contained.

But, according to opinion polls, most Americans do not think of Nicaragua as a big enough threat over which to wage a war of proxies.

And, given the small strategic threat Nicaragua poses to the United States, it would seem the cost of personnel and equipment now in place to spy on that Central American nation would be a big enough investment without hiring a traitor.

On the other hand, it may be just the right price to pay for someone — who claims to have inside knowledge of Nicaragua's intentions — who will spend his time reviling the Sandinistas for their "expansionist and inhumane" policies.

It still seems a high price for a salesman.

Explaining 'non-coverage'

Barriers impede paper's reporting

Commentary

JUDY LUNDSTROM
Editor

I'm about to do something that I was hoping I wouldn't have to do this semester.

It's something that, as an editor, I would just as soon not do.

I'm responding to a letter to the editor — only because it's something I feel strongly about, and I think it's time to set a portion of the campus community straight.

A letter in Monday's Collegian voiced a complaint about the paper's "non-coverage" of certain campus groups and events. Which is fine. People are entitled to their opinions, and feedback is an essential tool for running a quality newspaper. As editor, I have quickly learned that you can't please everyone, no matter how hard you try.

So I try to find a happy medium between the complaints a few days ago that say we are giving too much coverage to the debate squad and the latest complaint that we are ignoring the group entirely. Or between the ones who say we are running too many national and international stories and those who say we need more.

A survey last semester showed us that 52 percent of our readers relied on the Collegian as their only news source. For that reason, our priorities should be not only in covering campus issues, but important regional, national and international issues, too. Sometimes, a decision must be made as to what deserves more coverage. Unfortunately, that decision cannot be favorable to everyone.

An area that I will agree needs more coverage, however, is campus crime. As a service to our readers, the Collegian has begun running a daily Police Roundup, containing reports from the Public Information Log of the K-State Police department.

Interesting, isn't it? But I'm surprised that our readers haven't yet complained about the lack of information in these reports. The reason for this is because of something called the Buckley Amendment — a federal law that denies government funding to institutions that fail to restrict access to educational records to students and their parents.

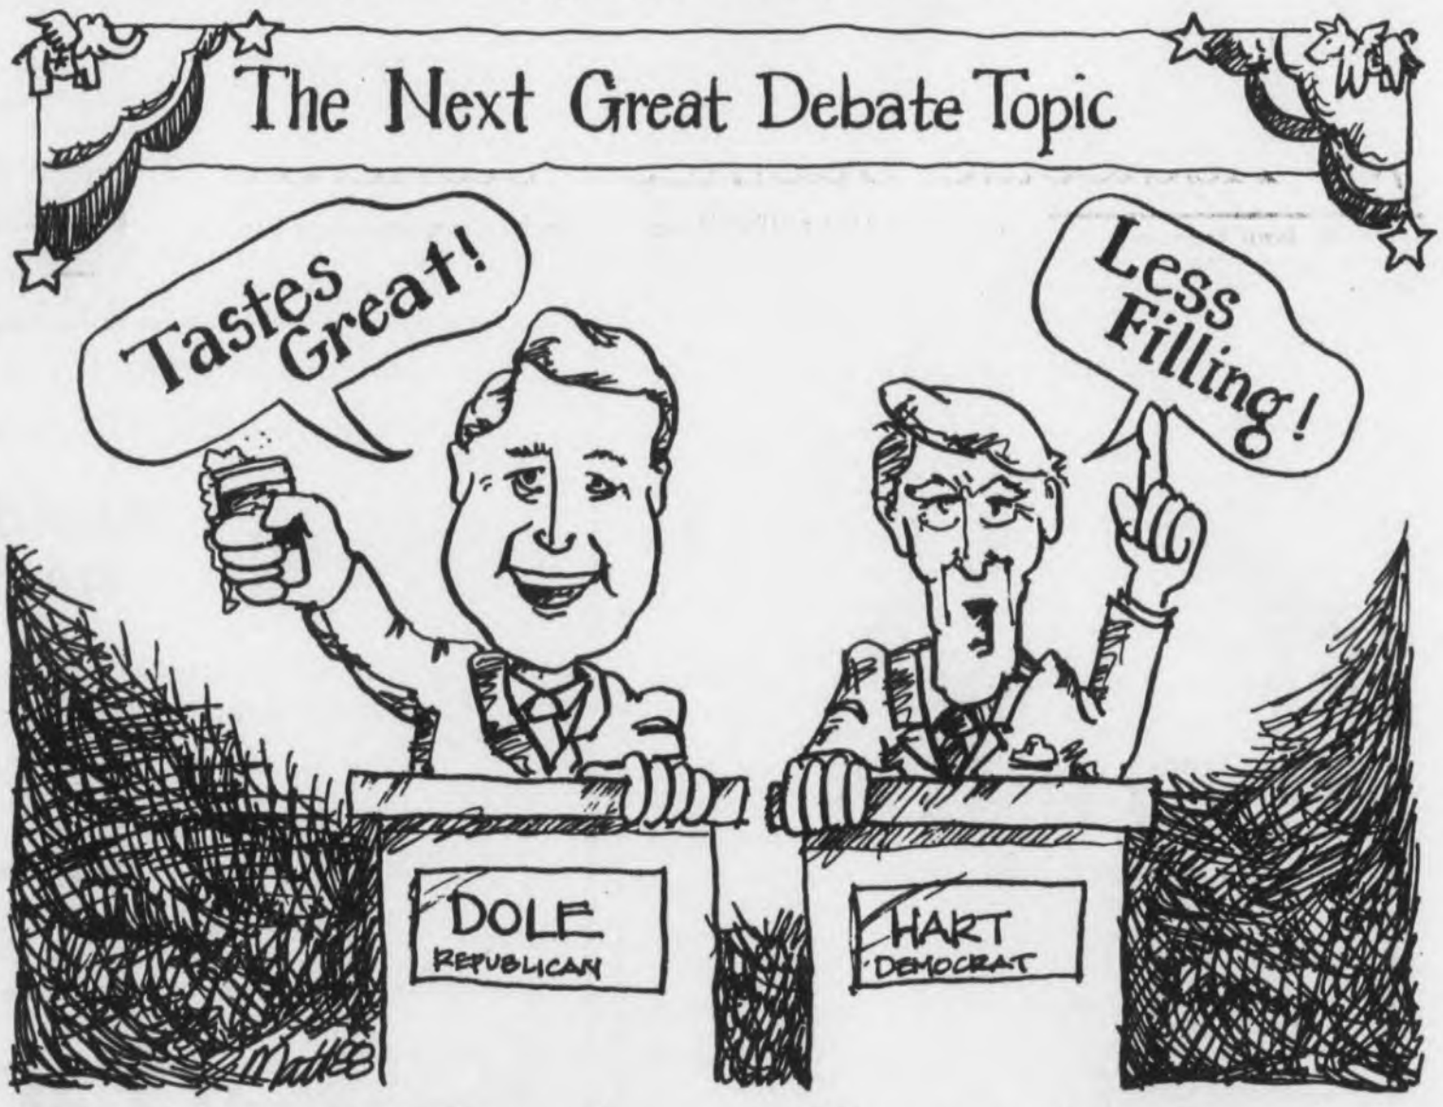
According to K-State Police Chief Charles Beckom, the purpose of the amendment is to protect students' rights by preventing the dissemination of personal information about them to outsiders. As yet, however, no court has ruled on the Buckley Amendment's applicability to campus police records.

Originally, the amendment was enacted to prevent professors from posting students' grades. Now, however, it has been so loosely interpreted as to allow university officials to censor the records completely. Many universities are using it as an excuse not to have to bother with dispersing records to students.

To date, the only official opinion on the law is one issued by the U.S. Department of Education, which in 1983 said that campus law enforcement records are education records under the Buckley Amendment. However, many universities, including the majority of Big Eight schools, do make campus police reports open to the public. And no school has ever had federal funding removed as a result of this disclosure.

The K-State Police department actually keeps two separate logs each day. One is the Public Information Log. The other — the one "for officers only" — is the Criminal Activities Log. Information that is public record at the Riley County Police Department is often inaccessible to the public at the K-State Police department.

Readers may have noticed in last week's log that a Fort Riley man was arrested for auto burglary. His name was provided for the public. Had it been a K-State student, that name would have been censored. It has also been brought to my attention from sources at the department that the Criminal Activities Log contains events that are not even recorded in the public log — for example, the mention of a rape on campus may not appear in the public log.



It seems ironic that an agency whose job is to protect the public is in effect doing the opposite. Preventing or "glossing over" the reporting of criminal activities leads readers to believe no such activities exist and thus gives them a false sense of security.

As an editor, it's tough to have to make decisions on how much coverage to devote to a group or event. And it's discouraging to be accused of too much or too little coverage. Because believe it or not, we do try.

But perhaps the most frustrating situation of all is when you know an event has occurred and your hands are tied when it comes to any coverage whatsoever.

Sorry — that information is not public record.

And it's all in the name of "protecting the student."

Richard Rhodes offers students something real: an education

Commentary

CHRISTOPHER KIPPES
Collegian Columnist

This evening at 7:30 in Forum Hall, K-Staters will have a chance to participate in what can truly be considered university life. Before there were basketball games, before there were local bars, before there were even fraternities and sororities — those institutions we now consider the quintessence of any university — there was the lecturer. The lecturer was the expert — the lone speaker — talking to an interested group of people, assembled not for a grade, not for an impending test, but instead for what the speaker had to say.

Tonight, Richard Rhodes, author of "The Making of the Atomic Bomb," "Looking for America" and other works, will be the speaker continuing the tradition of university life that can be traced to Plato and his Academy or even earlier into antiquity. And, like most events of this nature at K-State, seating will be SRO only if enough instructors have required attendance from their students and only if enough students have listened to their instructors' requirements.

Lecturers at K-State should not have to depend upon an attendance requirement for an audience. K-State students ought to be in attendance at these lectures because of the exhilaration of participating in the intellectual discussions of the times. It is a sad testimonial to university life at K-State when Aggieville is continuously attractive six nights out of every seven and a chance to hear an award-winning, respected author is passed-up as boring. The overriding sentiment seems to be why go to school when you don't have to?

While there will undoubtedly be a greater number of students visiting Aggieville tonight than attending the lecture in Forum Hall, those who do choose to hear Richard Rhodes speak should be in for a treat. In the year since his book "The Making of the Atomic Bomb" was published, Rhodes has won many writing awards and in the opinion of many is the favorite choice for the upcoming selection of the Pulitzer Prize in non-fiction.

Publishing such an authoritative work was quite an accomplishment for the Kansas City writer whose only science course in college at Yale was known generally as "Physics for Poets." Rhodes' nearly 900-page work chronicles the development of atomic physics from the early discoveries of subatomic particles to the development of the hydrogen bomb and beyond.

Clearly, Rhodes has done his research and, therefore, seems well qualified to discuss his topic "The Arms Race, the Background of Hope." He has interviewed the creators and the controllers of the bomb, and with irony he has written about the great gulf of misunderstanding that has separated these groups from the very beginning.

From Leo Szilard to Neils Bohr to Robert Oppenheimer, Rhodes has covered the most exciting and influential developments of 20th century physics. But he has also researched the leaders of policy and government: Churchill, Roosevelt and others. And from this research he seems well prepared indeed to discuss what mankind can do for itself and where mankind is headed.

In "The Making of the Atomic Bomb," Rhodes wrote of no painless panacea to cure man of his nuclear dilemma, and he will surely offer none tonight. But there are answers to the horrors of Armageddon that mankind faces, and with maturity and frankness the social reality of applied science must be faced.

Entrepreneurs find business in old stuff

Collectors find profit in antiques

By Paul Branson
Collegian Reporter

Some people will collect almost anything. Bottle caps, stamps, toy cars, real cars, records, artwork and hat pins become invaluable to the fanatic collectors of such items.

For some, collecting simply results in less space in the garage. For others, however, the result is an increase of dollars in the wallet.

"People collect things they are interested in," said Tim Hessee, one of the owners of Manhattan Coins and Collectables. "Most of the time, if they make money, it's just an added benefit."

Rare coins are the biggest money-maker, Hessee said. Antiques and works of art also have investment potential.

"There's a real difference between collecting and speculating," he said. "It's one thing to buy gold bouillon and hope the price of gold goes up. It's another thing to buy a rare gold coin and know the history — really study it."

Some investment seminars actually recommend collecting old coins, said Gerry Mowery, Topeka, who collects a wide variety of items including coins, records, military guns and comic books.

Hessee said that it's a good idea to do research on an item before collecting it. His shop carries the book "A Guidebook of U.S. Coins" by R.S. Yeoman.

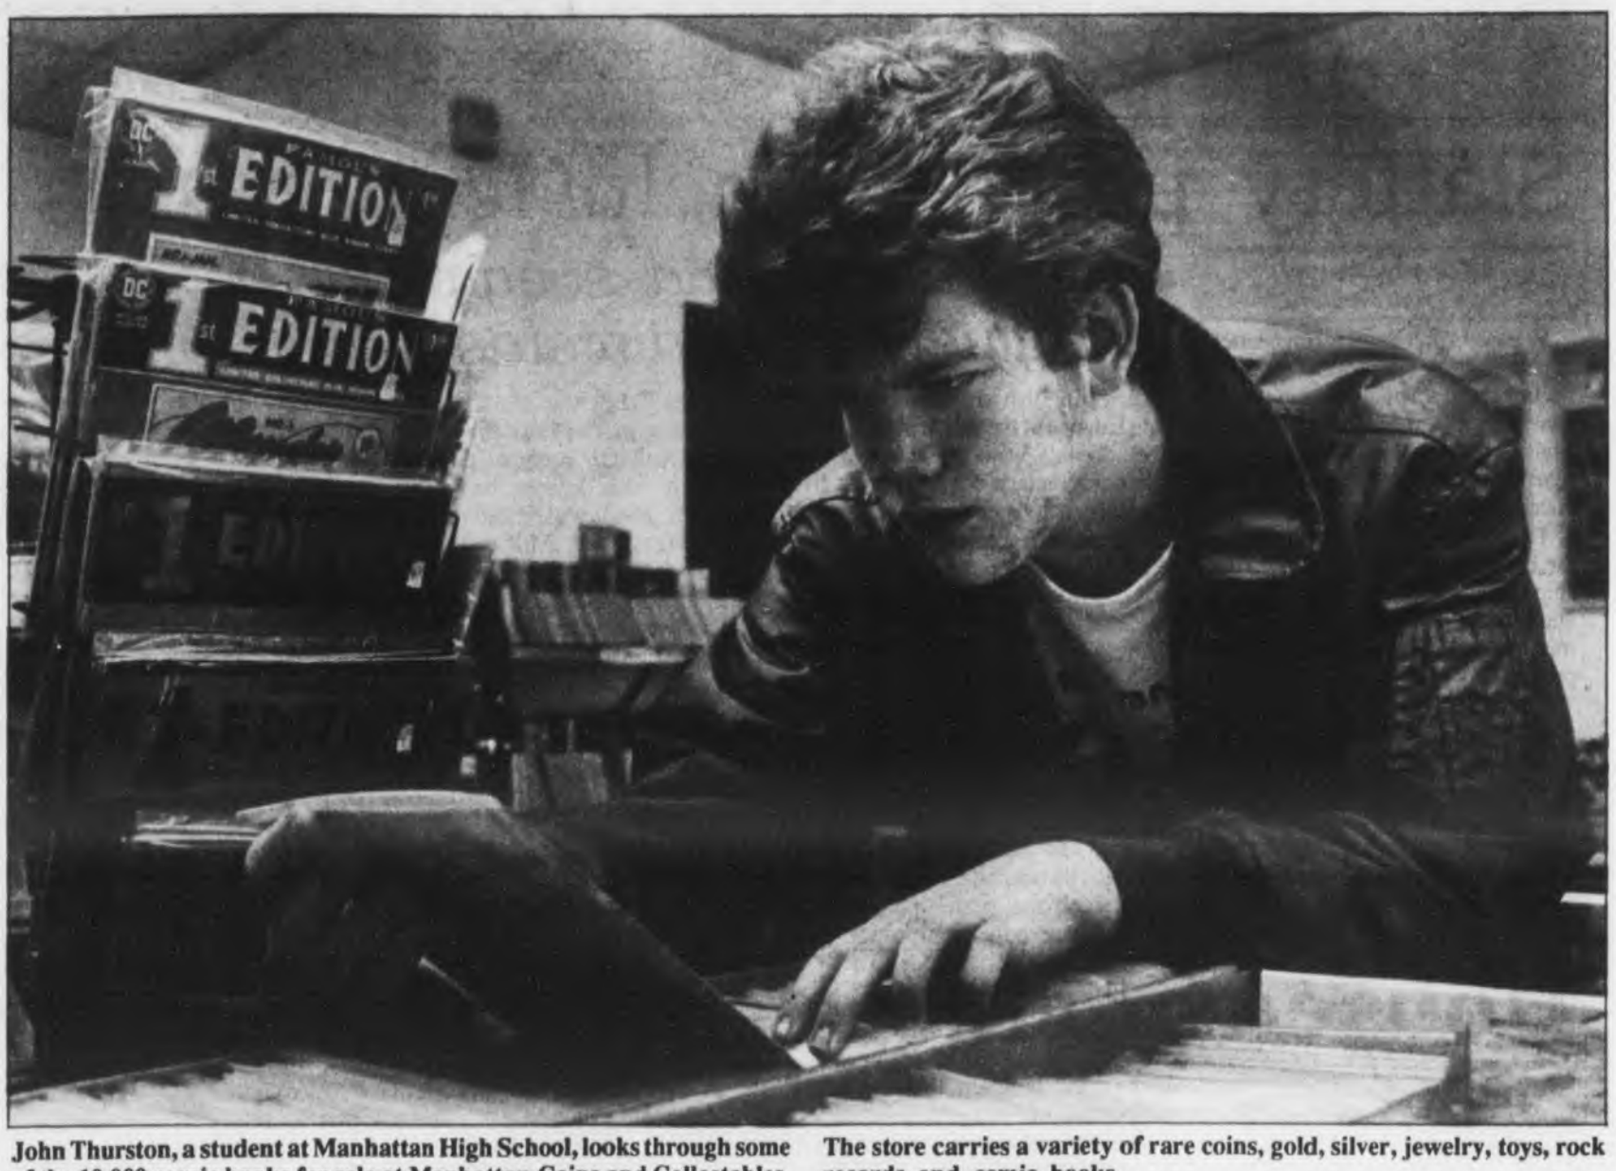
"As far as coins go, buy the book (on coins) before you buy the coin," he said.

Sherry Andres, owner of Grandma's Trunk, said that antiques are a good investment for the serious collector.

"You have to be able to find a buyer before an antique is actually valuable," Andres said.

Andres said that the main value in antiques is their sentimental value.

"I'll have somebody come in and say, 'My grandmother had one of those,' and pick it right up," she said.



Andres said much homework has to be done for antique collecting to be profitable.

"Antiques go in spurts," Andres said. "You have to keep on top of the trends. Rhinestones were big last year. I sold them as fast as I could buy them, but it's starting to taper off."

Ray Andres, her husband, said the new trend is toward 1940s style art-deco furniture.

"Most of it goes to the West Coast. People out there are furnishing their houses with it," he said.

"I think there's always going to be an antique business," Andres said.

John Thurston, a student at Manhattan High School, looks through some of the 10,000 comic books for sale at Manhattan Coins and Collectables. The store carries a variety of rare coins, gold, silver, jewelry, toys, rock records and comic books.

Comics a valuable commodity for Aggieville business owners

By Paul Branson
Collegian Reporter

Don't throw away that pile of comic books that is annually moved from one corner of the attic to the other. It could be worth more money than you thought possible.

Comics are one of the commodities bought and sold by Tim Hessee and Thomas King at Manhattan Coins and Collectables, their new business in Aggieville.

For Hessee, who runs the store while King teaches history at Wabaunsee High School, the comics are the most interesting collectable.

"The best thing for me is when somebody comes in with a stack of old comic books," he said. "I'm like a kid in a candy store."

Some of the candy can be expensive.

"I sold a Fantastic Four number one the other day for $185," Hessee said. Another comic book in his collection, the first issue of Uncle Scrooge, carries an asking price of $200-$250.

Uncle Scrooge can also be found in the coin and money section of the shop. The name graces the "Disney Money" in the top of the coin case. Scrooge, Donald Duck's rich uncle, was named treasurer for the bills which are used for money in Walt Disney Inc. theme parks.

Hessee believes that there is a new age in comic books.

"Many people said that comic books as we knew them would not exist any more, but they've created a new niche for themselves with the comic book shop," he said.

The most popular comics are the super-hero comic books.

"The top of the super-hero comics are X-Men and Spiderman followed closely by Green Arrow and Batman," Hessee said.

Hessee sees the resurgence of comic books as a natural evolution of an art form with its audience.

"The same generation that bought comics in the '40s and '50s is buying comics today," Hessee said. "Today's comic books are more adult-oriented."

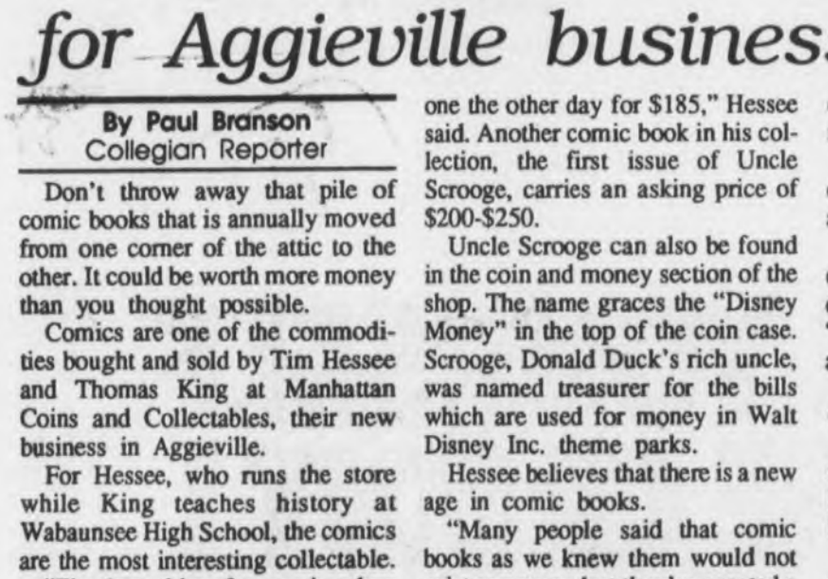
Hessee has been a collector most of his life.

"I've been collecting comic books since 1965," he said. He has also collected records since 1976. "I've got a lot of records."

Manhattan Coins and Collectables grew out of this hobbie.

"Tom and I had been talking about it (opening a collectables business) for several years," Hessee said. "He approached me with a deal. He would have the coins and jewelry and I would handle the records and comic books. I said, 'Why not.'"

He had been making his living buying and selling at flea markets. "It wasn't like I was approaching it cold," he said.



The two business partners opened their store in September 1987. According to Hessee, many people donn't know what to expect at first when they walk through the door.

"Some people come in and don't seem too interested," Hessee said. "Others can't believe their eyes."

"I went in there looking for some stereo equipment," said Jeff Priddle, junior in architectural engineering, "but about the closest thing they had was records."

But Kevin Ritchie, freshman in art, found what he was looking for. Ritchie collects comic books and was

Book a good source for answering tax questions

Commentary

STEPHEN P. HARRISON
Business Columnist

With April 15 rapidly approaching, many of us are trying to muddle through the new tax laws. A good tool to help understand these laws and how they will affect each of us can be found in the Price Waterhouse "Personal Tax Adviser." This publication is an excellent source of tax information and is written in a language anyone can understand. The following takes a look at some of the most commonly asked tax-related questions addressed in the book.

Children

Historically, parents have used their children as a source of tax relief each April 15. While this practice hasn't been totally disallowed by the new tax laws, the rules have been changed.

For instance, this year a record number of children will be required to file tax returns. Anyone with an unearned income greater than their standard deduction must file a return. The standard deduction for a child is $500 or the amount of the child's earned income, whichever is greater. The limit is $2,540 for 1987 and $3,000 for 1988. This means if a child's unearned income exceeds $500, he or she must file a return.

Two additional law changes work in the government's favor. First, children claimed as dependents by their parents are no longer allowed to claim themselves as personal exemptions on their own tax returns. Second, any unearned income totaling more than $1,000 of children under age 14 will now be taxed to the child at the parent's tax rate.

Gifts

Under the new tax law, you can still give any number of people up to $10,000 each without incurring gift taxes. Non-charitable gifts do not generate a deduction for the donor nor do they create income for the recipient.

Prior to 1987, taxpayers selling securities for a gain had the option of selecting when a trade would be taxed if the trade date fell in one year and the settlement date another. This is no longer true. Now, all sales of securities, whether losses or gains, will be governed by trade dates. Therefore, if a transaction has a trade date of Dec. 31, 1987 or earlier, it's taxable in 1987.

Wash Sales

If you sell a security at a loss, neither you nor any member of your family can repurchase the same security in a 61-day period beginning 30 days before the date of sale and ending 30 days after the sale. If you do repurchase the security within this period, your loss is disallowed.

Commissions

Commissions paid by a buyer are not tax deductible. Commissions are added to the cost basis of the security and will reduce any gain on sale of the security or increase any loss.

Capital Losses

Losses have also been affected by the Tax Reform Act of 1986. In 1987 and 1988, all capital losses are offset against all capital gains, long

'Baby' as 'bland as strained carrots'

By Gary Leffler
Collegian Reviewer

Babies have dominated the movie screens of America for the past few months and "She's Having a Baby" is the latest movie to throw its pacifier into the ring.

This is the second film this season in which director, writer and producer John Hughes takes a welcome break from his high school days.

"She's Having a Baby" is a frustrating film to watch. This is not to say it is a horrible film, it's not. It is, however, a very erratic film. One minute the script is brilliant, the next it is as bland as strained carrots. And what's more, even though the title talks about a baby, you never see one.

Kevin Bacon and Elizabeth McGovern star in this film, which doesn't look at parenthood as much as it looks at growing up. The characters aren't worried about dirty diapers; they simply want to be good spouses — whatever that means.

Movie Review

The movie begins as Jake Briggs, played by Bacon, is marrying his childhood sweetheart Christie Bainbridge, played by McGovern.

Quickly, it is apparent that Jake will dominate the film as we see the wedding from his point of view, internally as well as externally. This is where "She's Having a Baby" excells — showing Jake's true reactions to situations as opposed to what he outwardly says and does.

In the wedding ceremony, for example, Christie repeats the standard, non-denominational vows. Jake, on the other hand, must agree to these vows and much more — such as telling Christie she looks wonderful even though the dress she's wearing is hideous, or pulling out a flower-decorated check book cover to pay for a lube job.

This imagination and creativity sneaks in and out of the movie, each time showing us the turmoil within Jake as he adjusts to married life.

However, when we leave Jake's inner world and return to the middle class neighborhood he and Christie live in, all the excitement is washed away, as well as the quality film making. The story line surrounding Jake's mind is dull, ordinary and difficult to watch while remaining awake.

Scene after scene is filled with Jake's friends, neighbors and coworkers as they spout their philosophies of life. These characters are more pretentious, vague and annoying than any sixteen-year-old brat Hughes has shown us before.

But, just as it seems time to reach for the No-Doz, we are mercifully pulled back into Jake's mind for a refreshing splash of ingenuity. A rousing musical production highlights Jake's fantasies as he watches neighbor after neighbor mow their lawns on a Saturday afternoon.

Bacon and McGovern have been much touted as the stars of "She's Having a Baby." While Bacon does a fine job of creating Jake with all his doubts, fears and hopes, McGovern is short-changed with her role.

She is a solid actress as witnessed by some of her previous work. But, the character of Christie is continually kept at a distance.

This seems to typify "She's Having a Baby." While one half of the movie is solid, the other half limps along badly. Fortunately, the end of the movie is part of the solid half — a very strong part that combines some stirring images with meticulous editing.

For the most part, I was not left wanting after seeing "She's Having a Baby." Nor was I left feeling I had seen something of consistent quality. What I did come away with was a feeling that John Hughes is getting closer to reaching a plateau of mature film making.

But, "She's Having a Baby" still only rates a "C+."

Slattery proposes help for Contras

Humanitarian aid sought to influence Sandinistas

By Shelly Tierney
Collegian Reporter

Kansas Congressman Jim Slattery is proposing legislation to give $32 million in humanitarian aid to the Contras in order that the rebels against the Sandinista regime will remain a means of influencing the Nicaraguan government's behavior.

The proposal is being studied by the House of Representaives' leadership task force to determine the exact amount of aid to be given to the Contras and the length of time aid will be provided.

Cynthia Rapp, Slattery's press secretary, said Slattery feels strongly about ensuring that the Contras remain a viable force against the Sandinistas while the Central American peace plan, the plan negotiated by the five Central American presidents last year, continues to move forward.

Rapp said Slattery doesn't want to do anything that will upset the delicate balance of the peace plan. But he also doesn't want to abandon the Contras. Slattery does not trust the Sandinistas to keep their word on the peace plan, Rapp said.

"Aiding (the Contras) directly was not consistent with the peace plan," she said. "The Contras will have to comply with the rules of the peace plan in order to receive aid."

If the proposal is adopted by the House and Senate, the aid given to the Contras will be in the form of food, clothing, shelter and medical supplies, Rapp said.

"Aid can be terminated if (the Contras) do not comply with the provisions of the peace plan. So it wouldn't serve their purpose to violate them," she said.

If aid is sent, it will be delivered by an international agency such as CARE or the International Red Cross. The goods will be delivered in a cease-fire zone which will be agreed upon by the Contras and the Nicaraguan government, Rapp said.

"The Nicaraguan government has already designated over 15 percent of the country as cease-fire zones," she said. "(The cease-fire zones) have to be designated before the Contras can receive aid. The Red Cross can't go in unless there are designated cease-fire zones."

The task force working on the package will also decide who will inspect and deliver the goods, Rapp said.

Currently, more than 100 million people live north of the Panama Canal and south of the Rio Grande, 40 million of them are under the age of 16.

Rapp said many of these people are poverty-stricken and undereducated, which makes them more susceptible to communism.

"We have to help these people now. We have to start looking for a positive way to deal with them and to promote democracy," she said.

Rapp said Slattery has talked with representatives of the Nicaraguan government and to other Republicans and Democrats in Congress to get support for his proposal.

"There are a lot of technicalities to be worked out in the package," she said. "Congressman Slattery wants a package that everyone can support."

"They are going to try very hard to craft it so it will get wide bipartisan support," Rapp said.

House considers admissions plan

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A "half-step" plan for selective admissions at State Board of Regents universities and a gun control bill were among 15 measures introduced in the House Monday.

The admissions bill would require high school graduates to complete a college preparatory curriculum to enter a regents university. It would take effect July 1, 1992, but the board would recommend that students complete the curriculum until then.

The regents have proposed a selective admissions plan that includes such a requirement, but also would allow students to be admitted if they scored high enough on the ACT or graduated in the top third of their high school classes. Currently, all Kansas high school graduates can enter a state university.

"It is a half-step," said Rep. Denise Apt, R-Iola, chairwoman of the House Education Committee and one of seven sponsors of the bill. "It's the part of the program that I'm most supportive of."

The regents have already adopted a suggested preparatory curriculum: four years of English, three each of math, science and social studies and two of a foreign language.

Some rural lawmakers have balked at the prospect of such a requirement in an admissions policy, mostly because of the foreign language included. They have said rural school districts often do not have the resources to offer two years of foreign languages or some upper-level math and science courses.

If rural students can't get the classes, they will be shut out of state universities, they have said.

However, under the bill, the foreign language requirement would not take effect until July 1, 1994.

"My point is that we need to prepare the student," Apt said. "If anything, it's more of a rural initiative, so our rural schools offer the same classes our urban schools do."

The gun bill would give the state the sole authority to set gun-control laws. Currently, that authority rests with cities, counties and townships. The measure is sponsored by 70 of the House's 125 members.

"Thirty-three states have this already, including Missouri and Oklahoma," said Rep. Jack Lacey, D-Oswego, the primary sponsor of the measure. "It's to prevent a hodgepodge, every different locality having a different law."

Also introduced were measures that would:

- Prohibit smoking in any part of any school building. Gov. Mike Hayden has proposed the measure, saying young people get a bad example from teachers who smoke.
- Require the state to provide some form of legal training for municipal court judges. A judge would be required to complete such training to sit on the bench.

Answers on AIDS

Is it possible for someone to be a carrier of AIDS and still look healthy?

Yes. You cannot tell by looking whether someone is carrying the active AIDS virus in their system, nor would the individual know whether he or she is carrying the virus. No test for the active virus is currently available outside of limited research settings.

If a person thinks he or she might possibly be a carrier, it might be a good idea for that person to consider the AIDS antibody test, even though the test doesn't provide a conclusive answer. It would be especially important for a woman contemplating pregnancy to consider the test if either she or the prospective father might have been exposed to the virus.

You are urged not to share IV-drug needles with anyone, and except for those in long-term monogamous relationships, you are urged to used condoms for sexual intercourse.

What happens when a person becomes infected with the AIDS virus?

Not everyone infected with the virus will actually develop AIDS.

- Most infected people will develop antibodies to the virus, remain healthy and display none of the symptoms of AIDS, though they may be able to transmit the virus to others. The long-term effects of infection for this group of people are unknown.
- A smaller group of people will develop what is called an AIDS Related Condition (ARC), characterized by mild to severe illnesses.
- An even smaller percentage will develop AIDS, indicated by specific life-threatening diseases such as pneumocystis carinii pneumonia (PCP) or Kaposi's sarcoma (KS).

It can take anywhere from a few months to several years or more after infection for diseases to develop.

This column is a joint effort between the Collegian and Lafene Student Health Center to inform people about AIDS. Questions may be asked by writing to the University Health Educator at Lafene or by calling 532-7755.

Curry recovering from injury

Triple jumper trying to regain form

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

The name Felicia Curry may not ring a bell to anyone, but in the track and field circuit, the name is synonymous with the triple jump.

In the three years since her arrival at K- State, Curry has become one of the best female triple jumpers in the country, earning All-Americas honors last season at the National Collegiate Athletic Association indoor and outdoor meets.

In December, Curry underwent abdominal surgery and the time away from workouts has been detrimental, causing her to wonder if she can regain her winning form.

Don't mention this to assistant track coach Scott Bennett. What Curry did two weeks ago at the University of Wisconsin Invitational has him believing she'll be there when it counts.

"What she did at the Wisconsin meet was done on bravery," he said. "I asked her to do the triple jump. She didn't even have any practice jumps since her operation and she goes out and wins the meet with a 38-foot jump.

"It shows that her techniques are still there," Bennett added. "She should be able to go a lot farther this year. She lost a lot of weight due to the operation and that will help her go farther this year. It just goes to show you that what could've been a potentially disastrous situation has turned into a good thing."

Curry, after her Wisconsin performance, thinks she can win the Big Eight Conference indoor meet Jan. 27.

"I think I can win it," she said. "I still have the confidence and I know that I can go farther than the competition.

"I see myself as a clutch performer," Curry added. "Right now my main competition is Renita Robinson of Nebraska. Nebraska athletes seem to peak early and seeing she's already (peaked), I think that I can win the Big Eight."

Curry said the surgery causes her to feel a little nervous before a jump, but the rest of her body is healed.

"I think about the surgery," she said. "But my hamstring problems aren't bothering me anymore and I'm lighter thanks to the surgery and I feel stronger every day. I'm ready to go."

If anyone is aware of Curry's talents, it is her opponents, such as Sheila Hudson of the University of California at Berkley. Hudson has the longest recorded triple jump in the world. This jump is not recognized as a world record because the International Amateur Athletic Federation has not yet recognized the event.

"I usually keep my eye on a lot of people and (Curry's) one of them," Hudson said. "As a person, she's courteous, polite and fun to be around at a meet."

Curry also said having someone with the abilities of Kenny Harrison, nine-time All-American, on the same team is an added plus.

"Right now (Harrison is) the main attraction of our team," Curry said. "But he also knows exactly what he's doing. So if I need help and Coach Bennett isn't around, I can talk to Kenny."

Right now, Curry is just focusing on getting in shape and looking toward the Big Eight meet.

'Cats 14th in AP's poll

By The Associated Press

K-State's men's basketball team received 323 votes in this week's Associated Press' basketball poll, earning a spot at No. 14.

Of the five new teams in this week's ratings, only K-State hadn't previously cracked the Top Twenty this season. The Wildcats, 14-4, are in first place in the Big Eight and are ranked for the first time since March 1982, when they were also 14th. K-State beat Iowa State and Nebraska last week.

Wildcat coach Lon Kruger said earlier in the week: "It will be nice to be there, but there's a lot more important things on our minds right now."

K-State's players also downplay the ranking.

"It doesn't really mean anything, but it is something that's nice to say," said 'Cat guard Steve Henson, following K-State's win over Nebraska Saturday.

Temple became the fifth team to hold the top spot this season when the Owls earned their first-ever No. 1 ranking in The Associated Press college basketball poll on Monday.

Temple, 18-1, jumped from fifth to first with 23 first-place votes and 1,204 points from the nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters after a week that saw 13 teams in the Top Twenty lose at least one game.

Purdue, 19-2, improved from sixth to second with 16 first-place votes and 1,191 points after beating then-No. 11 Michigan 91-87 on Sunday.

Arizona, which had held the No. 1 position for six weeks, including the last four in a row, fell to third with 15 first-place votes and 1,162 points, 28 more than Oklahoma, which jumped from seventh. The Sooners, 20-2, won both their Big Eight Conference games last week, beating Kansas and Missouri.

Arizona suffered its second defeat in 23 games when it lost a Pac-10 game at Stanford. It was the first conference loss for the Wildcats.

Pittsburgh, the only other team to receive first-place votes, finished with two and 927 points after beating then-No. 20 St. John's in its only game of the week. Pitt, 16-2, retained first place in the Big East with a 6-1 record.

North Carolina, 16-3, jumped two places to sixth with 905 points, five more than Nevada-Las Vegas. UNLV was second last week, but lost to Cal-Santa Barbara for the second time this season. The Runnin' Rebels, 20-2, had a chance to take the No. 1 spot after Arizona's loss, but failed, as did Brigham Young, 17-1.

BYU, the last major undefeated team in the nation, suffered its first loss of the season Saturday at Alabama-Birmingham and fell from third into a tie for eighth with Duke at 859 points.

Duke, 16-3, won three games last week, but the Blue Devils were beaten at home by North Carolina State 77-74.

Kentucky, 16-3, rounded out the Top Ten for the second straight week with 749 points, 48 more than Syracuse.

Following Syracuse in the Second Ten were Michigan, Iowa, K-State, Bradley, North Carolina State, Vanderbilt, Wyoming, Indiana and Villanova.

Last week's Second Ten were Michigan, Syracuse, Iowa, Georgetown, Vanderbilt, Iowa State, Illinois, Bradley, Florida and St. John's.

North Carolina State, which also beat Virginia last week to improve to 14-4, was ranked 20th for two weeks earlier in the season. Wyoming, which had been ranked as high as fifth before falling from the poll, beat Texas-El Paso and New Mexico last week to improve to 17-4.

Mizzou next test for K-State

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

University of Missouri coach Norm Stewart thinks he is seeing double.

Stewart, in his 21st season at Mizzou, noticed many similarities between the K-State team of today and the 1971-74 Wildcats when coach Lon Kruger was a player.

"They focus around one outstanding player," Stewart said. "Their people go to the boards to rebound, and they have a good, strong inside defense. And they have a good outside shooter.

"There is quite a bit of similarity. Lon Kruger has really done a tremendous job. You really can't say enough about what they've been able to accomplish."

Meanwhile, the Wildcats have a four-fold task in front of them when they face the Tigers in Columbia, Mo. tonight. Tipoff is 7:05 p.m. at the Hearnes Center.

First, there's slowing down Missouri. In their last two games, the Tigers — 13-5 overall and 3-3 in Big Eight Conference play — have scored 200 points. But they only earned a split during that span, defeating the University of Colorado (99-69) and losing to the University of Oklahoma (120-101).

"On one hand I feel good about scoring, but when you score that many and only split you have to take a look," Stewart said.

But Stewart wants to run against K-State, 14-4 and 6-0, which ranks first in team defense, (66 points per game).

"It's going to be tough with K-State favoring the half-court offense," Stewart said, "but I would like to see our players push it up the court more."

K-State's second task is putting the clamps on preseason consensus All-American Derrick Chievous. In his last three games, the 6-foot-7 senior guard/forward (and his trademark Band-Aids) has scored 121 points. Chievous leads the Big Eight in conference scoring with an average of 25.7 points per game.

"Obviously, Chievous is a guy who can put up big numbers, but they have quite a few who can score big numbers. You can't key on one player because Missouri is more talented than ever," said Kruger about the Tigers, who won the Big Eight last year.

Besides Chievous, Missouri has three players who average in double figures. Even with the loss of starting point guard Lynn Hardy to back problems, the Tigers rank first in the conference in field goal percentage (52.5) and second in scoring (91.2).

Thirdly, there's the tradition Missouri has established in the 1980s. In this decade, the Tigers have won six of the eight Big Eight championships, and Stewart has adjusted comfortably to the differing styles of play since he began his stint in Columbia in the 1967-68 season.

Stewart recently became the Big Eight's winningest coach — surpassing former University of Kansas mentor Ted Owens — and only KU's Phog Allen (39 years) and Oklahoma State University's Henry Iba (36 seasons) are ahead of "Stormin' Norm" in the conference's longevity category.

Neither Kruger nor any member of K-State's starting five has beaten Missouri.

"I think he's one of the better coaches at making adjustments during a game," Kruger said of Stewart.

Last, but not least, there's a group of fans at Missouri who call themselves "The Antlers." This group made national news in January when MU hosted Iowa State University.

U.S. plans to 'warn' North Korea in fall

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The United States will conduct naval exercises off the South Korean coast next fall as part of a campaign to deter North Korea from disrupting the Olympic Games in Seoul, administration officials said Monday.

The officials, who agreed to discuss the matter only if not identified, refused to characterize the moves as a military buildup.

The presence of at least one and perhaps two aircraft carriers off the Korean peninsula during the games will be "just a little overt warning that we're watching them," one source said.

The administration believes the recent announcement by the Soviet Union that its athletes will participate in the games has reduced the possibility that North Korea will take any military action during the contests, the sources said.

"But we don't mind sending a little reinforcing signal, and the South Koreans would like it, too," one official said.

Under the current plan, at least one aircraft carrier and possibly two will move into the Sea of Japan along with escorting warships for exercises during the games, which are scheduled for late September and early October, the sources said.

Weeks before the games start, aerial and satellite reconnaissance of the region will be stepped up to keep close track of military movements in communist North Korea, the officials said.

Because 40,000 American soldiers are stationed in South Korea, there are no plans to send in additional troops, one official said. There is a chance, however, that a small number of additional Air Force planes might rotate through the country during the time of the games, the source added.

"Basically, we just don't want the North Koreans to forget we're there and that we're even more ready than usual," said another official.

Last month, South Korea and the United States announced they were going ahead with their annual "Team Spirit" exercises despite protests by North Korea. That exercise, starting this month and running to early May, will involve 60,000 U.S. military personnel and 140,000 South Korean troops.

A U.S. Navy battle group consisting of an aircraft carrier and escorting warships will join the exercise along with U.S. Air Force planes and units, according to the Pentagon.

The North Koreans have been trying to exploit the recent political turmoil in South Korea while at the same time making an abortive bid to host some of the Olympic events. After being rebuffed on the request to be a host, North Korea announced that its athletes would boycott the games.

Pentagon officials have said North Korea would be more likely to attempt to disrupt the games using terrorism than a military assault across the Demilitarized Zone that straddles the border.

'Moonstruck' gives fresh look at love

Cher stars as widowed accountant

By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reviewer

There are predictable movies. And then there are movies like "Moonstruck."

Cher stars as Loretta Castorini, a 37-year-old widowed accountant, whose life is steeped in ethnic Italian-American culture. The opening moments follow Cher's character through her daily routine. The audience is led to believe nothing exciting ever happens to her. Then, during a very engaging scene, she is proposed to.

She accepts.

So what if her father hates her fiance, so what if the wedding is postponed while her fiance visits his dying mother, so what if she must invite her fiance's mankind-hating brother to the wedding; nothing has really changed in her life. Except, now she is engaged and now the moon is full.

Nicholas Cage plays Ronny Cammereri, a character who blames the loss of his hand, and consequently the loss of his true love, on Cher's fiance. He meets Cher when she comes to invite him to her wedding in an effort to end the hatred between the two brothers.

Movie Review

They meet. They fall in love. They look at the full moon.

Everyone looks at the full moon.

Cher's father is having an affair. Her mother, Rose, played by Olympia Dukakis (no relation to the presidential hopeful), knows it. The character of Rose provides several movie highlights, as she tries to understand why men chase women.

Her conclusion: because men are afraid of death. My conclusion: she is a fabulous actress.

A minor, but compelling character, is Cher's grandfather, played by 86-year-old Feodor Chaliapin. The old man loves his pack of dogs and the "luna" — Latin for the moon. Of the moon, he says, it brings the woman to the man's bed. In "Moonstruck," his philosophy proves true.

Will Cher stay involved with Cage, or continue her plan to marry his brother? Will her father continue his affair? Every audience member will have an opinion, but don't try to predict the outcome too early in the movie. "Moonstruck" is a different sort of movie. A good different!

"Moonstruck" tangles itself into a web of mutual involvement, and then unravels itself, resulting in a wonderful blend of comedy, romance and suspense. It doesn't put audience members on the edge of their seats, but it involves everyone in the story line. No characters are added for effect.

This show is very hard to compare with other movies and television shows. It is totally fresh. It has two areas of focus — Cher's Italian family and the full moon.

The movie leaves viewers feeling good; first, because it provides many pleasant chuckles and second, because it provides a new perspective on loving. It juxtaposes love and relationships. The two supposedly necessary ingredients of courtship and marriage don't always go together, nor is it always desirable that they do so.

If that isn't a fresh concept, I don't know what is.

I give "Moonstruck" an A.

Arizona's Mecham turns over powers to secretary of state

By The Associated Press

PHOENIX, Ariz. — Rose Mofford said Monday she is confident she can be "a healing governor" as she takes over the duties and authority from impeached Evan Mecham, who said he will move out of his office this week.

Mofford, a Democrat, said at a news conference she will extend "every courtesy" to the Republican governor, and promised she would not do a "hatchet job" on state agency officials.

The House voted 46-14 Friday to impeach Mecham. A House impeachment board of managers approved 23 specific charges against the governor Monday and the full House planned to vote on them later before sending them to the Senate, which is expected to organize as an impeachment court Thursday.

The Senate trial is scheduled for Feb. 22.

Although the state constitution specifies that the secretary of state becomes acting governor when the governor is impeached, Mofford had declined over the weekend to take the title until she received official notification Monday morning of the House impeachment vote.

Asked Monday if she now considered herself acting governor, she said: "If that is the official document I will accept it."

Mecham's office also received a letter from the House and a copy of the roll call.

"I'd like to be a healing governor, forceful governor and one that will act," Mofford said. "I'm not afraid. I'm tired, that's all, because of the burden — this is thrust upon you all of a sudden."

Mofford met with four former governors — Democrats Sam Goddard and Raul Castro and Republicans Jack Williams and Paul Fannin — and said afterward they had advised her to take an active role in running the state.

The acting governor later had a cordial meeting with Mecham during which he asked that several of his aides be allowed to remain, said Athia Hardt, Mofford's spokeswoman.

Mecham indicated he would move out of the governor's offices this week and would advise Mofford later if he wants office space in the executive building while his legal problems are pending, Hardt said.

Mecham also faces a May 17 recall election and a criminal trial on charges of concealing a $350,000 campaign loan.

Cathy Herzon, junior in business, and Janet Lee, senior in financial accounting, participate in the KSU Foundation Telefund Monday in the Union. The Telefund is a fund-raiser for scholarships to the university. Last year the fund raised $460,000 from 15,000 pledges, making K-State a leader in alumni support. The money raised goes back to the colleges and is divided by the dean's office.

proves "I'm back in the role of the underdog, a role I cherish."

The Democratic race ran true to forecasts — a close race among three rivals. Gephardt, a congressional insider who campaigned as an anti-establishment figure, spent more time than anyone campaigning in Iowa in a bid to establish his candidacy. He and Simon run a poor second to Dukakis in New Hampshire polls.

Iowa had relatively few national convention delegates to bestow. But the prospect of political momentum for next week's New Hampshire primary and later contests turned the state into a multimillion-dollar battleground.

That explained the millions of dollars on television and radio commercials, the massive organizational efforts and the hundreds of candidate days spent in a state where the turnout wasn't expected to go much above 250,000 voters.

Pat Robertson, the former TV evangelist, hoped his fundamentalist supporters would flood the GOP caucuses and produce an upset. But pre-caucus polls had Dole leading national front-runner Bush after a campaign laced with bitterness.

Gary Hart, his comeback at stake, thanked supporters early in the day and said, "This campaign will only get stronger the longer it goes."

Republican Rep. Jack Kemp of New York and former Delaware Gov. Pete du Pont vied for standing among conservatives, hoping to use Iowa as a springboard to challenge Bush and Dole next week in New Hampshire.

The sixth GOP contender, former Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., skipped Iowa for New Hampshire.

scholarships aimed at minorities as reasons for K-State's increase.

"We have the Minority Student General Scholarship program that last year awarded $22,000 in minority scholarships. For the current scholarship awarding season, we have $30,000 (to award)," Switzer said.

In addition to this fund, the University's individual colleges award scholarships to minorities, he said.

Once students enroll, Salahu-Din said K-State wants to keep them here.

"Retention — when we start saying black student enrollment, we're not (just) talking about recruitment. That's only one aspect of it. We're talking about retention — about graduation," he said.

Hessee said the back issues, especially the older ones, are very hard to find. He said that the major readers of those books were children and consequently they were often torn up or simply worn out.

Hessee said business is picking up, but enjoying what he is doing is also important to him.

K-State students wish for gifts to make Valentine's Day perfect

By Steve Walker
Collegian Reporter

It looks as if the perfect gift to give your sweetheart this Valentine's Day has not changed much this year from last — according to K-State students, that is. Students have just warped the idea a little around the edges.

The old standbys like a dozen long-stem roses, chocolates, romantic encounters in front of roaring fireplaces, and cold, hard cash were the things most often mentioned by the starry-eyed lovers at K-State. It's just that they could not leave well enough alone. They had to throw in their own kinky versions.

So if someone out there is reading this and looking for gift ideas, please feel free to toss in whatever interesting twists come to mind.

K-State women who were interviewed on what they wanted for Valentine's Day stayed pretty much in the realm of reality. However, their tastes seem to be running away from the easy stuff — like flowers and candy — toward something a little more difficult for guys to give, but a lot more meaningful in the long run.

"I want a good-looking guy, but he has to have a good personality and nice buns." — T.H.

"A real man with real stomach ripples." — J.J.

"A man I can like for more than one week." — M.M.

"One night of pleasure and passion with someone I love." — C.M.

Not all women at K-State are this easy to please. The majority want to be swept off their feet and romanced. Here are some ideas on how to do just that.

"I want a dozen roses and a quiet dinner for two." — V.D.

"All night out on the town dancing. Well, not all night long." — K.L.

"Twelve dozen roses and a man who loves me." — J.C.

"I want a love letter, a dozen pink roses and a cold bottle of wine — all in front of a roaring fireplace on a black bearskin rug." — C.M.

"I want a valentine's card from somebody other than my parents." — J.S.

It might be a little harder to shop for the gentlemen this year. They seem to have definitely strayed into the Twilight Zone of valentine gift-giving. Any female reading this section of the story should sit down and wear a seat belt.

"I want money for new clothes. No, make that a car." — E.C.

"My own country, so I can have all the girls in it." — R.W.

"For Valentine's Day I want beer to run out of my faucet at home." — K.S.

"I want the ability to make any girl fall madly in love with me." — T.S.

Don't despair, ladies. There are some guys here who only want the simple things out of Valentine's Day. Things like love, romance, companionship and Frederick's of Hollywood.

"All I want for Valentine's Day is my girlfriend in a white negligee and a cup of ice." — C.C.

"I want a long-legged blonde in fishnet hose." — B.C.

"I want a girl to rub a damp washcloth all over my body while whispering sweet nothings in my ear." — S.W.

If the wants and desires of students are any indication of how Valentine's Day 1988 is going to turn out, Aggieville looks to be in for quite a party. A warped and unusual party, but a party nonetheless.

But remember, Valentine's Day isn't just for lovers and sweethearts. It's a time to tell everyone you love just how much you care.

"I want to hear from those I love. I want to hear that they're getting good grades. A phone call would work." — M.W.

Gifts last years

By The Associated Press

Why leather for the third anniversary?

Why crystal for the 15th?

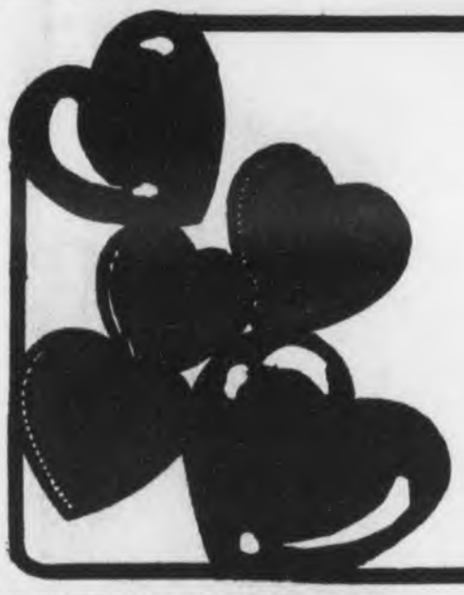
Why silver for the 25th?

Once upon a time, says Stephen Byer, president of the Sheffield Plate Polish Co., a woman's "hope chest" was meant to hold the necessities she would need after her wedding. Since many of these items wore out over time, they were replaced on designated anniversaries, he says.

Leather shoes, for example, would be worn out by the third year of marriage.

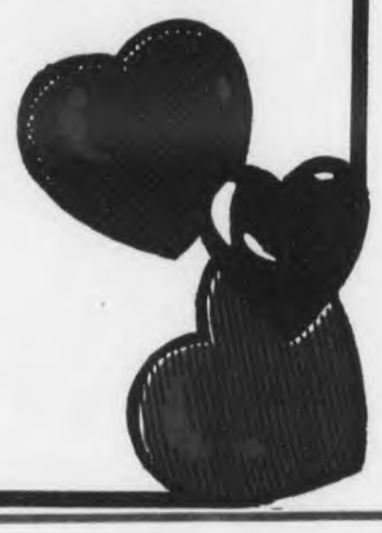
Silver, of course, would last longer (if the marriage did, too).

Some unique wedding gift ideas from the Manhattan Art and Antique Center in New York: an antique walking cane with a bronze tiger's head; a hand-painted perfume bottle from the Orient; an 18th-century coral and silver teething ring designed to keep away the "evil eye."



"Weddings are a time of tradition, custom and ritual, and what can be more traditional than a token from the past?" says Stephen Roedler, director of the center.

According to the "Brides Book of Etiquette," money is today's most popular wedding gift, in the form of checks, cash, government bonds, stock certificates or traveler's checks.



Gifts of silver, crystal, toaster ovens and furniture follow in popularity, according to the book, published by Bride's magazine, which adds: "If you prefer not to give a monetary gift, but don't know exactly what the couple would prefer, it's quite appropriate to ask the mother of the bride or groom, or the attendants, if the couple has a wedding gift registry at a local store. The registry is a list of items needed by the couple, from the smallest, most inexpensive kitchen utensil, to the largest, most expensive major purchase."

The sound of music can be a wedding present that will be remembered long after the newlyweds have mailed their thank-you notes, says the American Music Conference.

According to a spokesman for the trade group, selecting the right musical gift is as easy as visiting the nearest music store where there are scores of ideas for the bride and groom who are already amateur musicians or who always wanted to be.

Fresh greenery wedding favorite

By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reporter

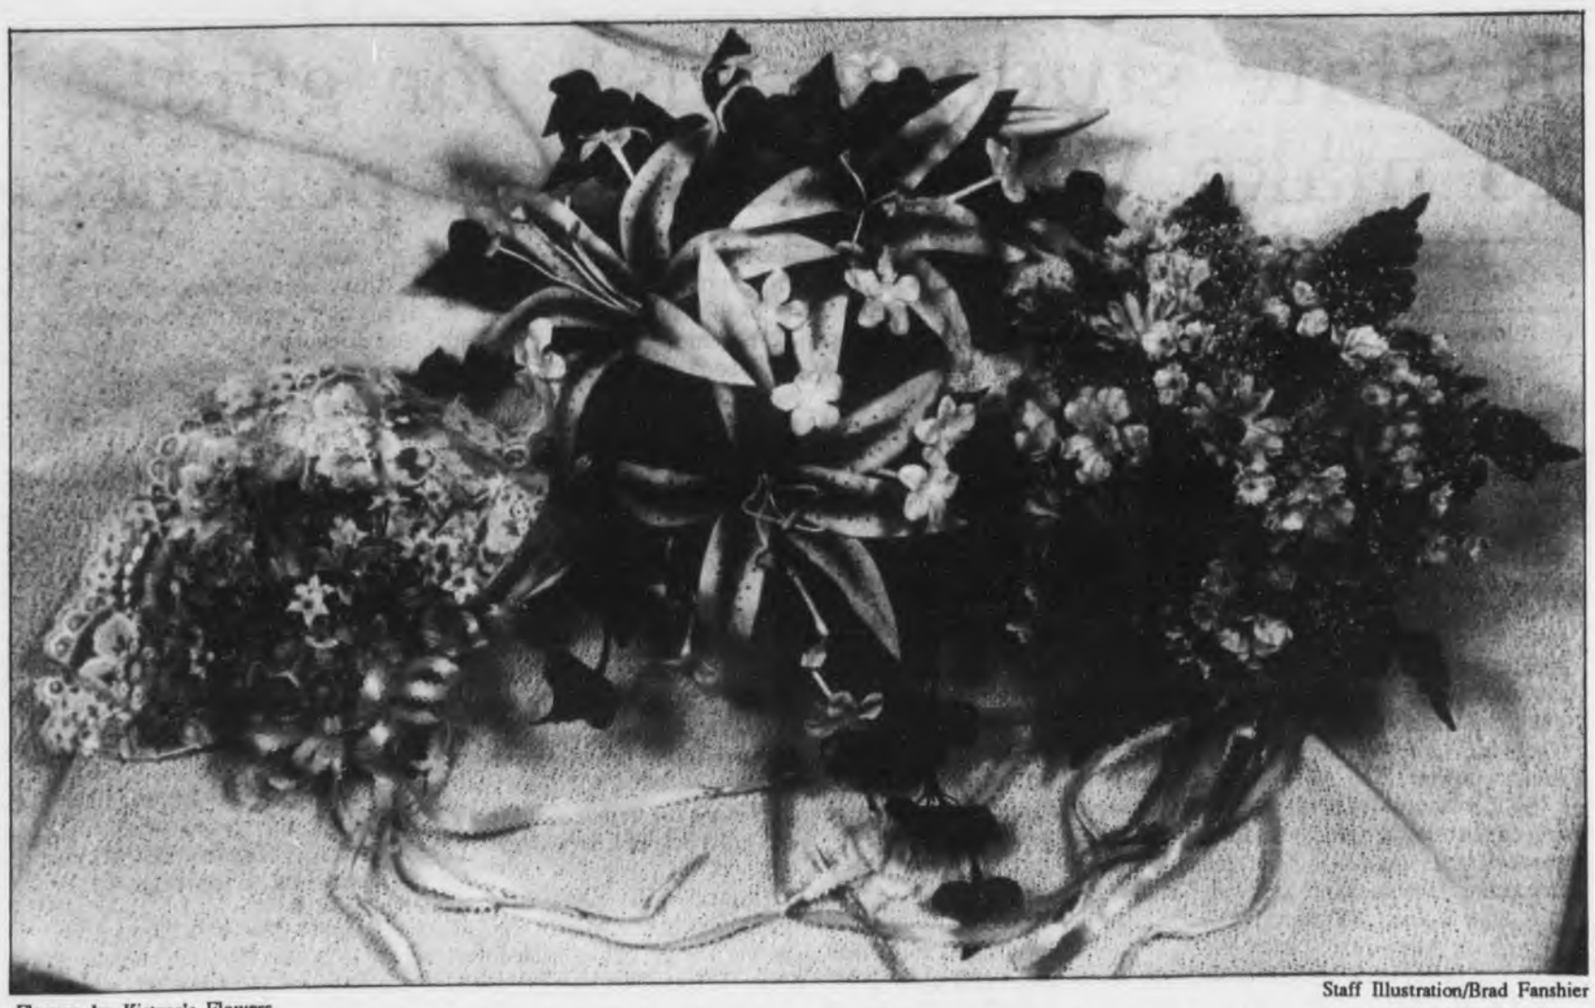
True love is supposed to last the test of time.

Even though that poetic assumption is not often the case, flowers — often given as a symbol of love — have survived the test of time and popularity. Whether they are silk or fresh, flowers have been an important part of traditional American weddings for many years.

"A few years ago we went through a period where silk (flowers) were 'the thing,' but now I think we have a trend toward fresh," said Kittie Orr, owner of Kistner's Flowers and Greenhouses.

"Three or four years ago silk was popular because people wanted something to keep after the ceremony," said Karen Medlin, owner of Westloop Floral. "But then they realized 'What am I going to do with all these dust-gathering flowers.'"

Both florists cited examples in which couples continue to opt for silk rather than fresh arrangements in a wedding. An important member of the wedding party may be allergic to fresh flowers, or the couple may want to take all of the flowers out of town. Occasionally, the bride or a friend of the bride will want to purchase an array of flowers and arrange them herself. Silk is the most popular choice in that situation.



Often, the underlying reason a couple looks into the use of silk flowers is price. Florist shops and suppliers price silk differently.

"Silk (flowers) are higher priced because they can be kept," said Orr. "I may not do many silk weddings just because fresh is cheaper."

"Silk flowers can be higher," said Medlin. "But generally there is not a whole lot of difference."

The use of one flower type, however, does not exclude use of the other. Some weddings feature a combination of both fresh and silk flowers.

Sometimes a bride will want to make two bouquets, one fresh to carry down the aisle and one silk to keep as a memento, Orr said.

Roses favorites as gifts

By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reporter

Flowers can say "I love you," "I'm sorry," "I miss you," or "This is a special day." No matter what the occasion, virtually everyone likes to receive flowers. Just like receiving a letter, getting flowers means someone is thinking about you.

But sending flowers requires more effort than writing a letter. So, for those thinking about expending the effort and purchasing flowers during the Valentine's Day season, here's some advice from experts in the field.

■ Flower prices...

They have gone up as production costs and other expenses have gone up, said Connie Lee, manager of Aggieville Flowers. "But over the last three or four years, fresh flowers have been in the same (price) range."

"I think (flower) prices have risen very little when compared to other things," said Karen Medlin, owner of Westloop Floral.

Both said that prices fluctuate throughout the year according to demand and other influences, such as transportation costs and the weather.

According to Kent Kimmins, associate professor of horticulture, this spring's supply of roses — the flower most in demand — will be good. Thus, their price should not greatly increase during the spring season.

■ Flower bargains...

"On Valentine's Day, any arrangement without roses," Lee said.

"During Valentine's Day, red, pink and white have become the dominant colors. So the price of other colors do not rise as much with demand," Medlin said.

Less popular flowers — like carnations and daisies — and assorted arrangements were also cited as good, often unexploited bargains.

■ The busy season...

"It's hard to rank Valentine's Day, Mother's Day and Christmas. Valentine's Day is different because the buying is in two or three days, while Christmas (buying) starts on Dec. 1 and gradually builds," Medlin said.

Spring is the busiest season, starting with Valentine's Day and ending with Mother's Day, Lee said.

"Valentine's Day is the biggest single day. Mother's Day is close," Kimmins said. "It used to be that Easter was the biggest (day), but not anymore."

About half of the flowers sold on Valentine's Day must be imported to accommodate the increased demand, Kimmins said. During non-holiday times, less than one-fourth of the flowers sold in this country are imported.

■ Sending flowers anonymously...

"I think it's a trend (to send flowers anonymously)," Lee said. "I get calls every week — more around Valentine's Day — from girls saying they received some beautiful flowers but no one signed the card. They ask me if I can remember what the guy looked like. Most of the time, especially if I've been busy, I don't pay attention to what customers look like."

"I think it's such a shame to let beautiful flowers and a beautiful gesture go to waste," she said.

"We get a lot (of anonymous orders) over Valentine's Day," Medlin said. "But then we get a lot throughout the year."

"If we're aware that a customer isn't signing the card we ask him that if someone calls wanting to know his name, can we give it out? If he says 'No,' we respect his wishes," Medlin said.

Sometimes a man will send flowers and just sign his first name, she said. Then the shop gets a call from the lady, who says she knows three guys by that name and asks if the shop staff could tell her the man's last name, Medlin said.

However, neither of the shop owners has ever received a call from a male saying he has received flowers anonymously.

■ Women sending flowers to men...

Within the last few years there have been a lot more women sending flowers to men, and men like to get flowers, Lee said.

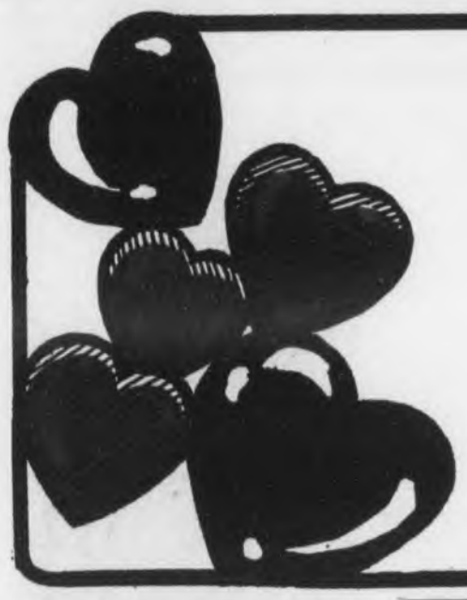
Study shows brides receive diamonds in engagement ring

By The Associated Press

Diamonds apparently still are a girl's best friend.

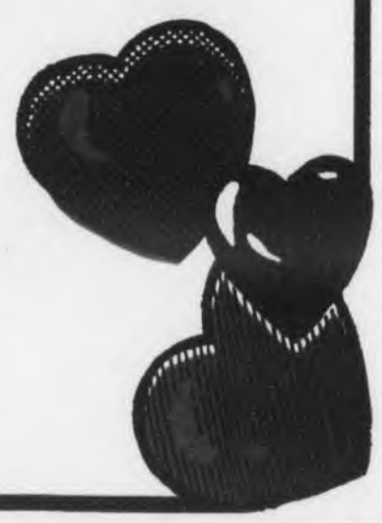
In 1986, according to industry figures, 73 percent of all brides-to-be got diamond engagement rings. And they probably were bigger and more expensive than in previous years.

The average diamond ring sold in 1986 was .46 carats, with an average value of $1,177, says Lloyd Jaffe, chairman of the American Diamond Industry Association, a trade group. That compared with an average .28 carats and a value of $700 in 1980, Jaffe says.



"Latest tabulations regarding diamond wedding bands and anniversary rings," he says, "indicate that the market for men's diamond wedding bands has increased substantially, to over 400,000 pieces, up 20 percent over 1985."

Men usually know very little about diamonds when they start shopping for an engagement ring, says another jewelry executive, but they generally have a set price they are willing to spend.



"Before they buy an engagement ring," says H. Marvin Beasley, vice president, jewelry merchandising for Best Products Co., "they should decide what is most important for the money — quality or size or both."

Other things to keep in mind, he says:

— Does the wearer prefer traditional or unusual styles in settings and stone?

Planner gives bride time line

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

Unless you are planning on eloping, you can count on at least six months of preparation for a formal wedding, according to The Complete Wedding and Planning Shopping Guide by Accent Bridal & Formal. Their checklist can help both the bride and groom handle details to ensure a smooth ceremony.

Bride's Calendar

Six months before:

- Buy a wedding planner and memory album.
- Discuss wedding budget with your parents or your fiance; decide on the wedding style — everything from flowers to food.
- See clergymember or judge with fiance.
- Plan color scheme for wedding, reception.
- Order wedding gown.

Three months before:

- Complete your guest list.
- Order invitations and announcements; start addressing them upon receipt.
- Order wedding rings.
- Set date to order attendants' dresses, confirm delivery date for your dress.

One month before:

- Mail your invitations.
- Have final dress and headpiece fitting.
- Arrange lodging for out-of-town guests.
- Arrange for announcement in newspapers.

Two weeks before:

- Go with fiance for marriage license.
- Buy luggage; check honeymoon reservations.

One week before:

- Begin your honeymoon packing.
- Give a final guest count to the caterer.
- Check on final details with florist, etc.

Groom's Checklist

Six months before:

- Pick up bride's engagement ring from jewelry store — if not yet selected.
- Discuss with fiancee how many ushers you'll need (one for every fifty guests), and select them.
- Discuss honeymoon plans with your fiancee; consult a travel agent for ideas.

Three months before:

- Complete guest list; give it to fiancee.
- Consult with fiancee and order wedding attire for self, for best man, ushers, and fathers.
- Arrange transportation for wedding party to ceremony and reception.
- Arrange to pay for bride's bouquet; order boutonnieres for men, corsages for mothers.

One month before:

- Plan rehearsal dinner with your parents.
- Make sure necessary documents — legal, medical, and religious — are in order.
- Pick up wedding rings, check engraving.

Two weeks before:

- Arrange with the best man for transportation from the reception to the airport (or from wherever you plan to leave on your honeymoon).

One week before:

- Explain any special seating arrangements for family, disabled guests, to the head usher.
- Put the clergymember's or judge's fee in a sealed envelope and give it to the best man, who will deliver it after the ceremony.

Couples seek advice before marriage

By The Associated Press

A proposal and an acceptance were all that used to be necessary for a marriage ceremony to take place.

Today, a couple may well have discussions of financial, legal, psychological and religious or moral aspects of the union before the wedding takes place.

The new thinking is that discussions of important issues put a marriage on a sound basis from the very beginning.

According to Ann F. Dahl, a clinical social worker in New Haven, Conn., and founder and co-director of the Connecticut Remarriage Research and Consultation Group, it is very much in the interest of a couple to look at the issues that surface in every marriage: having children, handling money and dealing with relatives. In remarriages, relationships with children and ex-spouses also should be discussed.

"Many are concerned about hurting feelings or bringing up troublesome issues. But issues that are not talked about are likely to give more difficulty than those that are," she says.

Dahl, who has been counseling remarriage couples for more than 12 years, says that as a rule, consultation strengthens an impending marriage, though couples may fear that they will learn something they don't want to know in the process.

"The issue people often have the hardest time looking at is money," she says. Yet questions of property rights, guardianship and inheritance of children, expenditures for children's education, health insurance and wills are almost inevitable. Consulting with an attorney or other professional is wise, in her opinion.

Prenuptial financial agreements have become more widespread, especially in second marriages, to safeguard the property rights of children from another marriage. The financial aspects of such contracts can be legally binding, superseding state laws governing property distribution.

But prenuptial agreements covering personal issues such as how the household will be run and when or if you'll have children are only morally binding and may not carry much weight if brought to court, according to attorney Tom Bousquet of Bousquet & Associates, Houston.

Several states have made provisions for premarital agreements, adopting a uniform law which mandates adequate knowledge of each other's property and financial situation and written consent of both parties in any agreement.

Nowadays, a number of religious denominations mandate pastoral counseling and encourage couples to seriously consider their impending marriage. In the Catholic church, for example, formal marriage preparation programs are in place in most localities and about 80 percent of Catholic couples take them, according to Walter Sweeney, coordinator of marriage preparation programs for the Archdiocese of New York.

In the New York Archdiocese, between 8,000 and 10,000 couples participate in one of the formal programs every year. These include, at the most intense level, a weekend retreat, or a full day program, or three evening sessions.

At each, one or a few couples meet with a priest and professional counselors to go over a range of material that includes an opportunity for private discussion.

Bells traditional during marriage

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Bells are not only often symbolic of the wedding ceremony itself, but are part of the bridal ritual in many cultures, says "bellologist" Terry Mayer, a collector of bells, as well as bell facts and legends.

The Naga tribe in India, she says, believe the groom bells his bride to assure himself she is busy, not lazy.

Korean brides have been known to wear silver bells tacked to their sleeves, so when they are out of sight of the groom, the tinkling is a subtle reminder of marital ties, says Mayer, a designer of bell jewelry and president of the New York Metropolitan chapter of the American Bell Association, an organization of bell collectors.

Another ringing legend: In Tunisia, the lover sends his betrothed anklets of silver and gold, which are supposed to tinkle around her feet as she walks, making it easier to find her if she strays too far from her husband.

At a church in Nashua, Iowa, the minister uses the bell for a symbolic message after the wedding ceremony, says Mayer.

"First, he asks the bride to ring the bell in the belfry. But it is too heavy and she can't pull on the knotted rope hard enough to make a sound. Then, the minister asks the groom to come and help her.

"When they have sounded the bell together, he tells them: 'Always remember the bell rope. You'll find married life much easier if you pull together.'"

Bridal fashions show romantic styles

Staff Illustration/Brad Fanshier

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

Bridal gowns adorned with bows and sequins were the main attraction at the 1988 Manhattan Bridal Show, and local merchants expect the trend to continue.

"Bows have been in ever since Fergie (Sarah Ferguson, wife of Prince Andrew) got married," said Elaine Bednarz, owner of Edelaine's Bridal. "She was the first one to start the trend."

Christie Irish, owner of Christine's Bridal, described this year's popular bridal look as "romantic with a good touch of elegance."

"It is a clean look," she said, adding that although bows and irredescent sequins are popular, the look has become more elegant than in years past.

"The sparkle is still there, but it has been toned down," Irish said.

Other popular highlights are deep, V-shaped backs and open cutwork on the sleeve, she said.

Two K-Staters getting married this summer offered their opinion about the trends.

"I want something romantic, but not frilly," said Lynelle Kirkpatrick, senior in apparel and textile marketing. "I don't want the traditional white wedding dress."

Kirkpatrick, who is getting married in September, said she is impressed with gowns adorned with pearls and sequins, but is not a big fan of those with bows.

"I like the puffy, lacy sleeves," said Laura Webster, junior in preveterinary medicine. "I also want a pretty full skirt with decoration around the border."

Webster, who described her dress as "conservative," is getting married in May.

Wedding dresses with rows of ruffles and a form-fitting shape are on their way out, Irish said.

"The form-fitting dress gets a fantastic response on the East Coast," Irish said. "But there is no market for it here in the Midwest."

The slim silhouette style received no praise from Bednarz, who predicted the dress would not last more than another year.

"It is a momentarily hot item," she said. "This dress is a bear to make — not all girls are created equally, and in some cases no adjustment can be made."

Both merchants find themselves swamped with business during the post-holiday months.

Delivery time for most domestic dresses is between six to eight weeks, Bednarz said, adding that the wait can be as long as 12 weeks for imported gowns. Most brides know their wedding date and have a budget in mind by the time they begin shopping for dresses, she said.

Irish has seen bigger wedding parties and more elaborate dresses in the last two to three years.

"The cost for dresses is definitely on the upswing," she said. "Although they may not be able to afford it, people are spending more money."

Irish plans to begin offering her customers the option of renting dresses this spring to help alleviate some of that expense.

Large wedding helps couples

By The Associated Press

A big wedding for an unmarried couple who have been living together for some time isn't as silly as it may seem, says a University of Michigan sociologist.

"Elaborate weddings help stress the differences between cohabitation and marriage — two stages that may seem to be alike but are actually two fundamentally different states," notes researcher Martin Whyte.

"Weddings symbolize the bride and groom's promise to give up their liberal premarital sexual options for marital fidelity. That is one major reason why there are so many big weddings now."

Whyte bases his conclusions on a study covering 60 years of dating and mating habits in metropolitan Detroit. Whyte and his students interviewed 459 women for the survey. They were married between 1924 and 1984.

Married men have less psychological stress than their wives, according to preliminary findings in a Cornell University study of married couples. And men whose wives are homemakers experience less stress than men whose wives work.

The study of 800 married couples from the Detroit area is by Elaine Wethington, an assistant professor of human development and family studies at Cornell.

Her early findings also indicate that among lower class working couples, the husband's stress is caused more by perceived failures at providing for his family, which force his wife to work, than just by his wife's entering the labor market.

For a most unusual wedding, Finnair Tours has a "Hideaway Holiday" that features a ceremony outside a snowy teepee around log fires in a place called TeePee Village near Luosto in Finnish Lapland.

The couple will be dressed in Lapp folk costumes and taken to the village by reindeer for a wedding or anniversary ceremony that Finnair says can be tailor-made to the couple's wishes.

Some 80 percent of wedding couples request "Here Comes the Bride" for their march down the aisle, according to the experience of Hank Lane, Great Neck, N.Y., whose 21 orchestras have played at some 15,000 parties in the past decade.

Others prefer Bach or Vivaldi, he says, although he's also had requests for the Beatles' "When I'm 64" and "Ease on Down the Road," from the Broadway musical, "The Wiz."

How do newlyweds know which mattress is right for their nuptial bed? "Test drive" it, says Marian Artinger, an Atlanta-based furniture and interior designer.

"Find the one that you and your spouse-to-be like," she says. "Check it out by lying on it together for about 10 minutes. Twist and turn as you do when sleeping. Be sure you both have enough room to turn without interfering with the sleep of the other."

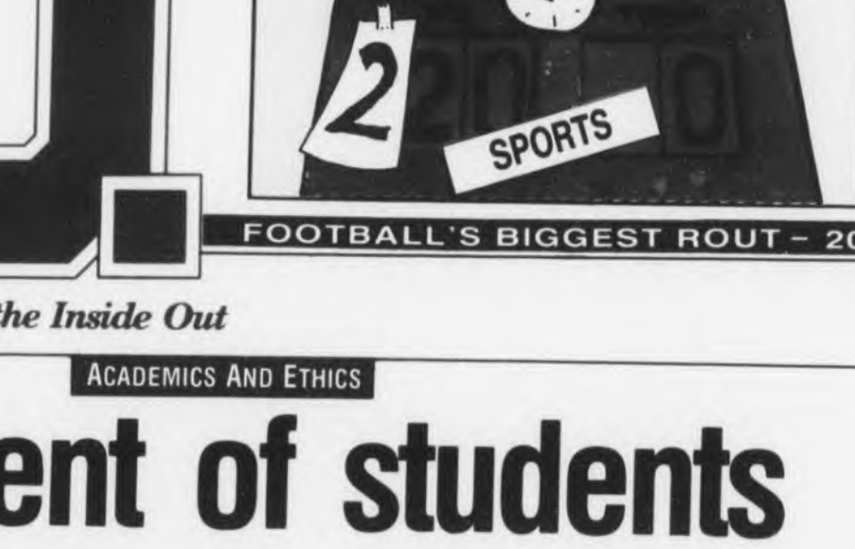
40 percent of students polled admit cheating

By Meg McSherry
■ Daily Illini
U. of Illinois, Champaign-Urbana

• Editor's Note: The first names of those who admitted to cheating have been changed to protect the students' anonymity.

Steve cheated on an exam. Obviously, he is not alone. Forty percent of students cheat, according to a recently conducted Daily Illini poll, and 40 percent also said it was easy to cheat on university exams.

The unusual thing about Steve's case is that he got caught. Even more unusual is the way in which he was disciplined—he was dismissed from the university.



From the moment he got caught—Steve declined to say exactly how that happened—he told the truth about the incident. He admitted it. Now, however, Steve regrets his decision—not because he thinks what he did was right, but because of the way the university's Senate Committee on Student Discipline handled the situation.

Steve said that if he was able to come up with an alibi, there may not have been a strong enough case against him.

"I could have said it wasn't me," he

Tulane law takes lead in public service

The Tulane law school class of 1990 will become the first in the country required to perform community service work in order to graduate.

In addition to the required 88 credit hours of course work, the faculty now requires that ". . . anyone who wants to call himself or herself a Tulane lawyer will have to complete a minimum of 20 hours of legal service to the indigent."

Second and third year law school students work with a volunteer attorney on cases provided by The New Orleans Pro-Bono Project. This project was recently started by the Louisiana Bar Foundation, a division of the Louisiana Bar Association.

The cases will be diverse. Most will involve a variety of family law issues such as child support, divorce or separa-

DEALING WITH AIDS

Two million of us are 'ticking time bombs'

By Shari Chadwick and Michael Koretzky
■ The Alligator
U. of Florida

There is no such thing as "safe sex."

"Safer sex" requires more than a condom.

And even if you read every newspaper, watched every television show and picked up every pamphlet you could find in Gainesville, you still wouldn't know enough about AIDS to avoid dying from it.

That's because AIDS is a virus that thrives on sexual activities that make many people blush. Because it kills, it means people not only have to hear over and over about homosexuality, anal sex and oral sex, but they also must learn about them and understand them.

It is no longer enough to know that AIDS stands for "Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome," the virus responsible for a total breakdown of the immune system that leads to deadly infections and rare forms of cancer. Now anyone who wants to avoid "The Plague of the '80s" must study everything from safer sex to IV drug use.

Since it was "discovered" in 1980, AIDS has killed 41,766 people in this country. The Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta estimate another 2 million Americans are carriers—walking, ticking time bombs that may never explode into full-blown AIDS cases but are dangerous enough to pass the disease on to others.

In Florida, 2,774 people have died from AIDS, ranking behind only New York and California.

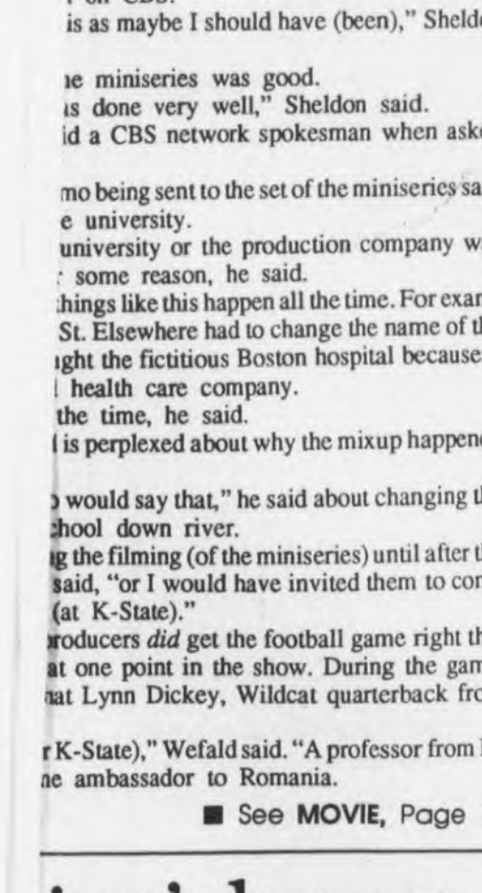
Student's glove makes births safer

By Jodi Berls
■ Daily Cougar
U. of Houston, TX

Jagadish Sorab, a U. of Houston mechanical engineering graduate student, has developed a system to measure hand-applied forces with the aid of a computer. Though still in the data acquisition phase, this technology may someday help doctors prevent serious natal injuries.



In births where the baby's shoulders lodge against the mother's pelvis, called shoulder dystocia, doctors have about five minutes to complete the delivery before the baby suffocates, Sorab said.

"The immediate response is to pull harder" to get the baby out, he said.

That response can damage the baby's brachial nerve, which runs from the neck down into the shoulder. Injury to the brachial nerve can lead to paralysis, retardation or speech defects.

While shoulder dystocia occurs in only one percent of vaginal births per year, it can be very dangerous. At least six instances of fetal death have occurred because of asphyxiation, Sorab said.

Infant shoulder dystocia also causes severe blood loss to the delivering mother.

Working with an obstetrician at the U. of Texas Health Science Center, Sorab designed a "sensor glove" to study how much force can be safely applied during delivery.

By having doctors wear sensor "rings" on each finger, Sorab was able to detect the force exerted against the baby. The sensors feed information to a computer, which records the amount of force used to pull the baby out.

The sensor glove was used on 24 randomly selected births during a two-month trial period last summer, Sorab said.

In one case of shoulder dystocia, he said, the baby's collarbone was broken during delivery. Because they had been recording force levels up to that point, researchers were able to determine a maximum force that could be applied.

Data from the sensor glove indicates that a routine birth requires about six pounds of force. In a case of shoulder dystocia, the doctor may have to pull four times that hard, Sorab said.

"When the forces reach a level that we think can cause damage, the computer sends out an audible warning," he said. Without this technology, doctors must rely on intuition and experience.

Sorab hopes to do a year-long clinical trial with the system. He said he'd also like to investigate the effects of the other methods used for shoulder dystocia.

Sorab's development of the sensor glove has already been awarded a silver medal in the James Lincoln Arc Welding Foundation's National Design Contest, the highest reward given to graduate students in mechanical engineering.

ATHLETICS Vs. ACADEMICS

Every university wants a strong athletic program, but some schools sacrifice academic integrity to get one. More than a few incidents exist of athletes who graduate from college without knowing how to read or write.

To prevent athletes from being "used" by colleges, the National Collegiate Athletic Association passed a bylaw, better known as Proposition 48, which mandates that athletes must score 700 on their SATs (or a 15 on the ACT) and have a 2.0 high school GPA to be eligible for competition in college sports. This pressures schools to either accept more qualified students or ensure athletes get educational assistance once they are enrolled.

Has Prop. 48 helped or hurt college athletes?

By Phil Favorite
■ Daily Illini
U. of Illinois, Champaign-Urbana

Marcus Liberty is widely considered the best overall amateur basketball player at his age in the world.

He is also a freshman at U. of Illinois, Champaign-Urbana, where he is ineligible to play under the guidelines of Proposition 48. The 6'8" graduate of Martin Luther King Jr. High School in Chicago failed to score a 15 on the ACT—which he took four times during the course of the year—despite scoring well above his high school's average ACT score and being considered a fine student.

Liberty's pursuit of eligibility began midway through his senior year with an involvement in extracurricular activities, including working with Athletes for Better Education and taking ACT preparation courses on weekends. Yet all this work was for nought, and he has missed his entire freshman year of basketball while battling for sophomore status.

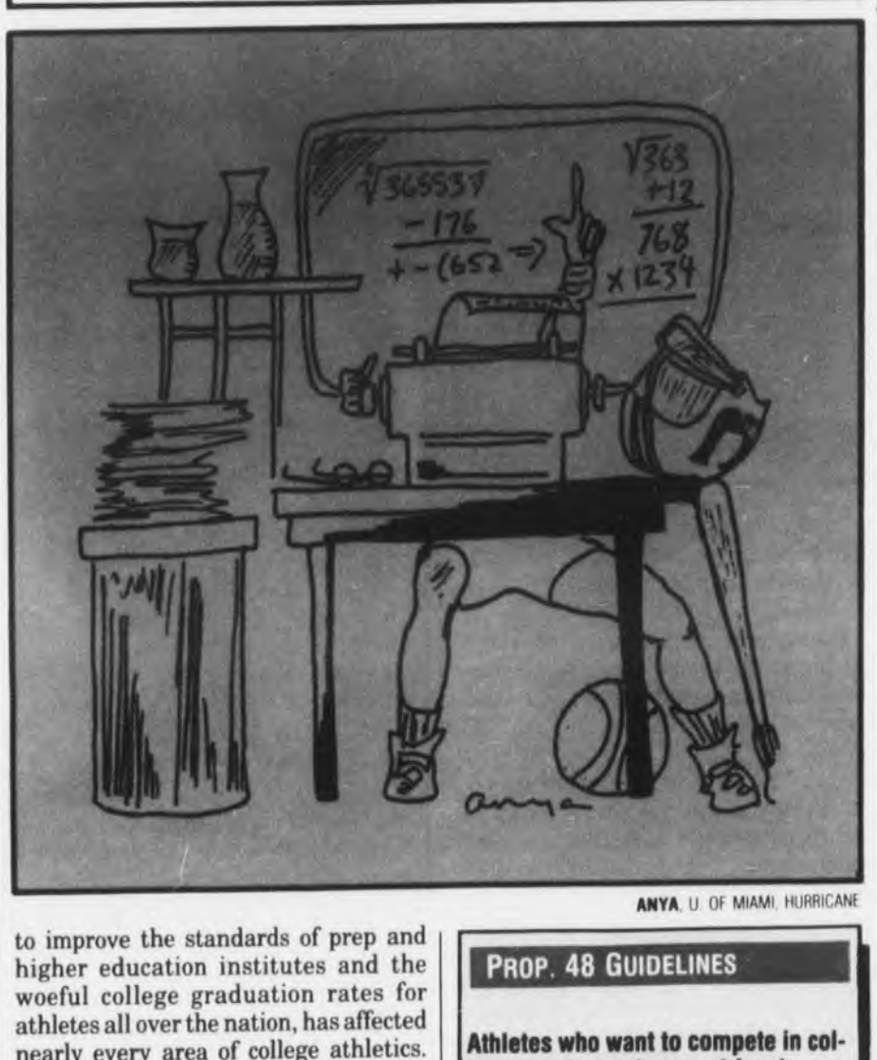
The saga of Marcus Liberty brought the effects of Prop. 48 to the attention of the university community. The NCAA bylaw, which was passed as a measure to improve the standards of prep and higher education institutes and the woeful college graduation rates for athletes all over the nation, has affected nearly every area of college athletics. More importantly it is helping to re-emphasize the students' work in the classroom.

A common argument and complaint of public school officials is that the tests are biased against minorities.

Of all the students who were ineligible for football in 1986, 85 percent were black, according to the Center for the Study of Sports in Society at Northeastern U. in Boston.

How have these statistics affected the state of college athletics? One way is in the area of recruiting, where the trend is moving away from the inner city and is dimming the outlook of kids who hoped to use athletics as a means for higher education.

"The average player is going to be hurting," said Illinois basketball coach Lou Henson. "Coaches are not going to recruit average players if they don't pass the test. The top player will be recruited."



Coaches and administrators around the country have suggested many changes in the bylaw to improve its effectiveness. Some think the minimum test scores should be lowered and the core requirements made more demanding.

But Larry Hawkins, head of the test preparation center at the U. of Chicago, said the root of the problem is much larger. "It's not only the coaches. It is a societal problem. The community should provide the hope and wherewithal to get the kids prepared."

Still, it all comes down to the ability to motivate students and students' ability to stay motivated.

"If you're 6'6" with a good build on you," Hawkins said, "and people have been telling you you're the best thing since bubble gum on your jump shot, and you have a problem with the (test preparation) program, are you going to stay in?

"Once a kid has gained the confidence to participate, he's taken the first step. The key is to get the youngsters to believe they can do it."

PROP. 48 GUIDELINES

Athletes who want to compete in college sports must earn at least:
- a 2.0 high school GPA and
- a 700 SAT score (or 15 on ACT).

They also fall into three categories:
- Qualifiers—meet all academic requirements;
- Partial qualifiers—meet either the SAT (or ACT) or the GPA requirement but not both, and may not compete in sports for a full year;
- Non-qualifiers—meet neither requirement and are not allowed to play.

Academics sold out for athletic success at UM

By Editorial Staff
■ The Miami Hurricane
U. of Miami, FL

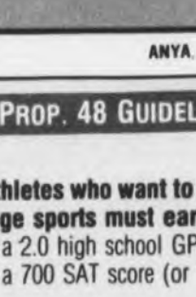
The Miami Hurricane is appalled at the recent announcement by U. of Miami (UM) President Edward T. Foote II that incoming students will not be required to pass the Freshman Institute, a tutoring program designed to increase marginal students' academic performance.

Foote's decision was based on athletics, not academics. Coaches feared athletes would not want to come to UM if they could easily flunk out. Quite simply, Foote sold out academic integrity for athletic success.

The decision provides little evidence that our university is truly doing all it can to increase its academic standing. If Foote really wanted UM to become a top-notch institution, he would never have even considered such a decision.

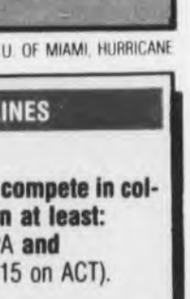
How can we attain the level of academic success Foote speaks of if we allow marginal students—many of whom cannot even read, write, or speak proper English—to gain admission to our university?

According to the University Bulletin, UM was founded with specific objectives, including, "to give its undergraduate students a broad, basic education, using the most advanced methods of instruction; and to give its graduate and professional students curricula that open up new frontiers and yet are broad enough in scope to offer a sound basis for the advancement of learning."



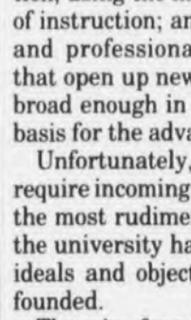
Unfortunately, by its recent failure to require incoming athletes to attain even the most rudimentary academic skills, the university has abandoned the high ideals and objectives on which it was founded.

The wise founders of this institution lived in a purer age, an era uncorrupted by the repulsiveness of big-time, revenue-generating college athletics. Today, however, in a time when television and bowl contracts dictate academic policy, such sanctity is hard to come by.

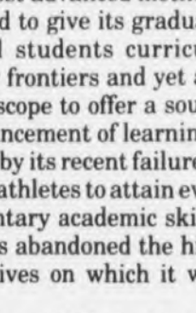


Athletic Director Sam Jankovich claims that Foote's decision is "a step in the right direction." The Miami Hurricane vehemently disagrees. We believe it is a giant step backward in the pursuit of academic excellence.

As long as UM continues to allow the academically disinclined to step foot on the playing field, and therefore into the classroom, talk of UM becoming a "Harvard of the South" will remain just that—talk.



CAN U. OF MIAMI MAINTAIN ACADEMIC AND ATHLETIC SUCCESS?



'It is possible, it has been done at other schools. With the new move for higher SAT scores, the players won't be able to keep up with superior students. They shouldn't have to be tutored if they are here.'
— SHANNON MCINTOSH, SENIOR

'We'll always be a competitive team. We'll recruit players and put them in the Freshman Institute. They'll sit out a year, get good grades and then play.'
— TONY SCIONTI, SOPHOMORE, EX-PLAYER

'Yes, I think we can still do well recruiting. They will do as well as you push them to do in high school.'
— CRAIG ERICKSON, FRESHMAN FOOTBALL PLAYER

'The University has to be more realistic. They do the University a service: publicity. They aren't part of the general student body. UM should do tutoring and whatever it can.'
— DEREK DOMINIC, FRESHMAN

Ivy League relaxes rules

After Columbia U.'s record 40-game losing streak, the Ivy League is allowing the school "to recruit students whose records would fall below the academic cutoff," said Norman Mintz, Columbia's executive vice president for academic affairs.

The variance from league standards, which was approved after the 1985 football season when the losing streak hit 21, admitted six players this year who took the freshman team to a 6-0 season, the first winning team in 13 years.

Students believe they won't get AIDS

By Kristen McCleary
■ The Guardian
U. of California, San Diego

From the condom vending machines in campus restrooms to the diminishing use of the phrase "one night stand" in college circles, it's becoming increasingly clear that the AIDS virus is having a significant impact on the U. of California, San Diego (UCSD) community.

Last spring, a student intern with the Student Health Service (SHS) decided to monitor and measure UCSD student attitudes toward AIDS as well as their knowledge of the disease. Susie Nyenhuis, a bio-chemistry major who has been a student health advocate for two years, spent the quarter planning and administering an AIDS awareness survey to 220 undergraduate students. Over the summer she compiled her data and analyzed the findings whereby, she explained, the "(SHS) could target groups of people who were misinformed and educate them (about AIDS)."

What Nyenhuis found was an attitude prevalent among college students which she refers to as the "immortality complex." Students "have a tendency to believe that things will always be as they are now. It's a short range thinking. It's difficult to educate people on things that they don't think will affect them," she said.

According to Nyenhuis, a persistence in the belief that AIDS is a "gay disease" and a belief by some that "those infected with the virus somehow deserve it" were existing and dangerous misconceptions. "There's a lot of homophobia out there, in society," she said.

Those found to be least informed about AIDS were college freshmen. To increase the flow of information, SHS put AIDS brochures into the dorm packets handed out at the beginning of the quarter. They also provide speakers to lecture on the issue at each dorm.

But the information alone is not enough to combat the spread of AIDS and assure student safety. Nyenhuis stressed that a change in behavior is the only way to avoid sexual contamination on a large scale, remarking that some of the people who were aware of the dangers of the disease still had more than one sexual partner and did not necessarily use condoms during sexual intercourse as a preventive measure. "There are over one million teen pregnancies every year. This shows two things. One, they are not using condoms and, two, they're not being responsible. AIDS can be spread through this population too easily," Nyenhuis said.

STEVE PICA, U. OF FLORIDA, ALLIGATOR

During college, people are at one of the highest risks of contracting the disease. The fastest growing group of AIDS patients has been identified as 24- to 29-year-olds. Given a 5-7 year latency period, this information means people are becoming infected and exposed to the virus from the ages 19-24—during college years. "The experimental attitude of college students combines with their immortality complex to make this a very dangerous age. (Students) gamble their lives in the heat of passion," she said.

Nyenhuis suggests that the best protection against AIDS remains abstinence, or a completely monogamous relationship, provided that neither partner has been exposed to the AIDS virus. "I don't think enough is said about abstinence. In younger age groups it shouldn't be stressed when you have sex, but rather it's a choice to have sex or not to have sex," Nyenhuis added.

Last March, the number of heterosexual AIDS cases equalled that of the homosexual population five years ago. The rapid spread of AIDS into this larger population group worries Nyenhuis. "I don't think people are going to change or listen seriously to what health educators say until AIDS becomes real to them. . . by then it will be too late."

verified AIDS case, 50 to 100 other people in the area are carriers.

No one knows for sure how many U. of Florida (UF) students, faculty or staff have AIDS. "That information is so confidential they don't even tell me," says Infirmary Director Richard Shaara.

Sources say two or three cases have been diagnosed at the Infirmary, but their status is "the best-kept secret" on campus. Shaara says that in the past, the Infirmary has had two other cases.

"One student went home and died," he said. "One UF employee left, and we don't know whether that person is still alive or not."

While those numbers may be scary, these are downright frightening:

- Within five years, Lee Strunin with the Boston School of Medicine predicts AIDS will become the leading cause of death for Americans between the ages of 20 and 29.
- Richard Keeling, chairman of the American College Health Association's AIDS task force, says, "a university of 20,000 students might expect to find about 170 AIDS virus carriers at the present time."
- Because the incubation period for AIDS is between 3 and 5 years (and sometimes as long as 10 years), UF Health Education Specialist Joanne Auth says college students who get the AIDS virus today may not show symptoms until after they graduate. Although Keeling says there are only 75 reported AIDS cases among the nation's college students, Auth and Shaara say the small number is not all that reassuring because college students engage in more "high-risk activities" than other people—they are more likely to experiment with IV drug use, homosexuality and other sexual activities.

The bottom line, health experts say, is that AIDS is no longer "the other person's disease."

Since statistics show 70 percent of all college students are sexually active, the best way for them to avoid AIDS is to practice safer sex—and get good at it.

Escaped convict surprises two students at home

By Mike Marzolf
■ University Leader
Fort Hays State U., KS

Darin Armstrong and Ron Storz, seniors at Fort Hays State U., were faced with a frightening situation the day that Gary Chastman escaped from the Gove County Police.

That evening, Armstrong and Storz heard a knock at the door of their house, around 11 p.m.

"We were watching TV, and they earlier had showed a picture of him," Armstrong said. "When we heard the knock, I jokingly told Ron, 'That's probably that convict.'"

Chastman put his foot in the door and asked if he could have a drink of water.

"When I came back with the water, he had sat down in a chair, and pretty much made himself at home," Armstrong said. "Then he started asking us questions, like where were we from and small talk like that."

Then Chastman asked a question they weren't ready for: Had they heard anything about an escapee that the police were looking for.

"We told him that we didn't because we were a little bit worried that he would get violent," Storz said.

Chastman had stolen some clothes from a garage sale and with the amount of clothing on, Armstrong said they could not tell if he had a gun.

Chastman proceeded to tell Armstrong and Storz who he was, and how he had escaped from the police.

"We continued to talk and he told us about his illegal action," Armstrong said, "from holding a lady at gunpoint to stealing an officer's gun and ammo in the squad car."

Chastman then asked if he could make a collect call.

"He called Ohio and seemed to be speaking to some relation," Storz said. "You could tell that whoever he was talking to was upset."

While Chastman was talking on the phone, Armstrong asked Storz, "If we should get some firepower, if you know what I mean?"

Storz said that they probably should.

While Chastman was still on the phone, Armstrong and Storz began talking loud enough for him to hear.

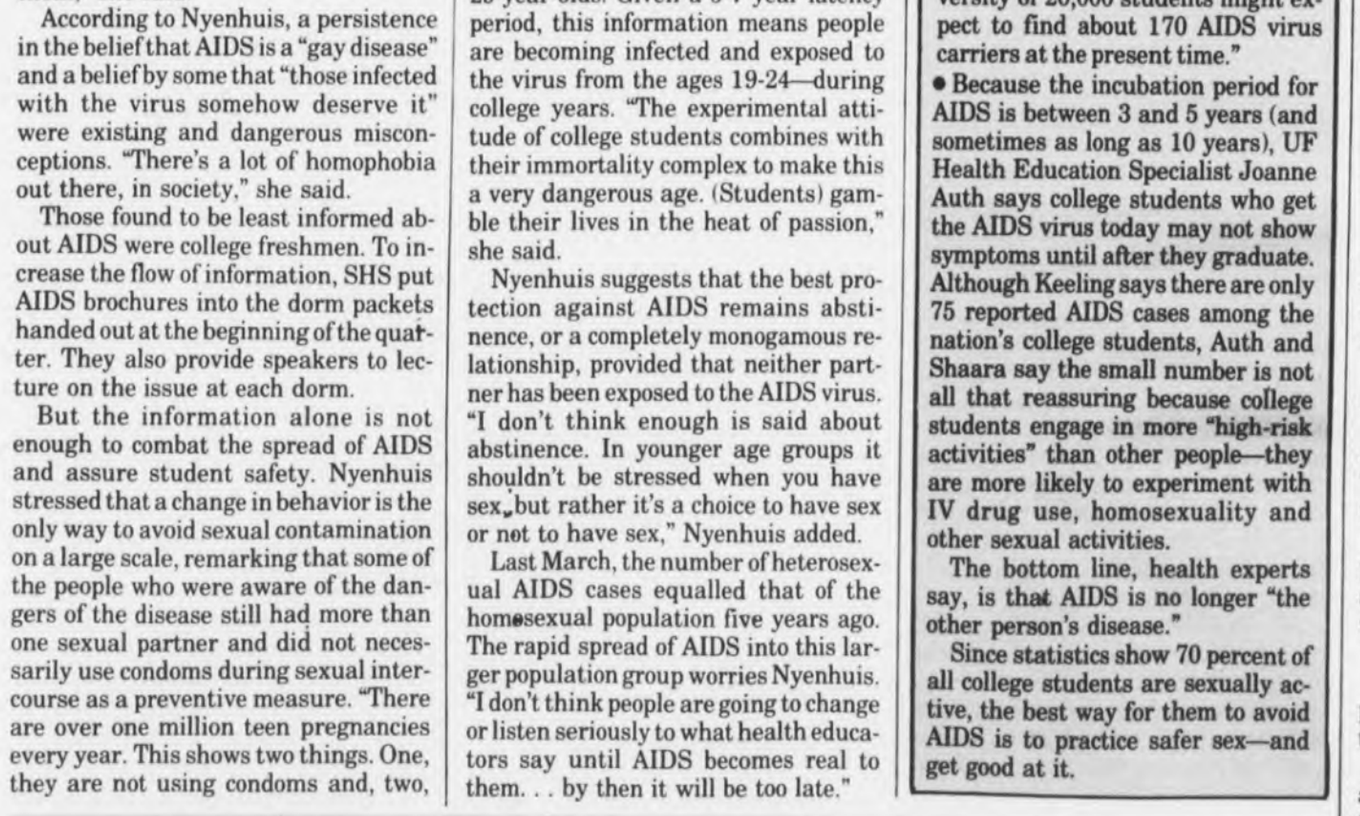
Armstrong asked Storz if they had any beer downstairs, and Storz replied that he would check.

Both Armstrong and Storz knew they had no beer.

While downstairs, Storz got out a box with a gun and ammunition in it and set it on a chair in the basement.

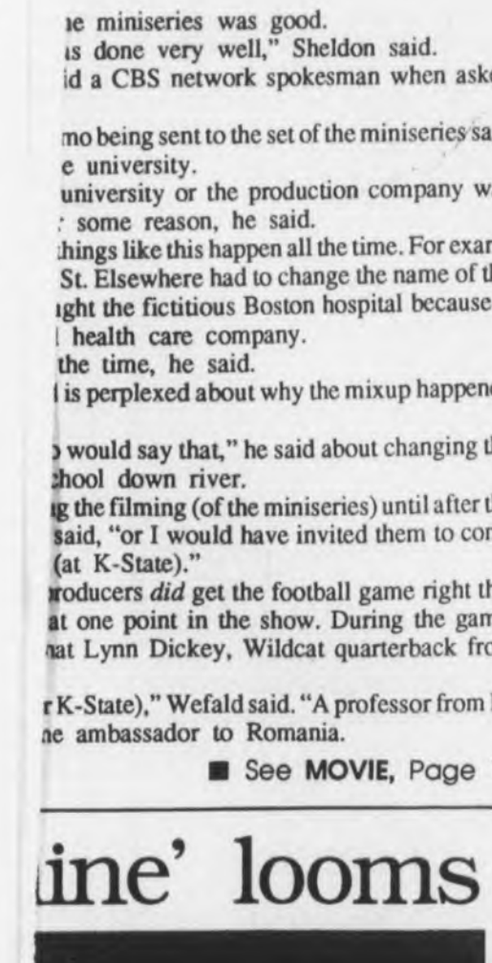
When Storz returned, he said that there was no beer and quietly told Armstrong that the box was on the chair.

Chastman finished his phone call and kept telling Armstrong and Storz how "cool" they were for not turning him in.



"He pulled out a .357 handgun which he had taken from the officer in the car," Armstrong said. "He also had his badge and approximately 17 rounds of ammunition.

"Then we heard a knock at the door," Armstrong said.



Chastman, startled by the knock, stood up immediately.

Armstrong put the gun and ammunition under the couch, and told Chast-

U. of Kansas prof teaches students how to stage a nuclear attack

By Michael Carolan
■ University Daily Kansan
U. of Kansas

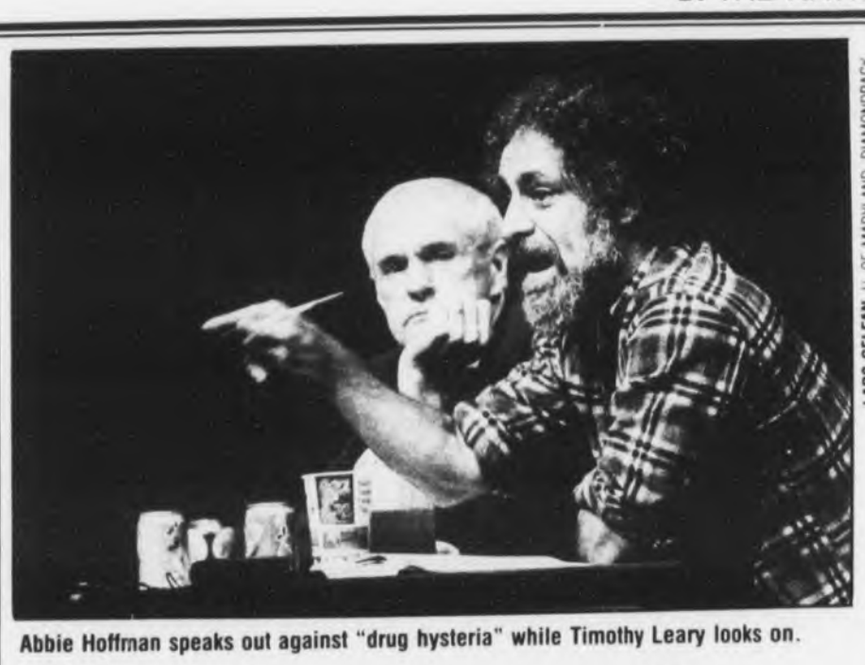
John O'Brien, professor of systematics and ecology, teaches students how to kill millions of people.

O'Brien's class, "Ecology of a Nuclear War," is planning a nuclear attack on the maior cities of the United States.

"We're simply playing a game on paper with 2 percent of the Soviet power and wiping out 10 percent of the U.S. population: that's not even including missiles under development," said class member Eric Ratzlaff.

Using a population and density list of the 100 most populated cities and a list of Soviet and U.S. weapons specifications, students calculate the greatest number of people they can kill using different configurations of weapons.

The course begins by explaining the nuts and bolts of nuclear technology and capabilities. The class discusses nuclear winter, fallout, how radiation affects food supply and the medical aspects of radiation.



O'Brien said that he wanted the class to think in what he calls grotesque terms.

"I really want to drive home what people mean when they say 'overkill,'" O'Brien said. Overkill denotes the use of weapons whose destructive capacity far exceeds what is needed to kill all the people in a given area.

O'Brien asks his students to plan two major nuclear attacks on the United States, getting as many civilian casualties as possible with a small percentage of the available Soviet arsenal. Projects later in the semester include bombing the Soviet Union's ground-based nuclear arsenal and organizing an arms reduction treaty.

O'Brien explained how to kill millions of people effectively, how submarine-launched ballistic missiles work in relation to satellites, and how the chain of command for nuclear attacks operates.

"There is a strange sense of humor in the class, a kind of demented sarcastic humor that makes the class interesting," senior Benjamin Frey said. "It's the kind of class people drop in on to see what's happening."

Abbie Hoffman speaks out against "drug hysteria" while Timothy Leary looks on.

Activists, proponents trade drug testing jabs

By Janet Naylor
■ The Diamondback
U. of Maryland

A boisterous crowd welcomed Timothy Leary and Yippie founder Abbie Hoffman during a two-hour lecture/debate at the U. of Maryland recently. The two activists traded jabs with Guardian Angels founder Curtis Sliwa and former Drug Enforcement Agency director Peter Bensinger.

Drug testing "is the most serious invasion of our privacy since the loyalty oaths of the 1950s," said Hoffman, author of Steal This Urine Test.

The book, with a title that plays on Hoffman's 1971 pro-drug, anti-government Steal This Book, criticizes the accuracy and effectiveness of the four most commonly used drug tests which he called "chemical McCarthyism."

"You are being led like blind sheep to drop your zipper for the Gipper," Hoffman said of President Reagan's pro-urine testing stand. "Just say no."

Bensinger, who heads a security consulting firm that advises companies considering testing programs, advocated mandatory random testing, adding that companies and agencies that do so are not "going on witch hunts."

Companies use drug tests to minimize safety hazards, increase productivity and promote their workers' health, Bensinger said, not to cure society's ills.

"Drug testing is no magic wand," he said. "It's best value is as a deterrent, as is the metal detector at the airport."

Leary, 67, criticized drug-testing proponents, saying the current "drug hysteria" could be attributed to "millenia madness" as Western society counts down to the year 2000.

Leary, who was banned from campus in 1966 while under impending criminal sentence, echoed Hoffman's concerns about drug-testing as an invasion of privacy.

But Sliwa, who formed the Guardian Angels in 1979 to patrol New York's crime-plagued subway system, said during his hellfire-and-brimstone style address, "What do you tell my classmates . . . who for years were dropping acid and suddenly they were swinging from a rope—suicide? How many other intelligent, young creatures of the inner city and the suburban and rural areas have we seen devasted, turned into walking Mr. Potato Heads, and you're all here cheering that kind of genocide?"

man that he could hide in the bedroom.

Storz answered the door. It was a girl that Storz and Armstrong knew.

Chastman came back in and Armstrong introduced the two.

Armstrong asked if anyone wanted a gin and tonic.

"I knew we were out of tonic water, but I pretended we might have some," Armstrong said.

Armstrong went downstairs and loaded the gun.

"I was shaking pretty bad when I was loading the gun," Armstrong said. "When I was coming up the stairs, I thought to myself, 'What if he had retrieved the gun from under the couch?'

"So I laid the gun on top of the stairwell and went back into the living room."

Armstrong explained that they were out of tonic water.

After asking if they would like to drink it straight, he fixed everyone a gin on the rocks.

"By this time, he was feeling pretty comfortable," Armstrong said. "When I went to make a second drink, I leaned down into the stairwell, picked up the gun and took it into the living room."

Chastman wasn't looking at Armstrong as he entered the living room. He had already cocked the gun before he came up the stairs earlier.

"He was looking away and didn't see me pointing the gun at him," Armstrong said. "I told him he had fucked up, and to get his ass on the ground, face first."

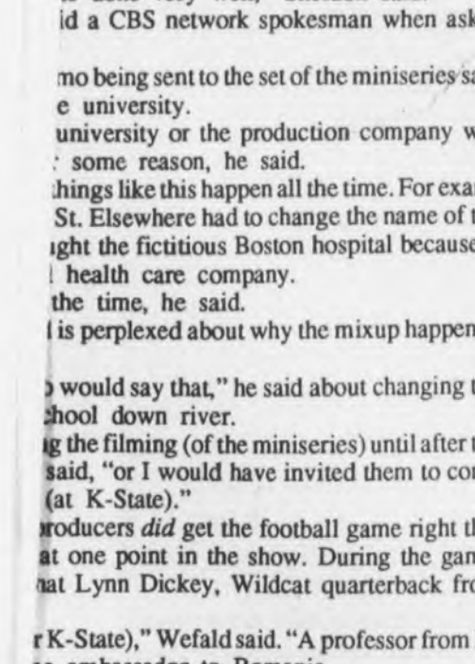
Chastman said it wasn't loaded.

"I told him the hell it ain't," Armstrong said.

After telling the girl to leave, Storz called 911.

"I had a little trouble with 911," Storz said. "I called once and it was busy."

Chastman got up slowly deciding whether to fall to the floor or just walk out.



Chastman slowly made his way to the door.

"He never did turn his back on me. He kept looking at me the whole time," Armstrong said. "He said, 'Go ahead and shoot me.' I just told him to get on the ground. I really couldn't shoot him."

Chastman stood outside until he saw the police coming.

"After the first cop arrived, there were police all over within a matter of 30 seconds," Storz said.

CHEATING: Student survey

said. "I just thought it would be in my best interest to be honest and admit to it.

"If someone were to come up to me with the same kind of situation as mine today, the bottom line is I would tell them not to (cheat)," he said. But if the person did decide to cheat, Steve said, "I would tell them to do whatever they had to do, or say whatever they had to say, to get out of it because the most important thing is to stay in school."

The university's discipline process begins with an instructor who believes a student is guilty of academic dishonesty. According to the university Code on Campus Affairs and Regulations Applying to All Students, the professor notifies the student and allows him or her reasonable time to respond to the allegation. The instructor then decides what action to take.

In Steve's case, the professor's recommendation for dismissal was a rare one. Rather than dealing with the complications of the disciplinary process (Steve's hearing lasted about three months), most professors opt to give the student a failing grade for the assignment or the course, said John Scouffus, executive director of the Student Senate Committee.

But behind every student that gets caught for cheating, there are many more who get away with it.

At least two university students admit to having someone take an exam for them without much of a flinch. One student had a friend take an exam for her so she could leave early for a semester break.

The other student, Joe, said he took a couple of math exams for his roommate.

"It's easy to cheat here," Joe said. "Probably because of the huge numbers of students."

In Joe's case, he and his roommate both took the exam. When it was over, Joe handed the exam to his roommate and left. The roommate threw his test away, went up to the proctor collecting the exams, showed his ID, handed in Joe's exam and left. It was that simple.

But because a friend of Joe's was dismissed for taking an exam for someone else, Joe says he will not take any more tests unless they are his own.

In all of these instances, the decision whether to cheat did not involve a question of right or wrong, but whether the student would get caught. At least a handful of administrators and professors believe this attitude is a reflection of the nation's values today.

"We are finding people lying and cheating all up and down our society," said economics Professor Marianne Ferber. "I mean we are seeing people on national television saying that they lied and people think they are national heroes."

"It's a question of ethics," Scouffus said. "I'm sure there's a lot of pressure on students to succeed especially in an atmosphere like ours where we are dealing with students who have very strong professional direction."

Engineering senior Ted said he would never cheat in a class in his major. For a class outside of the core curriculum, he may make a distinction.

Scouffus said, "This idea undermines the whole purpose of a college education. You must have an interest in more than your major. You can't be intellectually barren. If that's what you want, you should go to vocational school."

COMMENT AND OPINION

God plays campaign manager for no man

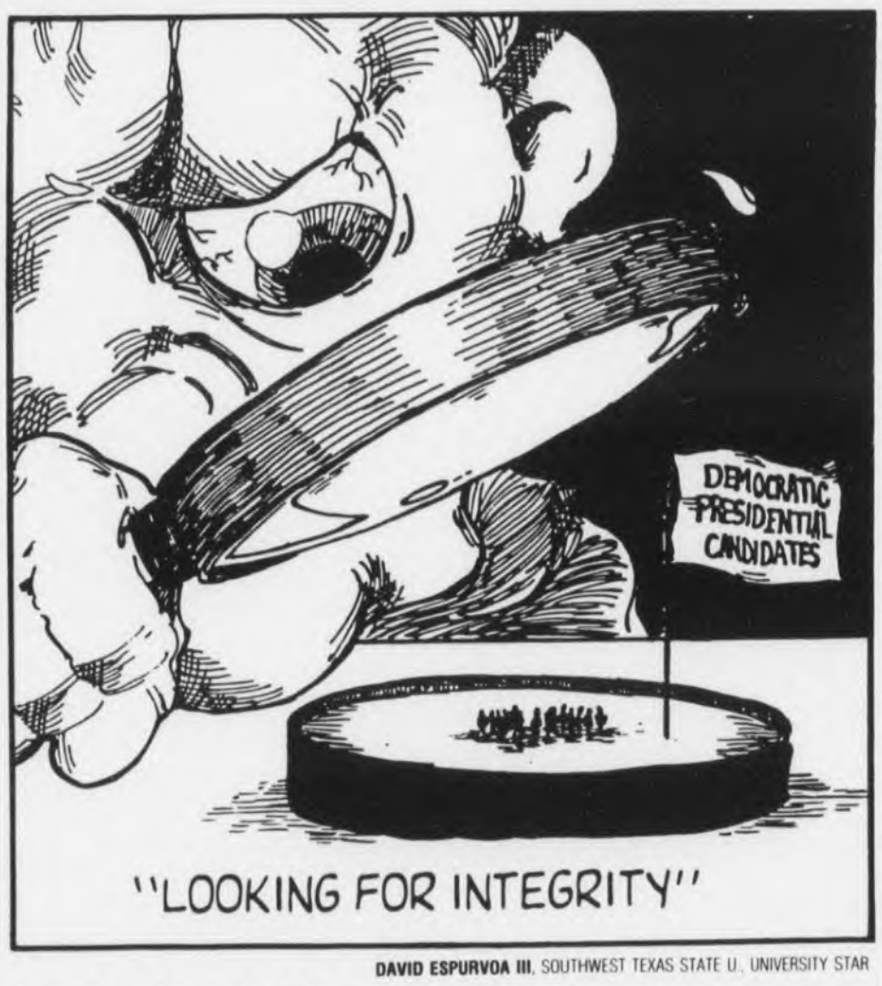
By Stephen Buckley
■ The Chronicle
Duke U., NC

Amid hand-clapping, foot-stomping and flag-waving, the Rev. Jesse Jackson formally announced his presidential candidacy Oct. 10.

That puts two ministers in the race. The week before Jackson's announcement, Republican candidate Pat Robertson, the former televangelist, was in New York asking an audience to give him a chance to "restore the industrial might of America through moral strength."

Technically, Robertson is no longer a minister: he resigned as president of the Christian Broadcasting Network and gave up his Southern Baptist ordination before making his candidacy official. And although "Rev." still precedes Jackson's name, the civil rights leader has been involved with political issues for more than two decades.

Yet, in the minds of most Americans, these men are tightly linked to their religious roles. They are still considered preachers.



Therein lies the problem. If Jackson and Robertson originally believed God wanted them to serve as ministers, what makes them think He changed His mind?

Neither man has ever held political office. Jackson supporters shrug off this fact, noting the minister's role as a preeminent civil rights leader and his efforts as a diplomat in recent years.

His supporters take us back to 1984, when Jackson brought captured American Navy pilot Robert Goodman home from Syria. They talk about how Jackson negotiated with Fidel Castro to free 48 American and Cuban prisoners. Jackson fans say just because Jesse has never been elected to political office does not mean he cannot deal with world leaders. And, the supporters add, Jackson ran for president in 1984.

As for Robertson, by hosting the Christian Broadcasting Network's popular program, "700 Club," he molded religion with politics for at least 10 years. He was never shy about letting his audience know he believes communism is an ungodly system and the Soviet Union is an evil empire. Robertson has been a vocal proponent of prayer in schools. He also has a law degree from Yale, and his father was a veteran Washington lawmaker.

Robertson and Jackson have each claimed to be God's choice in the '88 presidential election. Either God likes both men so much He can't decide who should get the job, or these men are listening to two different dieties.

DAVID ESPURVOA III, SOUTHWEST TEXAS STATE U., UNIVERSITY STAR

But Jackson and Robertson cannot erase the fact that neither has had a stitch of experience as an elected official. If a man has never represented a district, or a city or state, how can he expect the American public to trust him with an entire country?

Although Jackson has been more politician than preacher in recent years, he has not attempted to downplay his religious position. At the Rainbow Coalition convention, where he officially became a presidential candidate, he conducted the event like an old-fashioned revival meeting right down to the gospel music. Speakers were greeted with shouts of "Amen" and "Hallelujuh;" Jackson was repeatedly hailed as "God's servant."

Robertson probably will not hide his religious background either. Conservative Christians make up a good chunk of his support base, and he will no doubt want to continue to identify with them. After gaining his fame as a religious broadcaster, it would be unwise for Robertson to pretend his faith has not had a profound impact on his political philosophy.

Robertson and Jackson have each claimed to be God's choice in the '88 presidential election. That presents a problem. Either God likes both men so much He can't decide who should get the job, or these men are listening to two different dieties.

The presumption of these men leaves a foul taste in the mouth, for both obviously see God as a tool for political gain. Each would like us to believe God has endorsed him. The Lord is their shepherd; all they need now are votes.

This does not mean Jackson and Robertson are evil men. They both say they love this nation and believe their political plans would strengthen it. They seem to want the best for America, and that is commendable. Ministers should not squelch their political opinions.

There is nothing wrong with Jackson wanting "peace, jobs and justice," or with Robertson encouraging Americans to return to "fundamental moral values." But something is amiss when, after trying to effect change as ministers for most of their adult lives, these men suddenly feel "called" to be presidents.

Chances are, neither man's "calling" is correct. Although pundits and pollsters admit Jackson and Robertson will have an impact on the '88 elections, they say both candidates are presidential longshots.

Nevertheless, Jackson and Robertson are probably in the race to stay. Over the next year, it will be most interesting to watch them try to convince America they are viable candidates and not just preachers who would be king.

COLLEGIATE RACKET

What does society want? Knowlege or college degrees?

By Igor Greenwald
■ The Hoya
Georgetown U., DC

It seems to me that the college experience is really a rite of passage. It's kind of like giving the class bully your lunch money on the way to grammar school. Except, that is, that with my parent's 60-plus grand in its pocket, Georgetown can really go wild on the gravy.

Is the modern college education really worth the price we pay for it?

We can all make up our own minds about this question. Unfortunately, however, those of us who find it a waste of cash and effort cannot act in any way upon that judgment.

A formal university education was once considered a luxury for those people who were not destined to work. Now, however, it has become a requirement for those who must find a career. What is required here is not knowledge; contrary to popular belief, no magic fount of enlightenment flows at the Registrar's Office.

No, gainful employment requires so many credits and a framed receipt for payment of a mid-sized fortune to an education factory.

The college industry no longer pretends to be training its students for the job market. That is hard to do now when medieval literature majors go to work for Citibank alongside their business school colleagues. Instead, colleges regurgitate the standard fare on their glitzy, colorized brochures: the importance of a liberal arts education.

I happen to agree with this premise, but I do not believe that the university is the best place to get it. First, finding a link between credit hours and a liberal education can be daunting. And, while lectures and exams may be great for teaching biochemistry, they do not help create Renaissance Men and Women. At best, for my $12,000 a year, Georgetown provides me with a useful reading list.

Since universities, with the obvious exception of technical fields, provide no professional training, they serve as one way to "broaden our intellectual horizons," to quote the brochures and tour guides. But they are hardly the only way. So, what does society want: knowledge or degrees?

If you don't already know the answer, walk to the nearest bank. Explain to the personnel manager that you have read the complete works of Smith, Keynes and Friedman. Then, recite from memory U.S. banking laws. Ask if he will hire you, and count the number of

Woodward reveals more of Casey's knowledge

By David Burke
■ University Leader
Fort Hays State U., KS

We have all heard that in Bob Woodward's book Veil: The Secret Wars of the CIA, the late Central Intelligence Agency Director William Casey said he knew all about the Iran-Contra funds diversion.

Veteran Watergate reporter Woodward asked Casey if he knew about the diversion.

He did.

But how did he know?

According to Woodward, Casey simply said, "I believed" before he nodded off to sleep.

Remember, he was in Reagan's cabinet.

However, knowledge of the diversion wasn't all the former CIA director knew.

In a sequel to Veil, Woodward's upcoming book, One-Thousand-and-One Things Bill Casey Knew and Didn't Tell You, he reveals many of the other things Casey never told us.

In the book, due later this year, Casey discloses facts that only he knew, including:

TODD CONDRON U OF PITTSBURGH, PA. PITT NEWS

- The complete lyrics to "Louie, Louie."
- The seven-herbs-and-spices in Kentucky Fried Chicken.
- All of the "Final Jeopardy!" questions since 1973.
- The plots for the next 10 years of "Days of Our Lives."
- What Michael Jackson wanted to do with The Elephant Man's body. And why Michael looks more like his sister Janet than she does.
- What Mister Rogers keeps in his sweater pockets.
- That there were words to the theme song of "Hawaii Five-O."
- How many licks it takes to get to the center of a Tootsie Roll Tootsie Pop.
- The secret CIA vault containing socks lost in laundromats throughout the eastern seaboard.
- That through a mysterious time-space travel system, John F. Kennedy, Robert Kennedy, Franklin Delano Roosevelt and Winston Churchill stole their speeches from Joseph Biden.
- The whereabouts of the cast of "The Brady Bunch."
- The American Top 40, countin' 'em down every week, from No. 40, right on through to No. 1 (Oops, wrong Casey.)
- The reason hospital gowns are open three feet wide in the back.

Yes, with all that William Casey knew, he could have written a book.

And Bob Woodward already did.

Changing the face of currency is a high-dollar idea

By Ed Schubert
■ State Press
Arizona State U.

Next time you cash your paycheck, take a close look at the various bills the teller hands you. Look at the faces on the currency: Grant, Jackson, Hamilton. So?

Well, we pretty much accept the fact that there exists within our culture certain vestigial traits of the bad old days when white males—especially white Anglo-Saxon Protestant males—lorded it over everyone else; and blacks, Hispanics, women and others suffered varying degrees of discrimination, persecution and worse.

With all due respect to Washington, Franklin, et al., it seems that the fact that all the national heroes on our currency are white males might inadvertently and subliminally be sending the wrong kind of message, viz., that the contribution of one privileged group within our population is somehow superior to all others.

The purpose of this column is to suggest the need for currency reform. Just for the hell of it, here's how one columnist thinks our currency should look:

- For the face of the $1 bill, I nominate Amelia Earhart. Who can think of a better symbol of American courage, enterprise and vision? For the back of the bill, a famous photograph comes to mind: Earhart's Lockheed Electra soaring above the Golden Gate Bridge.
- For the $2 and $5 bills, I couldn't bear to part with Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln. But on the back of the $2 bill, let's crop that picture of the signing of the Declaration of Independence to make room for some of it's words: "We hold these truths to be self evident...."

People like to read what's printed on currency. Why not use money to transmit some of the most eloquent statements of our democratic principles?

The same with the $5 bill: Keep Abe on the front, but on the back have, perhaps, an artist's representation of the Gettysburg battlefield the day after it was all over, with the words of the Gettysburg Address printed above. (The print would have to be pretty small, but I think people could squint.)

- For the $10 bill: Martin Luther King, Jr. On the back: The Lincoln Memorial—but from a distance, and on the day of the 1963 demonstration for racial equality. Include excerpts from Dr. King's speech that day: "I have a dream that one day on the red hills of Georgia the sons of former slaves and the sons of former slaveowners will be able to sit down together at the table of brotherhood."
- For the $20 bill: Away with Andrew Jackson, America's most overrated president. In his place, let's select a representative of the people he so hated and persecuted: the American Indian.

But who: Cochise? Sitting Bull? Sequoyah? Crazy Horse?

I nominate Sacajawea, the Shoshoni woman who guided Lewis and Clark across the continent, as a symbol of the infancy of the Republic. And for the back, an unspoiled landscape to use as a backdrop for Chief Joseph's incomparable plea for democracy:

"Treat all men alike. Give them all the same law. Give them all an even chance to live and grow. All men were made by the same Great Spirit Chief. They are all brothers. The earth is the mother of all people, and all people should have equal rights upon it...Let me be a free man—free to travel, free to stop, free to work, free to trade...free to choose my own teachers, free to follow the religion of my fathers, free to think and talk and act for myself—and I will obey every law, or submit to the penalty."

- For the $50 bill, I would like to see Albert Einstein. He certainly symbolizes just how much an immigrant can achieve in a nation where patriotism is not based on blood but on shared democratic and egalitarian values.

On the back, a grim reminder: a view of Hiroshima after the first nuclear attack. Above the ruined city, Einstein's warning: "With the splitting of the atom, everything has changed save our modes of thinking, and we drift toward unparalleled catastrophe."

- Finally, I think the face of the $100 bill should belong to Father Francisco Kino. One of the first explorers to reach Arizona, Father Kino was dedicated to both God and science. An expert in agriculture and animal husbandry, he actually made a positive contribution to the lives of the native Arizonans he encountered.

And on the back, personally, I would like to see the southern Arizona landscape which Kino knew and no doubt loved.

Racket

seconds before you are politely urged to produce your college diploma.

Many of my friends relish the academic experience offered by Georgetown. But there are others on campus for whom the four years here amount to little more than a financial shakedown. American universities make no distinction between the two groups, to the detriment of both.

In a better world, I would never have set foot on a college campus. That would be reserved for those who value the academic life or others who desire the benefit of a "formal" education. And, all of us entering the employment marketplace would be judged by what we know, not how we learned it.

In order for that to come about, colleges should give up what they never should have taken on in the first place: the task of certifying one's fitness to work. Their strong suit is teaching and learning, not issuing degrees in everything from nursing to corporate raiding.

If universities stopped handing out pretty little diplomas, the burden of selecting qualified employees would fall on companies and institutions, some of which would specialize in that task. There would be no requirements, no majors. You could pay for as many courses as you want and could start looking for a job as soon as you feel ready. Such a nice dream.

In the decade of declining enrollments, universities are unlikely to allow anyone to slip through their fingers without paying the full fee. This is why they resemble a bunch of New Jersey mob enforcers, patiently explaining to yet another bar owner the benefits of paying tuition...or...protection money. Such a nice racket.

Tough new law cuts GSLs

Students face hard times

By Michelle Allen
■ The Daily Kent Stater
Kent State U., OH

Experts from the U.S. Department of Education project a 15 percent reduction in the number of GSLs awarded to undergraduates and 25 percent for graduate students, according to the Chronicle of Higher Education.

In 1986, Edward Irish, former Kent State associate director of Student Financial Aid, conducted a study on the impact the 1986 Higher Education Amendment would have on the GSL program at Kent State.

Last year 6,571 students received GSLs. The study projects that of that same number, 3,749 students will receive reduced GSLs. Of these 3,749 students, 806 will not be eligible for any GSL. Last year Kent State certified a total of $13,000,160 in GSLs. This year, according to the study and the associate director of Student Financial Aid Theodore Hallenbeck, KSU is projected to certify $3,087,823 less.

Kent State administrators were anticipating reductions in loans since Congress made changes last year, but few students were prepared for the cuts.

Shelly Wilson, 19, a junior interior design major, lost $2,300 of her GSL this year. Wilson has received the maximum amount available, $2,500, for the past two years. This year she is eligible for only $200.

"My family is struggling to keep me in school," she said. "Two hundred dollars won't even buy my books."

Speculating about why her GSL was so dramatically reduced, Wilson said, "I guess it is due to the new laws considering parents' assets when calculating how much families can pay for college.

"We're not rich. We bought a new house which is highly valued and this took my GSL away. Being an out-of-state student, I need the financial aid even more."

According to an article in the Congressional Quarterly, congressional aides say lawmakers cut the number of students eligible for loans when revising the Higher Education law in an effort to curb the loan program's growing cost.

'Laid back dude' rents mini fridges

RICHARD O'ROURKE, U. OF CALIFORNIA, SANTA BARBARA, DAILY NEXUS

Greg Wadley hates normal jobs, so he began his own refrigerator rental service.

By Sarah Stettler
■ Daily Nexus
U. of California, Santa Barbara

"I like to go out with my friends. I like to get wild. But—I don't know. Sometimes my brain just won't stop thinking about it—ways to try to make money. Everything I see—it's like psychotic," U. of California, Santa Barbara sophomore Greg Wadley said.

Wadley surfs, he parties, he's into sports—but there is something different about him. He has a certain entrepreneurial air.

Wadley's motivation comes from a fierce sense of independence combined with a marked distaste for the ordinary. "I hate working for hourly wages. Whenever I get a job, I end up hating it within three weeks."

He also has an eye for opportunity. "You see something that works in another town, something that you might need, then other people need it too," he said. When asked about his apparent preoccupation with devising new ways of making money, Wadley said, "It doesn't really bother me that much. It just gets out of hand sometimes when it's (money) the only thing I can think about. It usually goes away. A few beers and it goes away."

At Francisco Torres dorm, where Wadley lived last year as a freshman, there was a large demand for dorm refrigerators but a small supply. The refrigerators F.T. offered for rent were also "really expensive" and the students had to transport them to and from their rooms on their own, Wadley said. So he bought 10 dorm fridges from a refrigerator distributor. He posted signs and waited, but not for long. At $65 per year, plus a $15 returnable deposit, his hunch was right on the money—the service was appealing, especially to cost-conscious freshmen who didn't want to deal with F.T.'s system.

His refrigerators were newer, cheaper and he offered drop-off and pick-up service. He arranged a maintenance agreement with a private company, rented a truck to transport the refrigerators, and delivered them to waiting customers within a few days of their order.

After the students were done with his refrigerators in June, he retrieved them with few problems. The only difficulty arose during finals, when Wadley found himself sharing his tiny dorm room

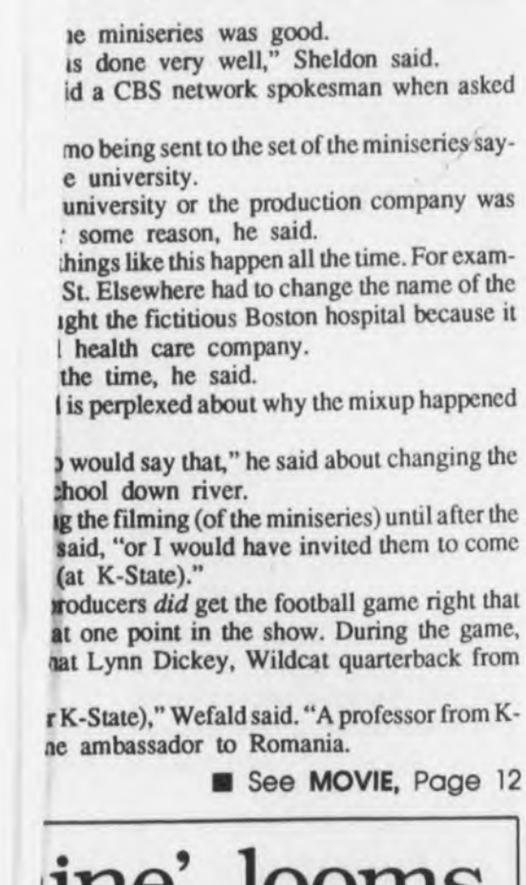
Professor's offer gets an 'F'

By Editorial Staff
■ Columbia Spectator
Columbia U., NY



Adjunct Business School Professor Asher Edelman thought students in his corporate merger class needed a little something to fire them up about the coursework. So Edelman, one of Wall Street's leading raiders, came up with the perfect incentive: a $100,000 finder's fee to a student who could come up with a suitable corporation for Edelman to take over. Great, right? Now there's a real reason to hit those books. But then that stodgy old B-School Dean John Burton began to rain on the money parade. "Totally inappropriate," he said, forbidding the reward. And Edelman's unhappy students had to go back to grubbing for grades instead of money.

What's the problem, some students ask? Incentives like Edelman's are part of the real world of business, and they have a legitimate teaching role in the graduate program. But the question is whether an academic institution should be reinforcing the seedy Wall Street sentiment that money-chasing—rather than corporate efficiency, worker satisfaction or increased productivity—is the summum bonum of business enterprise. Edelman's offer perpetuates a flawed and dangerous notion—that the only things worth doing right are those that pay off big.

Even The New York Times sees Burton's insistence on "academic purity" as unreasonably idealistic—especially at the B-School, where making money the new-fangled way is the raison d'etre. But if you can't advocate ideals in the university setting, where can you? The goals of classroom learning must be broader and more ethically sound than the goals of the average Wall Street grind.

The business program, however closely linked to Wall Street, has a responsibility to teach not only what is, but what should be. No one expects professors training students for the cut-throat world of business to be ivory tower idealists. But the B-School remains an academic institution, and some academic conventions must be respected—like the very basic idea that professors don't pay their students for in-class performance. Stodgy old Dean Burton was right.

Debt big headache for med students

By Mary Neil Westbrook
■ Daily Nebraskan
U. of Nebraska-Lincoln

The number of applicants to medical schools in Nebraska and the number of pre-medicine majors at the U. of Nebraska-Lincoln (UN) are declining, possibly because students have become disillusioned and because of the high amount of debt many students accumulate, officials say.

"Medicine is not as fulfilling or rewarding as it used to be," said Robert Waldman, dean of the College of Medicine at the University of Nebraska Medical Center in Omaha.

Health maintenance organizations, government intervention and malpractice suits are invading what had been an independent profession, he said. This makes doctors think that people don't appreciate them anymore, he said.

The number of pre-med majors at UN dropped from 360 in 1984 to 284 in 1987 and the number of pre-dental majors dropped from 88 in 1984 to 47 in 1987.

Students are looking for alternative careers which "pay off" earlier, Waldman said. "If you graduate with an MBA, the perception is that you can go to Wall Street and make a million," he said.

Nationally, medical students owe $35,000 upon graduation. An average UNMC student's debt is about $24,000, he said.

U.S. MED SCHOOL FACTS

Year	Apply	Accepts	Grads
1984-85	35,944	17,194	16,318
1985-86	32,893	17,288	16,117
1986-87	31,323	17,092	15,830
1987-88	28,123	17,027	——

Jim Eudy, a freshman in the College of Dentistry, said students must measure their desire to become a health professional against the sacrifices they will have to make, especially in social life.

The time commitment and debt probably deter students who would study medicine or dentistry, but he said he's willing to sacrifice these things to "help meet the health care needs of the community."

Waldman said the scenario of hanging up a shingle, being self-employed and living happily ever after is gone, partly because of government intervention and a lack of confidence in the profession.

"People don't have the same respect for the health profession," he said. Patients are getting second opinions and suing more often, he said.

As for applicants, Waldman said, "If it weren't for women, the number of applications would be down even farther. The number of male applicants (to the College of Medicine) has declined markedly while women's are going up."

Even though the number of applications to medical schools has declined in the past years, Waldman said, a student graduating from a medical or dental school shouldn't have any problems finding a job.

Ambition takes cadet sky-high

By C.D. Giddens

U. of Texas, Arlington

Getting into pilot training is tough for anybody. Cadet 1st Lt. Kathy Luken overcame a myriad of obstacles to earn her place.

Her ambition has led to the 25-year-old junior's selection for the Air Force Pilot Training Program. Luken was chosen for one of 60 slots from approximately 1,600 female candidates, and she will begin training following graduation.

"It was a dream that was always in the back of my mind," she said. "I didn't really expect it to happen.

"My only regret is that my dad can't see all this happening for me now," she said. He died recently of a heart attack.

"He was my best friend. He was the one who encouraged me through school, and when I'd say, 'I'm dreaming, there's no way I can do this,' he'd say, 'Sure you can.'

"First I changed my major (from aerospace engineering to exercise physiology), which they really don't like. But you cannot go through an engineering degree and work, or you won't graduate until you're 40. To qualify for pilot training, a candidate must graduate by age 26 and a half."

The age requirement also pushed her to cram two years of Air Force ROTC training into one.

"But they don't put you up for pilot training until they see how well you do in camp. And you really have to be the cream of the female crop to get in. In fact, you have to be better than most of the males."

"Camp" is AFROTC's version of basic training, an intensive four-week crash course in management, leadership and stress skills. Luken prepared extensively, working out with friends in a Marine ROTC unit.

Luken stuck with it, and earned the Vice Commandant's Award, the second highest honor given in a training class. "It was the Vice Commandant's Award that got me the pilot allocation," she said.

She also topped her class on the physical fitness test, scoring a 495 out of a possible 500. Her closest competition was a male cadet who scored 492. "We had a lot of jocks," she said, "and this guy comes and puts his arm around me and says, 'Hey, if we had kids they'd be supermen.' I told him, 'Dream on, buddy.' "

Students looking for bucks, go after jobs in finance

By Sheryl Kahn
■ The Daily Orange
Syracuse U., NY

Students graduating from Syracuse U. are pursuing careers that involve financial wheeling and dealing, said Charles Reutilinger, assistant director of the Placement Center.

"High finance has captured the imagination," Reutilinger said.

The once popular computer science field is also taking a back seat to finance, he added. "Computers are the future, but too many students rushed into the field. Supply outweighed demand."

Even journalism and health science students are incorporating finance into their job goals, Reutilinger said.

"Medical students want jobs as hospital administrators," he said. "Journalism majors want to manage publications and broadcasting stations. The 80s student wants a piece of the pie."

But high-paying jobs are scarce and students may find themselves unemployed if they have unrealistic ambitions, he added. Students should research their chosen field and assess their ability to get a job based on experience, scholarship and talent, he added. "The 80s is an extremely competitive decade. No matter how good you think you are, there are a number of other students who are just as good, if not better."

Colleges are encouraging students to make themselves more desirable to employers by training early in paid and unpaid internships, volunteer work and campus groups, Reutilinger said. "Students should build up their resume as much as possible. Employers like to see a student who's involved and works above and beyond the call of duty."

Public communications majors should focus on getting media-related experience. "Sure a 4.0 GPA doesn't hurt, but newspapers and TV stations like to see clips. You can learn a great deal in the classroom, but you have to practice what you've learned in the real world."

However, accounting, architecture and fine arts students are judged on their academic records, he said. "In these fields, the grade point average is a reflection of their work and experience."

Education is the most rewarding career of the 80s with immediate job openings, he added. "There is a crying need for teachers in all subjects and the pay is wonderful, with top salaries reaching $50,000 a year."

However, most students entering the job market list glamour, money and excitement as important factors in a career. Reutilinger said, "You can face the facts or the fantasy. There aren't too many overnight sensations in this world. Just hard workers and planners."

Business: Grass is greener for golfers

By Michael Faehner and Matt Crowley
■ The Observer
Case Western Reserve U., OH

Who ever said businessmen play golf for fun?

Contrary to what many non-golfers think, a great deal of work can be accomplished by "beating the little white ball."

The rationalizations for taking a business client out for the day take many turns.

The peaceful environment tends to relax both the client and the host. The lack of a sterile business office with its air of bureaucracy allows the two associates to see things in a more agreeable light. And the client is more likely to see the host as being up to par with him.

Some companies recognize the importance of golf in a business relationship. They have gone as far as to sponsor annual golf tournaments where the stakes are very high. They will go to such extremes as to offer a new Camaro, as one brokerage firm did, or even a new home for clients who get a hole-in-one.

The thrill of competition can help inspire a cooperative nature in the client, allowing some serious work to be accomplished. The desire to get a birdie or even an eagle usually is transferred to the deal at hand.

It is not uncommon for a sharp player to help his client's game out with a few pointers on his swing or putting in order to seal a deal. Some hosts even "throw" their games, concentrating instead on teeing off on the deal.

In essence, golf is necessary for all up and coming executives. What seems like a pointless pursuit in chasing balls around several thousand yards of water, sand and rough actually is the best method of closing the "Big Deal."

PERSONAL FINANCE

Why slum it when you can budget?

By Phoenicia Miracle
■ College Heights Herald
Western Kentucky U.

Each year students take out loans, receive grants, have their parents send them money and search for part-time jobs—all in an attempt to get money.

But once they get the money, some students don't know how to make it last.

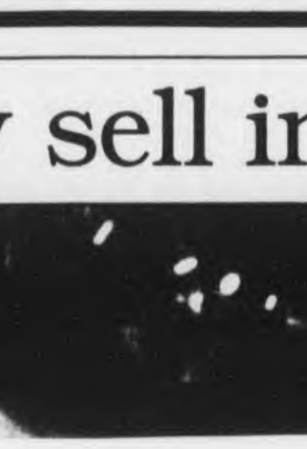
"If you want to have choices, you've got to have a budget," said Peggy Keck, a personal finance instructor.

To form a budget, students need to decide what expenses they will have besides their room, board and tuition. If not sure of all the expenses, students should keep a list of everything they spend their money on for at least one week. This way they can categorize their expenses, said Craig Heller, chairman of the Kentucky Society of Certified Public Accountants.

After the costs for all items are tallied, 10 percent should be added to the budget in case the figures were underestimated.

The student should total all sources of income. If expenses cannot be covered by the income, students have to increase the income or decrease spending.

Many students do not have a written budget but keep a mental calculation of their incomes and expenses.



Senior Glen Stikeleather said he doesn't have a budget. He said he keeps account of his money on a weekly basis.

"I just try to keep in mind how much money I have in my account," he said. "I consider whether I really need something or whether I just want it."

Graduate student Mike Nichols said he doesn't keep a budget either. "I just keep an idea of how much money I have and try to think ahead."

Nichols said he receives his money from his parents in one lump sum. Because he doesn't have a budget, he said, "I may go hungry the last part of the semester."

Junior Melissa Hester plans a budget for each week.

MELISSA HESTER: Plans weekly budgets

MIKE NICHOLS: Thinks ahead; may go hungry

HEATHER STONE WESTERN KENTUCKY U

GLEN STIKELEATHER: Thinks need or want

"I've got to have a budget. I've got payments each week," Hester said. "I always pay my bills first."

There are a couple of ways to stick to a budget, said Heller.

"A method that may work for some is to set aside the money in a certain bank account and only check it out for a certain amount of time," he said.

The amount of a student's resources and income should have nothing to do with whether or not the student forms a budget, said Certified Public Accountant Kim Kirby. "I think that it is important for everyone to have a budget . . . to be able to manage his cash flow."

The ABC's of getting credit

By Cynthia Williams
■ College Heights Herald
Western Kentucky U.

Getting credit can be exasperating.

It's hard to get credit unless you already owe somebody.

It's a Catch-22.

When students apply for loans or credit cards, they're likely to find that having a blank history makes that first loan or major credit card hard to get.

Long or short, good or bad, a person's credit rating will be consulted every time a loan is needed or a credit card is applied for. Lou Sepulueda, manager of the Credit Bureau in Bowling Green, said the information is provided by credit granters—banks, department stores and credit card companies. Included is information about monthly payments and how they are managed.

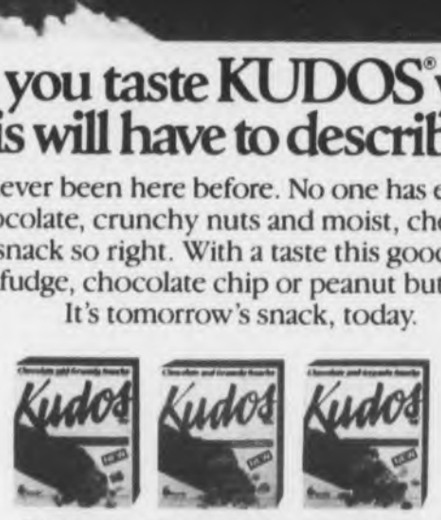
To begin a credit rating, Sepulueda suggested opening a checking or savings account at a bank.

"This will establish you at the bank," he said, "but they are seldom reported to a credit bureau."

Sepulueda recommends always making loan payments on the first deadline rather than using grace periods allowed for late payments.

Major credit cards may be difficult for students to obtain because they require a regular income.

But department stores issue cards to students, and J.C. Penney and Sears often have special promotions to encourage students to apply for cards. Sepulueda said the department stores report to credit bureaus, thus getting the student's credit history started.



"The trick with credit is to never overextend yourself," Sepulueda said. "Once you have messed up your credit, it will remain on your credit rating for seven years."

If the computer screen shows major credit cards at their limit, late loan payments or even too many active accounts, you may be turned down, he said.

Until you taste KUDOS® yourself this will have to describe it.

You've never been here before. No one has ever put rich milk chocolate, crunchy nuts and moist, chewy granola into a snack so right. With a taste this good. In nutty fudge, chocolate chip or peanut butter.

Tuition Problems? Try this... Mike Hayes' tuition problems came to a halt when he received $23,000 in small change shortly after Chicago Tribune columnist Bob Greene asked each of his readers to send a penny to Hayes so he could continue going to college. People explained why they responded. A Mexican immigrant said she admired his spirit because it typified America. A family wrote that their son died before he got to college. And some wrote, "See to it that Bob Greene prints your grades." Hayes, an Illinois-Champaign freshman chemistry major, says he feels "an extra incentive to do well" for his investors. ■ Ricky Young, Daily Northwestern, Northwestern U., IL

Student amigos go to work in Latin America... Brian Grimm, a senior at Kent State U. spent last summer working on a community sanitation project in Ecuador. These students were all volunteers for Amigos de las Americas, a private, non-profit organization that sends volunteers to several Latin American countries for public health projects. Amigos has since sent over 10,000 volunteers to Central and South America. Volunteers receive training in Spanish, Latin American culture, first aid and CPR, and participate in the fundraising which finances the trip. "You get to see a different side of the culture ... Student with NYPIRG slows down taxi drivers... One Albany taxicab driver should be kicking himself for taking the wrong person for a ride. Freshman Andrew Greenblatt with a group of SUNYA students took a cab from a downtown bus station to the uptown campus. Each student was charged $3. Though he paid the excessive charge with protest, Greenblatt felt the high prices merited investigation. The then-student volunteer at SUNYA's New York Public Interest Group (NYPIRG) headed a project through the group examining Albany taxi rates.

The results, gathered through surveys and field investigation, created quite a media uproar when they charged local taxis with consistently overcharging their riders, especially students. The story hit the local papers, radio and television stations. Not bad for a freshman. And his next project? Corrupt politicians and campaign funding. What else? ■ Roderick M. Big buddies learn by sharing

By Susan Garman
■ The Eagle
American U., D.C.

Twice a week the Big Buddy Program at American U. (AU) brings 15 fourth, fifth and sixth graders to spend an afternoon with AU students doing homework, playing games and learning a little bit about life outside their neighborhood.

Begun 15 years ago as a tutorial program, Big Buddy has come to offer something more than help with homework. The 30 inner-city schoolchildren who participate in the program have each found a special friend at AU whom they can count on and trust.

Eleven-year-old Decondi has already decided to call AU junior Paul Scheiman his big brother. As the oldest in his family, Decondi wants someone older who he can turn to for answers, Scheiman said. Also an oldest child, he says he can understand Decondi's need.

The most important thing Scheiman can offer his little buddy is a positive male role model. Most of the older males in Decondi's neighborhood are into drugs or hang out on the streets, Scheiman says. He wants to expose Decondi to people who like to learn. "Their neighborhood is very stifling. The kids don't understand actually wanting to go to school."

While a big emphasis is placed on learning, Big Buddy's main objective is to have fun, says sophomore Virginia Lee Bradshaw. Bradshaw, one of the program's three directors, says most of the games and activities are educational. A recent scavenger hunt helped the kids learn about the buildings on campus. And a clowning workshop is planned to show the kids how to "clown" around and teach them to know when it's not appropriate to kid around.

During the weekly visit, the first priority is to do homework. Afterward, if there's time, they can do other activities such as playing sports, baking cookies, playing chess or learning how to use a computer. The buddies don't watch television or play video games, Bradshaw says. One of the program objectives is to get the kids to do things they wouldn't normally be doing. A lot of the children, she says, spend the afternoons they aren't with their big buddies at home watching television.

"The first thing I do is my homework," says 11-year-old Eugene. This is his third year in the program and he says working on his homework with his big buddy, Tim, has helped him a lot. Eugene says he wants to be a surgeon some day.

Scheiman says it takes commitment. "A lot of people think that since this is not a class they can blow it off," he says. But this defeats one of the program's goals which is to offer the children some stability.

"It also takes patience," Scheiman says, "in the sense of being willing to get to know the kid you are with."

Most of the little buddies do have very close relationships with their big buddies. It's common for the kids to call their big buddy at home almost every day, Bradshaw says.

AU students have found that they have a lot to gain as well. Through his experiences in the program, Scheiman says he has been given the opportunity to see "how the other half lives."

He remembers his freshman year riding the van through the Southeast and having one of the little boys sitting next to him point out, "This is where they mug people." The boy explained that he didn't get beaten up because he knew the right people.

Scheiman says it's hard to believe the lifestyle Decondi comes from. "Compared to him I've had everything handed to me on a silver platter."

Decondi and his buddy may lead very different lives, but together they are helping each other learn a little more about life. Scheiman says, "It gives me a good feeling seeing Decondi have a good time and seeing his face light up when he sees me."

GSLs

Congress approved changes in the Higher Education Act last year, making sure GSLs are provided only to lowest income students. The 22-year-old program was originally designed to help middle-income families. Previously, any student whose family income was $30,000 or less was automatically eligible.

Under the new law, GSLs are now need-based, requiring all applicants to take a financial needs test. Assets of students and their families are considered in the analysis of how much families are able to pay for college. All students under the age of 24 at Dec. 31, 1987, with some exceptions, are now automatically considered dependent under federal regulations. Including these assets has increased the resources some families are considered to have available to pay for college.

The new laws did, however, raise the limit of money available to students.

The annual maximum students can receive increased from $2,500 to $2,625 per year for freshmen and sophomores, from $2,500 to $4,000 for juniors and seniors, and from $5,000 to $7,000 for graduate students.

Students are only eligible for this increase if they requested the program limit $2,500 in 1986-87. A student requesting less would be eligible for no more than the amount applied for.

With the changes and reductions in GSLs, parents and students may be looking to other governmental loan programs or to private loans with less attractive repayment terms and higher interest rates than the GSL.

According to Retha Smith, Kent State student financial aid officer, students are having to give up their work-study program to increase their GSLs.

"This year with the family income, assets and other institutional money aid (work-study) combining to form expected family contribution, students are reducing institutional aid to receive more GSL money," Smith said.

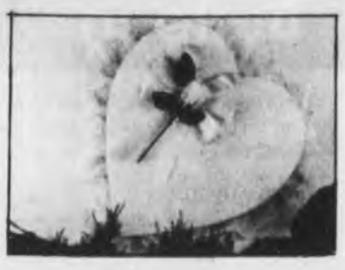
with 12 refrigerators, which might not have been so bad if they hadn't mildewed.

This year, Wadley is wiser and more experienced, having learned to leave the refrigerator doors open when not in use. Though he took a $400 loss last year, Wadley said it comes with the territory. "It's just something you have to put up with—a loss for the first year or two—to get your business on its feet."

Wadley describes himself as a "diverse, open-minded, laid back dude. Like, probably too laid back.

"I don't get into greek life or anything like that. I just like to meet a lot of people and stuff."

Wadley plans on being successful, but not if it turns him into a new-generation Yuppie. "I'd love to have a lot of money and everything, but if it ever changed me like that I'd be pretty upset."



"I don't like to think of myself as mainstream—conformist or anything," Wadley continued. "I'd like to be like the mayor of Isla Vista (near Santa Barbara), only with lots of money. You know—the guy who sits around the park listening to his radio all day."

INTERVIEW

Tama Janowitz can't be all bad, can she?

By Casey Seiler
■ Daily Northwestern
Northwestern U., IL

We're eating lunch at Scoozi, a warehouse-like Italian restaurant that the author's publicist tells me is "mobbed" at night. Janowitz is wearing a miniskirt with a loose orange sweater, and her hair is going up and out in such a way that her voice seems to come from the end of a little cave. When she talks, it's in a slightly nasal, rising-and-falling tenor that seems oddly fit to her torrential way of speaking.

In interviews, Janowitz's speaking voice is one of the characteristics that has unfairly branded her as the Cyndi Lauper of new fiction. More than a year since the publication of Slaves of New York, her small frame and huge coif have appeared on MTV, David Letterman, in ads for Rose's Lime Juice and Amaretto Di Saronno and oh, yes, on the jacket of her new novel.

A Cannibal in Manhattan is the modern fable of Mgungu, a tribesman from the fictitious island of New Burnt Norton who meets and is adopted by New York socialite Maria Fishburn. Upon the couple's arrival in civilization, Mgungu is instantly snapped up by the meat-eaters of the New York press and street life. Featuring a cast of dwarves, killers, foulmouths, and undergrounders, Cannibal is a comic attack on Downtown society and a chance for Janowitz to do a happy tap dance through the freaks and club-hoppers that she has claimed as her stock and trade.

When asked about the origin of her novel, Janowitz says, "I'm not sure where the germ came from. It might have been that some years ago I read a story, an article about a Third World man who was in New York City, and they said, 'What do you want to do?' He Said, 'Well, shop for brassieres for my wives.'"

At its best, Janowitz's fiction draws a fine line between the privileges of affluent Downtown artists and the crushing exploitation – whether economic,emotional or sexual – that nails them to their place in the city's machine. "I think that even slaves are often cannibalistic. It's not just New York, it's our society, and people are trampling all the time to get someplace . . ."

U2: A MUSICAL ADDICTION

U2's Larry Mullen Jr., Adam Clayton, The Edge and Bono Vox on Joshua Tree cover.

By Eric Lazier
■ The Hatchet
George Washington U., DC

"We're all addicted to something," Bono Vox said as he faced the sell-out crowd that flocked to see U2. "I'm addicted to being here." And with that, the band swept back into the rapture of "Running to Stand Still," from The Joshua Tree, the band's latest and arguably best album.

At RFK there was a devoted crowd, packed like sardines in line after endless line, enduring grey skies, chilly weather and an ever-present drizzle. But U2's performance made the adverse conditions seem insignificant.

U2 is indisputably the most popular rock act in the world today, both on record and on the concert stage. Bono and the crowd of more than 60,000 got their fixes that evening. The band charged through a driving, 105-minute set that had people still singing the inevitable closer "40" on the Metro ride home.

U2's forte has always been live performances. The band makes great records, but the concerts are invested with a degree of passion and personal commitment that is matched by few others in the field. In addition to Bono's searing vocals, The Edge's exuberant guitar, and the pounding rhythm section of bassist Adam Clayton and drummer Larry Mullen Jr., the band also had some serious political, social, and religious ideas to offer its audience. U2 has long been a feverish supporter of Amnesty International, which received the usual pitch from Bono and had an information table set up at the show.

The bulk of the material performed came from The Joshua Tree, with a good portion from The Unforgettable Fire and a sprinkling of hits from War and October. And, as has become a tradition with U2, the set was highlighted by a few covers, ranging from Curtis Mayfield's "People Get Ready" to the Doors' "Riders on the Storm." Bono alternately seduced and preached to his audience, running about the stage with such energy that at one point he stumbled and dislocated his shoulder.

The only drawback to the show was a nagging sense of predictability creeping upon the band. The covers, pitches for Amnesty, bringing people up on the stage and other live U2 mainstays are great. But if you have seen the band before, you expect these things to happen. It would be very easy for U2 to fall into a routine or a formula at this point because it has found one that works. The band's members' must remind themselves that they have gained a loyal following by challenging their audience, rather than giving it what they wanted to hear. Still, if the RFK smash was any indication, the fire inside U2 has not burned out.

DATE RAPE

One student recounts her experience

By Wendy Sweet
■ Tech Lode
Michigan Tech U.

We met at the party last Friday. I was talking to friends when I felt someone staring at me. When I looked around, this guy across the room was smiling at me. Not a normal, happy smile, but a lazy, sexy grin. Yeah, he was good-looking—it felt like an electrical jolt. Anyway, I lost sight of him for a while in the crowd.

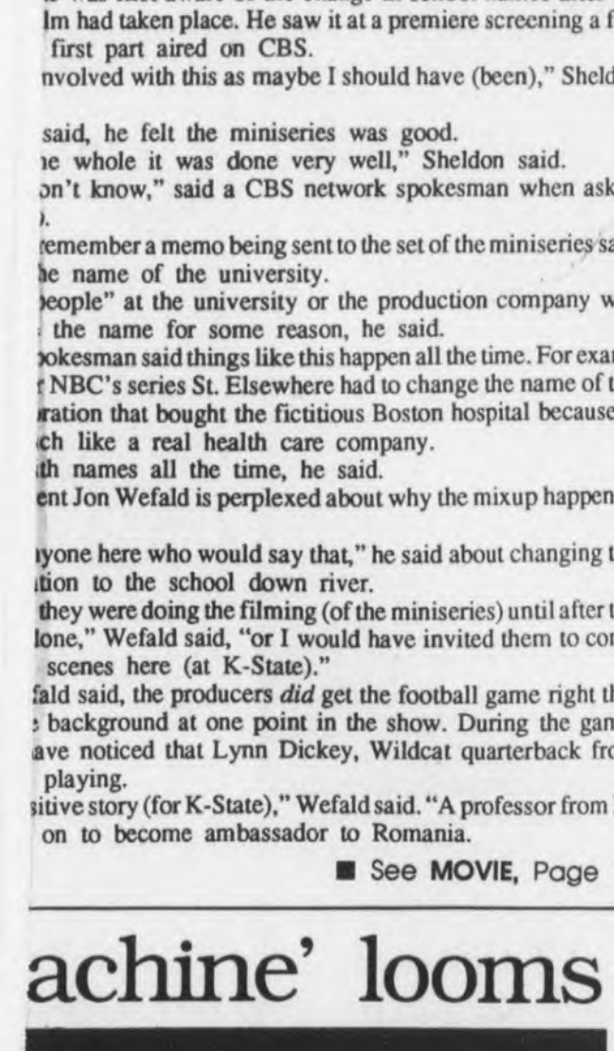
An hour later, when I was dancing, I saw him talking to some guys I know. When the song ended, I went and asked my friends about him. They said I'd have to find out on my own. A little later, we literally walked into each other. I'd had quite a few beers and felt pretty unsteady so he put both arms around me for support. He laughed and said he hadn't expected to meet me quite that way. I laughed too. Then we exchanged names and I said that I was going home.

He offered to escort me—make sure I got home safely. I wanted to know more about him so I agreed. We got into his car and I gave him directions. I leaned my head back and closed my eyes.

The next thing I remember I was stopping in some deserted field. The door was locked and I couldn't get out. I panicked. He pinned my hands behind my back and tied them together. Then he said he'd waited for this a long time . . . He started to rip my clothes . . . I just couldn't believe it . . .

The preceeding paragraphs recount the story of an ordinary meeting that resulted in an "acquaintance rape." Acquaintance rape is becoming more and more of a problem. While the exact national incidence rate of rape varies, surveys have approximated the extent of rape on college and university campuses.

Dr. Mary Koss at Kent State U. discovered that one in eight college women have been raped and one in four were victims of sexual assault. She estimates that 25% of all college women will experience sexual assault by an acquaintance during or before college.



"In 1987, one in eight college women was raped by a stranger or acquaintance."
— DR. MARY KOSS

Despite these figures most victims don't report it because "they feel ashamed, helpless, betrayed, depressed, humiliated, guilty, angry—did she lead him on, were drugs or alcohol involved, did she do something wrong? "

The definition of rape varies depending on its source. The dictionary says

Myths About Rape

1: It will not/cannot happen to me.
FACT: The misconception that only a "certain kind" of woman is raped may serve as a kind of false security against the frightening knowledge that anyone can be victimized. However, obvious feelings of insecurity or restrictive clothing may be interpreted by the rapist as an indication that she is an easy target.

2: Rape is primarily a sexual crime.
FACT: It is not a sexual experience for the victim and is not primarily motivated by the assailant's desire for sexual gratificaiion. The object of the rape is to control, dominate and degrade the victim.

3: Rape takes place in unfamiliar territory and at night.
FACT: Staying at home does not guarantee safety. It is estimated that approximately 40 percent of all rapes occur in the victim's home.

4: Rape is an impulsive, "spur of the moment" act that takes only a few moments.
FACT: Most rapes are carefully planned. FBI statistics show that 90 percent of all group rapes and 60 percent of all single rapes are planned. Many attacks last for several hours.

5: The rapist is a stranger.
FACT: Approximately one-half of all reported rapes are committed by a man the victim knows or trusts. The fact that the woman and the man know one another may make the assault more difficult to deal with afterwards, but it does not alter the fact that a rape has occurred. ▪Amy Stirnkorb—Daily Bruin, U. of California, Los Angeles

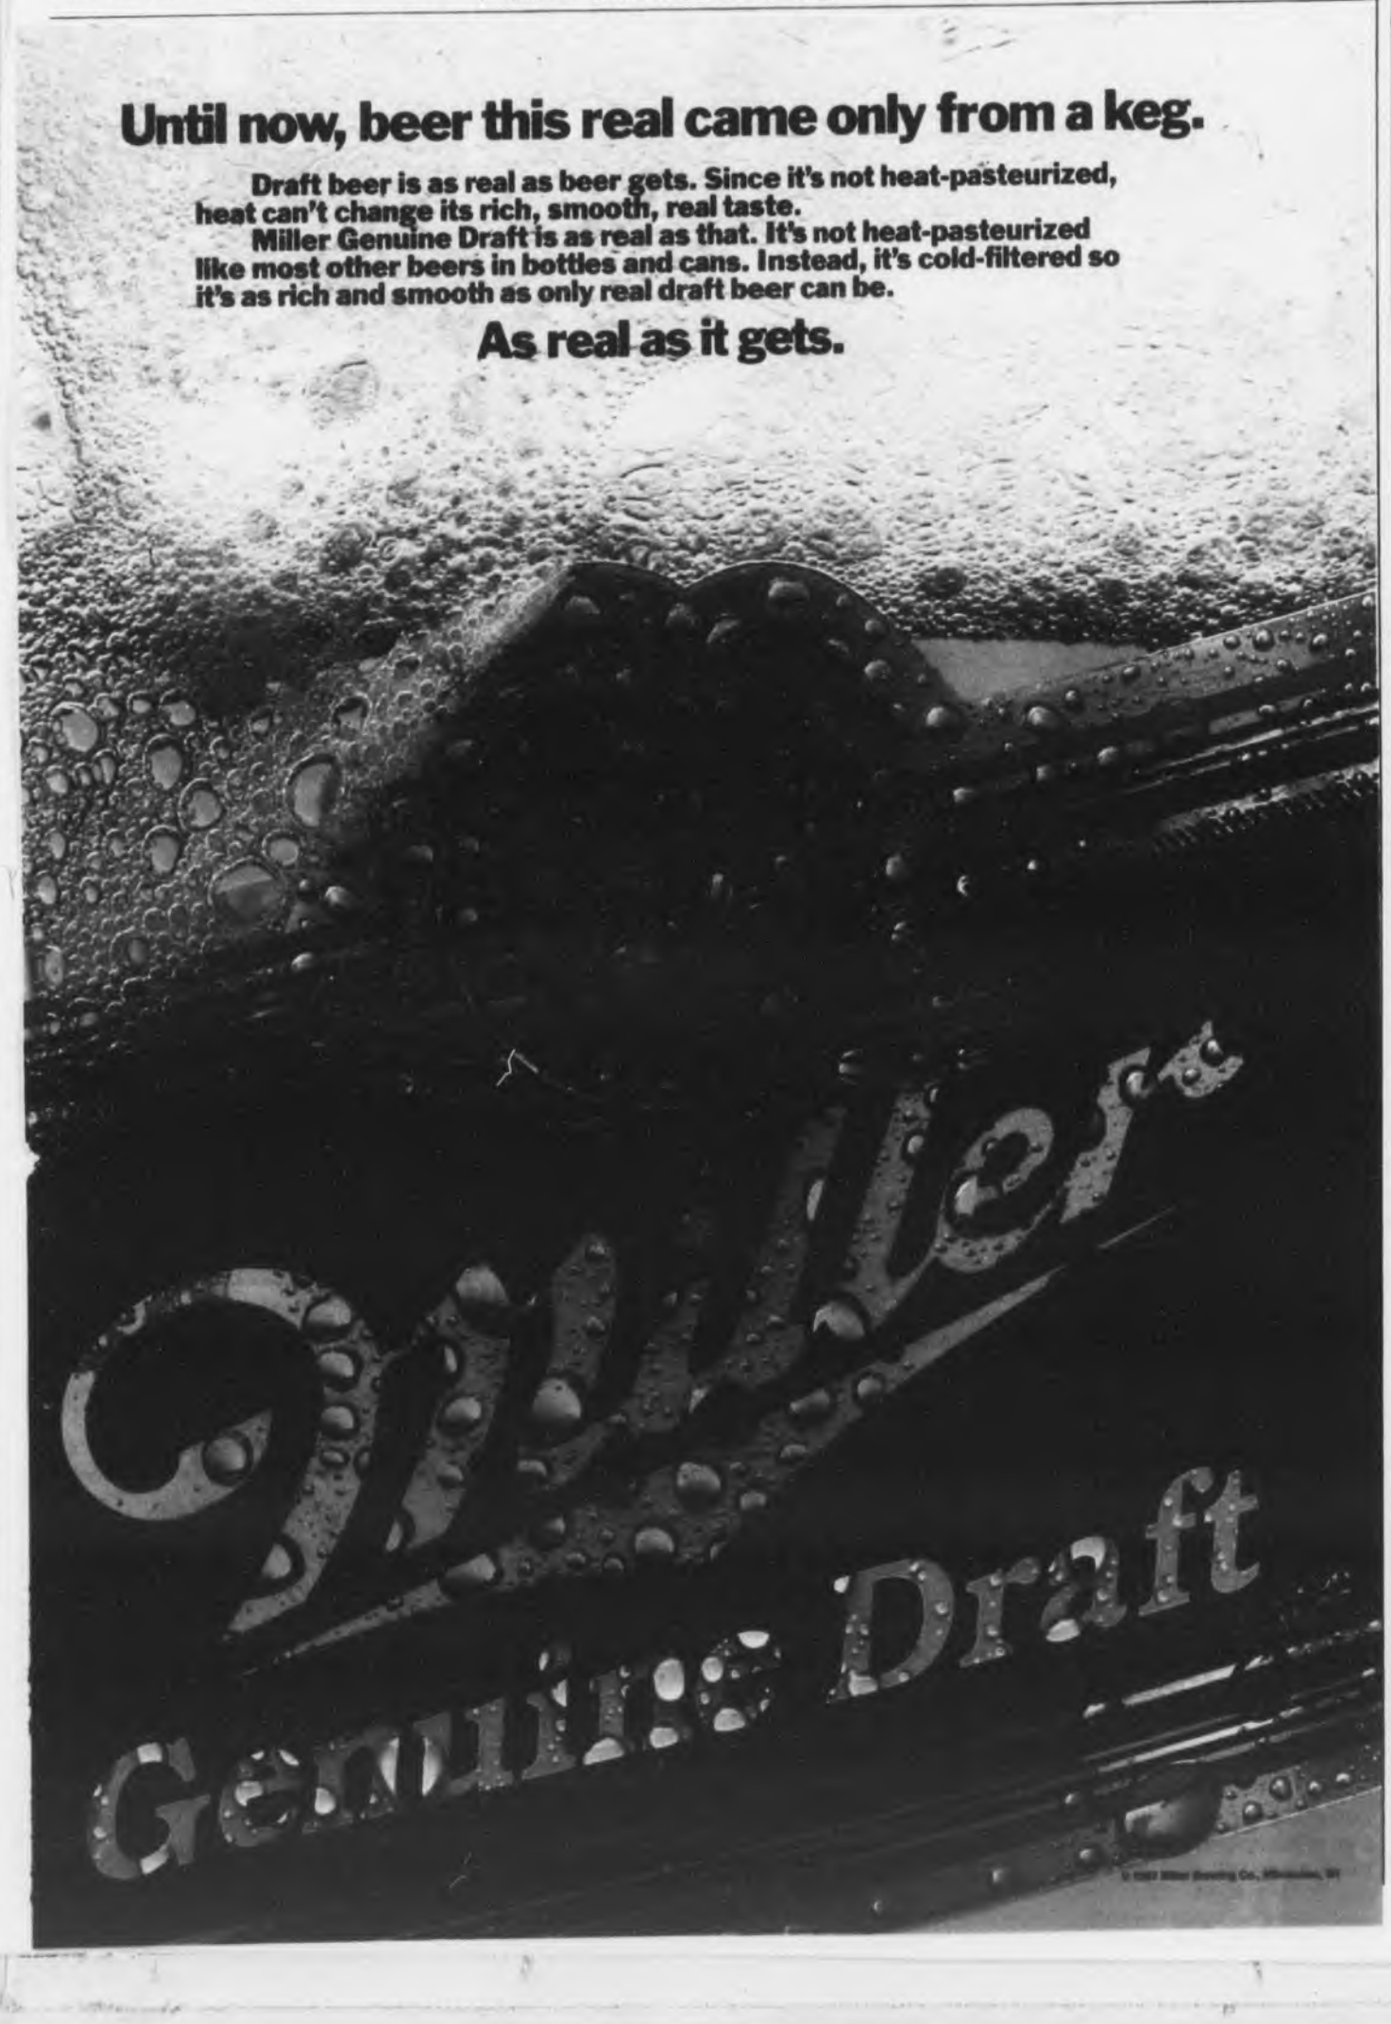
one thing, the law another, and individual men and women something else. Usually it boils down to sexual intercourse without consent, using force, the threat of force, or deception. To the victims, rape is a deliberate violation of their emotional and physical integrity.



A serious drawback to prosecuting acquaintance rape is whether or not the victim will be believed. An accusation of "stranger" rape pits one person's word against another's. Acquaintance rape, or date rape isn't as clear cut and may result with two parties hurling accusations and insults at each other. What is worse, most acquaintance rapes are planned and the blame is put on the victim. "What she was wearing," "She's giving me the come-on," or "I could tell she wanted it too," are common arguments. This leaves the victim feeling that it's her fault, because she didn't take the precautions seriously enough to prevent an attack.

So what are women supposed to do? One way to abolish rape is through awareness and education, and by dispelling the myths that prolong the agony for all involved.

The line on the phone co.

By Sabrina Wenrick
▪ Daily Nexus
U. of California, Santa Barbara

My roommate called the phone company last week to get the phone plugged in. The woman needed all of Debbie's identification: driver's license, social security number, and major and local credit card. It was a long conversation.

"Would you like your number listed or unlisted?" the woman asked. Debbie hesitated, "Uhh . . . unlisted probably."

"That will cost you an extra 60 cents a month," the woman said.

"What?!!" my roommate exploded. "I have to pay to keep my name out of the book? I would think it would cost more money to be listed. That is RIDICULOUS."

The GTE employee hung up. Debbie didn't have her name. The next day we tried again, resigned to paying the 60 cents, on principle I suppose. The charade recommenced and when the listed part came up, Deb said, evenly, "unlisted."

Lori, the GTE rep, had another trick. "Do your parents support you?" she asked. Debbie thought, if she said no, they wouldn't give her the phone, so she said yes, thinking this would reassure GTE that the bill would be paid.

"Oh," said Lori. "If you had said no, you would have received a student discount (which turns out to be roughly 50 percent of all fees). Debbie hastened to add, "Well, we are financial aid students, and my Dad doesn't support me unless we get into difficulty." Lori explained that it was too late to change.

Then she offered us insurance. We could pay 95 cents per month for maintenance, or we could pay $95 an hour for service if something ever went wrong. We opted for the 95 cents.

There was a forty dollar installation fee and a $1.14 mystery charge, in addition to our regular monthly fee of $10.75. Our calling cards were generously thrown in.

Due to a busy season, she couldn't hook up the phone directly. We had to wait two days. No problem. Friday came and we could call out. But GTE's Lori had made an error——perhaps the first in her 20-year career. She had forgotten to tell us our phone number.

Debbie called back on Friday afternoon, a half-an-hour too late to find out the number. She rang back Monday morning. The comedy was not over. She spoke to a Mr. Zimmerman who said, "Oh I'm sorry, but you're an unlisted number, and I can't give out this information." She had to go down to the office in Santa Barbara and show a picture I.D. to be given her own phone number.

She was upset. He was sorry. He agreed to fetch his supervisor who said he could make an exception if she gave him all the information correctly. Once again Debbie gave her personal data. We had our telephone number by the time I came home. It's now among our most prized possessions.

STAR INTERVIEW

River's Edge star handles Hollywood in his own way

By Gregory Robert Krzos
■ State Press
Arizona State U.

Daniel Roebuck

It took a lot for actor Daniel Roebuck to leave his home back East, head to Hollywood and try battling it out against the California ne'er-do-wells. Roebuck, who currently can be seen in Vista film's "Dudes," insists there's a reason for this rambunctious decision.

"I must have been dropped on my head when I was a kid," Roebuck said jokingly in a telephone interview from Los Angeles. About show business, he said: "It's the dumbest career choice anyone could make. I just want to go down to all those people at the bus depot and say, 'What's the matter with you? Get on that bus, there are 2,000 people coming here a day.'"

Apparently dropping in on Hollywood has paid off for the young actor. In "Dudes," Roebuck plays Biscuit, a wild and bizarre punk rocker who's fed up with life in the big city. In the film, Roebuck, Cryer and Lee Ving are friends who head West for a simpler life.

"The kids grew up with a particular set of ideals," Roebuck said of the punked-out trio. "I guess all of the emotions they've bottled up inside have been ignored and eventually come out." Roebuck's character, Biscuit, is especially dripping with emotion. And for the actor playing the role of a wild and frenzied wildman was indeed far from his own upbringing.

"I had this quaint, little, parochial upbringing in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania," he said. "I'll never write a book about how my parents beat me, I had a wonderful family. I have wonderful friends and that character in the film is so alienated."

When asked if he was attracted to the out-of-the-ordinary roles, Roebuck said, "I guess I'm fortunate enough because it finds me, too. I'm such a weird type. Ya know I'm big—I'm not fat, I'm not huge—and thank God I got away from those fat-guy parts where the kid goes on Bob Newhart and say, 'Yeah, give me 12 pizzas.'"

Roebuck was last seen as Samson in the critically acclaimed "River's Edge." Last October, he began filming "Farm of the Year," with Richard Gere. Although Roebuck enjoys acting, he said his way of "doing Hollywood" is somewhat different from most actors. "I work in a kind of funny way——I stay away from the Hollywood thing, I stay away from parties and screenings and have this small group of agents and managers who tell me where to be. I usually do my job and then come back home."

About breaking into the business, like most professionals, Roebuck has a lot to say. "I came out here because I wanted to be an actor. I didn't need to be a star. I think you just need to want to do this and nothing else."

'Zero' scores points on big screen

FILM REVIEW

By S.M. Wenrick
■ Daily Nexus
U. of California, Santa Barbara

Jamie Gertz, Robert Downey and Andrew McCarthy riding in the fast lane in 'Less Than Zero'.

The American Dream is shot to hell. Decadence is the password, and the god of gluttony will have his due: death. F. Scott Fitzgerald's vision of the revelries of his Lost Generation is tame compared to the explosion that is Less Than Zero. "When I read the book," said screenplay writer Harley Peyton, "I thought, 'it's The Great Gatsby in 1984 with drugs'—that was my glib summation of what I wanted to do." He and director Marek Kanievska, backed by a brilliant team of technicians, have created a media extravaganza beyond mere decadence.

The spectacle depicts the ruin of a part of Western civilization. Beverly Hills is a canker which should be amputated from the rest of the nation. The film, based on Bret Easton Ellis' 1985 novel of the same title, is a huge, shiny, larger-than-life nightmare. If Brazil was a wild journey into a strange world, Less than Zero is perhaps more frightening; the protagonists are readily identifiable as people of our generation.

The three, Andrew McCarthy as Clay Easton, Jami Gertz as Blair, and Robert Downey Jr. as Julian Wells, are excellent in their roles. Clay was the narrator in the novel, and here is the straight kid with a straight tie whose face flinches according to the tension in the scene. Gertz is beautiful as a young model on the edge. Her hair changes with every scene. Downey (The Pickup Artist) delivers the most impressive performance as the cocky aspirant to his parents' dreams going down. He hits rock bottom in a grotesque and realistic way.

This is a stylish film. Natural light is rare, and most of the action is nocturnal. The music is obtrusive at all the right moments. The tense photography, flashy lighting, and rapid pace bring home the novel's desperate edge. One cannot pause to think, and the film itself is in a way a drug trip. This is no social satire, but a bold attack, a scathing burn on upper-class L.A. morality.

Less Than Zero is a heavy film and one definitely for a mature audience, but it is not bereft of a lighter touch. When Blair and Clay are carried away by passion, for example, they are literally parked in the fast lane. Christmas Eve with the Easton family approaches the absurd as the scene cuts from Clay's dad playing the piano and his mother slowly ingesting martinis to Clay and Blair's frantic sex in the hall. The humor is nevertheless fleeting, their masochistic playground shortly becoming tragedy in Palm Springs .

"You don't look so happy," Clay tells Blair. She flashes her teeth and asks, "But do I look good?"

"You don't look so happy," Clay tells Blair at the start. She flashes her teeth and asks, "But do I look good?" Almost everyone "looks good" in this film, but in the end, the "feel-good" society is roundly blasted. The chic American Dream has gone awry when parents wish their children "Merry Christmas" through closed doors, or don't wish at all.

Less Than Zero, or drugs in high society, is another in a series of "issue-oriented" television and film projects. It is accompanied by a disclaimer of sorts, a short, stark anti-drug ad message just before the film starts. Large white words flashed on the screen at the Cinema on Hollister: "Crack: the thrill can kill." That the drug maintains its seduction after the film seems improbable.

How disgusting can you guys get? Trister Keane, the fictional composite character for the publications Trister Keane's Magazine and Slimetime, is the perfect guy to ask.

Trister Keane is the assumed name of a group of four writers: Steve Puchalski, Brian Edwards, Travis Riker and Mike Schafer. These four Syracuse U. alumni and former University Union Cinema Board members produce several small press publications containing film criticism, comics and creative writing.

The editorial plan is to write about "anything that's not accepted, all the obscurities." Slimetime is published monthly; each issue contains about a dozen "sick movie" reviews. Films like Surf Nazis Must Die and Blood Orgy of the She-Devils are critiqued in the publication.

"We write about films that don't get written about," Keane said, "to get others interested too. These aren't really straight reviews. We write them with a twisted sense of humor. Even people who don't enjoy watching these films will like to read about them." As the editors claim on the front page of every issue of Slimetime, "We sleaze to please."

IN BRIEF

Moonlighting: Model bares all for art classes... Northwestern graduate Dennis Anderson's part time work puts him in a different position than most. He poses nude for a Northwestern undergraduate "Life Drawing" class twice a week at $10 an hour. At the beginning of each class, Anderson walks in wearing only a bathrobe. After the spotlights and props are set up, Anderson disrobes and strikes 10-to-15 second poses to get the artists loosened up and in-synch with the atmosphere. Anderson, who discovered the job through an ad in the campus daily says, "I have alot of self-control. Many say women would have a harder time doing this, but I think a man has a greater opportunity to be embarassed," he said. "All we have to do is look at something fairly suggestive and then we're off." ■ Cindy Eberting—Daily Northwestern, Northwestern U.,IL

U-R what U drive... Tom Couch, co-author of "U R What U Drive," argues that the car you drive is a key to your personality. A few examples: The VW bug driver... Name: Tawnie. She'll never grow up. Philosophy: Boys are to die for. Occupation: Next fall she'll be enrolling at a local junior college if she can arrange her classes around PTH (prime tanning hours). Favorite author: Jackie Collins. Hobby: Composing tunes on her touch-tone phone. World view: If people would just stay at the beach there wouldn't be so many wars... The BMW-3 series drivers... Names: Mark and Lindsay. Profile: the typical BMW couple. Have a perfect relationship. They never fight because they're always at their offices. Prospects: In a few years they will break up when one of them admits to a concern for the homeless. Until then, onward and upward. Favorite book: Megatrends. Favorite food: sushi. Best kept secret: Mark hates sushi and Lindsay hates Mark, but stays with him to benefit from his credit rating... The Custom Van driver... Kenny; friends call him "The Count." Pastimes: Known to blow a little smoke, down a few brews and try just about anything with a warning label. He usually winds up at the local laundromat (watching the spin cycle). Favorite meal: munchie time. Favorite drink: Jolt Cola. Favorite saying: The captain has turned on the smoking sign... The High Rise truck driver... Name: This is immaterial. Demeanor: Mighty proud to know ya. Philosophy: He was born free. Physical characteristics: He spits. Attributes: Women look up to him. Giraffes look up to him. ■ Twyla Pumroy—State Press, Arizona State U.

RECORD REVIEWS

Darklands
The Jesus and Mary Chain
Warner/Reprise

The intense pressure to improve on initial success often results in poor and even wretched second albums.

The Jesus and Mary Chain was as ripe for this so-called Sophomore Slump as any other hip and cool British underground group. Their first album, Psychocandy, gained critical praise and a substantial college following for its amalgamation of styles that caused a love'em-or-hate'em reaction. Those who got migraines from the rough mix of 60s-style melodies and acidic guitar feedback, and loved the simple Beach Boys-type tunes and neo-psychedelic lyrics of fraternal founders Jim and William Reid, will thrill to JMC's second album, Darklands.

The Chain has avoided the dreaded Slump, but just barely. The druggy lyrics and surf-dude melodies are left intact. But the distinctive thrash guitars of JMC's first record have been toned down on Darklands.

The band starts off skimping too much on the guitars, leaving a squishy melody forgettable at best. The lyrics delve into the "ooh, my life is a burning hell" triteness of the post-punk music world.

The rest of side one, however, is solid. "Nine Million Rainy Days" is the best song on Darklands. William Reid's matter-of-fact bitching about his possessive-obsessive relationship with some girl who "sends shivers to my head" evokes hallucinatory images, delivered in a low, menacing whisper.

Side two is not quite as impressive. The dance club hit "April Skies" and the surging "On The Wall" are excellent songs, with vivid imagery and gooks galore. The other three tunes are passable. In all, the group appears to have survived the Slump with regular, not flying, colors. ■ Steve Crawford, The Daily Texan, U. of Texas, Austin

Renaissance
Branford Marsalis
CBS

At 27 years of age, saxophonist Branford Marsalis has played in a wider variety of musical contexts than most veteran jazzmen, from backing Sting to playing with the English Chamber Orchestra.

Throughout his gigs, Marsalis periodically switched from alto to tenor to soprano saxophone, often being criticized for not finding his own distinct instrumental voice rather than praised for diversity and experimentation.

On Renaissance, Marsalis' new album, this proves to be in the listener's favor. He switches styles effortlessly, going from harder, free improvisational numbers to introspective ballads. On "Just One of Those Things," he's reminiscent of Charlie Parker, bending the opening riff through a million different rhythmic patterns. But "Those Things" also has a good dash of Sonny Rollins thrown in—the song never completely loses its melodic quality, even when it bops its hardest.

The young sax player shows his maturity by retaining some sort of pleasing melody line in his explorations of structure. But during the ballads Marsalis' ear for riffs really comes out. The expressiveness of "The Peacocks," a longer piece composed by drummer Tony Williams, makes it the highlight of the record.

With his quartet of Williams, bassist Bob Hurst, and pianist Kenny Kirkland, Marsalis has a group of musicians who can keep up with his improvising. While he still might not be considered a very innovative musician, Branford proves on Renaissance that that might be irrelevant—as long as you can blow with heart. ■ Mark Tarallo, The Daily Texan, U. of Texas, Austin

For the Country
Dumptruck
Big Time

At first listen, the Northeastern band Dumptruck sounds like any other Quirky-Pop band following in the wake of R.E.M.'s success. It has the j-word guitars, the folkish melodies, the muted vocals and disjointed lyrics. But Dumptruck is very much its own band.

Dumptruck's For the Country is a fairly impressive album. Rarely does it succumb to cliches of the Southern-pop genre. After the first cut, "Island," degenerates into a strident nasal whine, the album is solid, sometimes spectacular. "Going Nowhere," on the second side, is a wonderful country-flavored song in the best cow-punk tradition.

"Wire" is an urgent, raucous song, possibly the best on the album. A charged rhythm guitar drives the cut as lead singers/guitarists Kevin Salem and Seth Tiven shout "tear down the wire, tear down the rope," a desperate cry to remove the barriers of communication in a busy and uncaring world.

Most of the time Dumptruck manages to create very good songs, while at the same time incorporating the energy of their live shows into their music. ■ Steve Crawford, The Daily Texan, U. of Texas, Austin

The Uplift Mofo Party Plan
The Red Hot Chili Peppers
EMI/Manhattan

On The Uplift Mofo Party Plan, The Red Hot Chili Peppers make no bones about the fact that they rip off such black artists as Bo Diddley, Howling Wolf, Larry Holmes, and George Clinton, who produced their 1985 album Freaky Styley. But they do so with originality and fervor.

The Red Hots have integrated the obvious funk and rap influences, along with some country-and-western, 60s-influenced paisley pop, "hard core, hard rock, hard facts and stain fighting proteins."

On such tracks as "Fight Like a Brave," "No Chump Love Sucker" or "Walkin' on Down the Road," the Red Hots successfully combine all these elements, winding up with some monster toe-tappin', knee-jerkin', bone-breakin' tunes. Lyrics like "Get on your knees and shake your ass to the jam that is" help out a little, too.

The Uplift Mofo Party Plan puts the best elements of the Red Hots' debut album, True Men Don't Kill Coyotes, and Freaky Styley into a blender, creating one of the sweatiest, funkiest dance/thrash albums of the last few years. The Red Hots are truly funkin' awesome. ■ Robert Wilonsky—The Daily Texan, U. of Texas, Austin

MUSIC

Pianist strikes the right keys

By Adrienne Toomey
■ The Hoya
Georgetown U., DC

When John Brennan, now a Georgetown freshman, began taking piano lessons at the age of eight, he had no idea that nine years later he would play for two thousand people in a Leningrad concert hall.

Since then he has given innumerable performances, ranging from jam sessions in Irish pubs to formal concerts at home and abroad. Although he enjoys playing songs by contemporary artists, he says that "classical music is the most challenging type of music to play. I had strict classical training until I came to Georgetown. If I only played Billy Joel and George Winston, my overall skills would deteriorate."

Brennan's hours of practice have not been in vain. In 1985, he became a member of the Massachusetts Youth Wind Ensemble, which consists of roughly 50 musicians, and is affiliated with the New England Conservatory of Music. When Daniel Riley, the ensemble's conductor, heard Brennan audition, he immediately gave him the pianist position. Brennan says, "I probably just happened to be at the right place at the right time."

The ensemble left for a three week, seven performance concert tour through the Soviet Union April 16, 1986. One performance in particular stands out. "We were playing in an enormous concert hall in Leningrad. It was obvious that we were Americans, and people, especially the older generation, had said some snide remarks to us. Anyway, when we walked out on stage, all that just melted away."

"At one point in the concert, I played a Russian folksong called 'Moscow Nights.' It's about the Russian people who died in World War II. When I first saw the song four months earlier, it didn't really mean that much to me. Sitting in my own living room, I never guessed the impact it would have. When I began playing it in the Leningrad concert, the entire audience began singing the song in unison. I remember looking up and seeing two old ladies in the front row crying. It's hard to express how I felt—it was so beautiful."

Morrison infuses soul into new LP

By Kevin McKeever
■ The Hatchet
George Washington U., D.C.

Van Morrison is a rare breed in today's field of head-bangers, wimpy balladeers, and pop flash-in-the-pans.

His latest work, Poetic Champions Compose, keeps the faith of hard-core "Van the Man" followers with a lush and romantic set of tracks that leave enough room to attract a new generation of listeners.

Compose is one of Morrison's most accessible works. The instrumentals "Spanish Steps" and "Allow Me", which open and close the album, are sensuous jazz/blues pieces that gently roll in and out like the mystic fogs and seascapes about which Morrison has written so many lyrics.

Those who enjoyed the freshness of Bruce Hornsby's piano in his debut album will appreciate Neil Drinkwater's crisp work on "Alan Watts Blues." The lyrics, a romanticized call for a brief vacation from "the ways of mice and men," are simple, but define the feeling of oneness Morrison is eternally in search of.

Morrison's husky soul singing in "Someone Like You" and his arrangement of the traditional folk tune "Sometimes I Feel Like a Motherless Child" make every pseudo-soul man on top-40 radio sound like a three-year-old attempting to sing lead tenor at a Kennedy Center Opera.

In all, Poetic Champions Compose is a fine piece of deep expressionism.

No more ska for L.A. band

By Dave Miller
■ State Press
Arizona State U.

The Untouchables will have no more of this ska talk, thanks. Although they were once a band leading the "Two-Tone," or early 80's ska/reggae revival that saved America from the depths of Rick Springfield, now the Untouchables will hear no more of it. It's time for new things.

"At one time, we were directly from that whole Two-Tone thing," said Untouchables guitarist Clyde H. Grimes Jr. "But as a band we've kind of grown. We don't do much ska anymore." What they do now is dance music. And they do it well. Grimes said the theme for the band's performances, and for their new album, which they'll begin recording after their MTV New Music Tour is over, is "high energy."

The Untouchables have been happening more and more since their 1981 Los Angeles beginnings. They began playing clubs and recording several LP's, including the popular "Dance Party."

Their first actual LP, entitled "Wild Child" took them completely into a hard driving dance mode.

Their publicity says the LP offers "a collection of songs that are as sharp as a crease in sharkskin and as funky as a downtown summer night." That's pretty accurate.

Their relationship with their audience is stronger than ever. "You know, it's really weird. We haven't had anything out in a long time, but the audience is bigger than it ever was."

Sacrificing health for thinness

By Toni L. Wood
■ The Pointer
U. of Wisconsin, Stevens Point

Lanie was always cold and always on the move. In summer weather I'd find her in a thermal-wear shirt and a sweater, racing up and down the aisles of the hospital, pushing her IV pole in front of her. She would have a sallow, "no sleep" look, so gaunt and thin that at 85 pounds her sweater slipped off her 5'6" frame. Lanie was an anorexic that I'd known for two years. "Hi," she'd say as I caught up with her, "I'm in for a 'tune up,' all I want is the usual." That is, the usual meal tray request of two tablespoons of raisins, one-fourth cup of plain, low-fat yogurt and a cup of coffee with half a packet of Sweet & Low. She'd get tuned up, gin out against medical advice and show up in emergency two or three months later, dehydrated and very thin.

Mel would sit on the edge of her bed, holding a teddy bear; she was 14, looked 12, and at times looked like a streetwise 20-year-old. She had been admitted to the adolescent unit for substance abuse with a normal weight for height, but had swollen cheeks, bloodshot eyes, rotten breath and eroded teeth. In addition to alcohol and pill abuse, Mel was a bulimic. During the course of our many conversations, she admitted to frequently "pigging out" on large quantities of food at a single sitting. A typical binge for Mel was three personal size pizzas, a half-pound of potato chips, a quart or more of ice cream, a two-liter bottle of soda and a half dozen donuts. She would then make herself vomit. Mel would always get quiet after describing a binge-purge; she'd chew her nails, stare into space a while, and then softly say, "You know, it's so damn hard to stop." Mel and Lanie are patients I've had with eating disorders.

Eating disorders are serious conditions of self-destructive behavior that are expressed as anorexia nervosa, bulimia, bulimarexia or severe obesity. This article will deal with anorexia and buli-

SIGNS OF EATING DISORDERS

- Constant worry about body appearance and weight
- A 'good' or 'bad' day is defined by how much food has been eaten
- Daily activities are centered around an exercise schedule
- Food intake is determined by what is 'deserved' rather than hunger level
- Meal size and frequency are contingent upon previous meals
- Anxious anticipation or excessive dread of the next meal

Student 'docs' meet health needs of dorm residents

Students in one group drag each other around on blankets, tie each other's legs to boards and practice the art of bandaging broken bones. In another area, a student asks, "What exactly is gangrene?"

Activities and questions like these are not out of the ordinary for the 53 students who serve as health aides in Northwestern U.'s dormitories, fraternities and sororities.

Each Thursday afternoon during the school year, these students are at Searle Student Health Service, studying basic first aid and cardiopulmonary resuscitation.

"The health aides work as a liaison between the student community and the student health service," said Patti Lubin, health educator at Searle.

By studying weekly health aide reports, Searle can monitor the spread of viruses from one side of campus to another, said Lubin.

Health aides usually treat students for minor ailments such as colds and small cuts. They may dispense over-the-counter medications like Sudafed at no charge.

While they must be prepared to handle sudden emergencies, health aides are not meant to be substitutes for professional medical care.

"We're not a medicine chest. We're just there to help out," said senior Jen-

Letter to Connie: We can help you

By Editorial Staff
■ Daily Kent Stater
Kent State U., OH

Dear Connie,

You said that you had often thought about taking your life, that sometimes the pressure got to be unbearable and you just wanted to get away from it all.

Connie, everyone needs to get away sometimes. The pressure gets to everyone; you are not alone. Too often students think they are facing the world by themselves and they are the only ones who can't handle the problems that arise.

You said being in the Honors College made you feel as if you had to succeed at all cost. People believe you have a special gift, you said, and when you don't achieve excellence they think you are wasting it.

Connie, these are people that love you, and they only want the best for you. Sometimes they push too hard because they don't know any better. Maybe if you sit down and talk to them, they'll understand.

Tell them that sometimes it is OK to get a B instead of an A. Tell them that sometimes it is OK to go downtown on a Saturday night instead of studying. Tell them that sometimes it is OK to watch television instead of going to the library.

Connie, all students are feeling the pressure to succeed. But you have to put things into perspective. The world will not end if a B shows up on your report card. However, if you don't learn to cope, if we don't learn to cope, our world may come crashing down on us.

That doesn't have to happen to you. There are too many people out there who care. Talk to a friend about how you are feeling. Tell them you feel as if you are facing the world alone. They may feel the same way. If so, maybe you can face the world together.

Everyone needs someone to lean on—a friend, a family member, a professional. Whatever you do, talk to someone. Cry on a shoulder. You are not alone, and you shouldn't have to face your problems alone. There are other solutions besides suicide.

Connie, we care. We want to help, but you have to let us. Open up a bit; you'll see that we are just like you. We all have problems and we all need friends. Let us be your friend. Love,

Your fellow students

Student hunk pumps up for Mr. America

By Tim Leonard
■ The Jambar
Youngstown State U., OH

Youngstown State U.'s George Poullas will be competing in the Mr. America body-building competition this year.

His career spans a long list of body-building titles, the most recent of which are Mr. Collegiate America in 1985 and Mr. Ohio in June of 1986.

"Right now, I'm trying to gain more size and more density. In other words, I'm trying to mature the muscles, get more cuts and polish my physique," Poullas said.

Poullas, a senior, said studying nutrition has been immensely helpful. "Lifting is half the battle," he said. "The other half is watching your weight."

College football's biggest rout

By John Porretto
■ Daily Reveille
Louisiana State U.

"Hell with it, I don't think we can beat 'em now anyway," said a Cumberland U. football player shortly before their 222-0 defeat at the hands of Georgia Tech U.

On Oct. 7, 1916, Cumberland gave up more points, touchdowns and yards than any team before or since in college football history.

Tech scored on every possession, piling up 978 yards without throwing a single pass and averaging 3.8 points per minute.

On the first play, Cumberland's first-string quarterback was knocked unconscious and carted off the field. Cumberland runningback Morris Gouger plowed into the Tech line for a 3-yard gain on the next play. A 10-yard pass completion shortly thereafter was their biggest gain.

On Tech's first possession, Everett Strupper raced 20 yards for a touchdown—his first of eight.

When Cumberland quarterback Eddie Edwards fumbled the snap from center, he backed away from the ball. "Pick it up," he yelled. "Pick it up and run with it!"

A Cumberland backfielder wouldn't touch it, having learned the hard way on an earlier play.

"Pick it up yourself, you dropped it," he said.

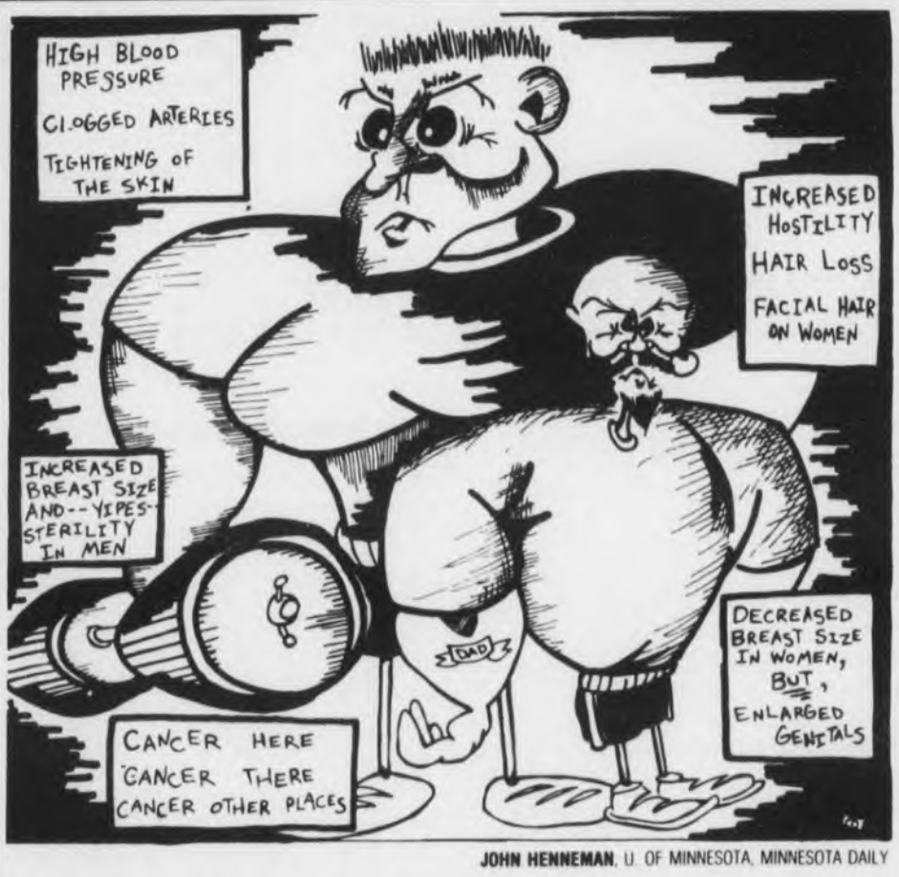
The Cumberland team, an informal group coached by a law student, mishandled the ball for nine more fumbles during the game.

Tech jumped out to a 63-0 lead at the end of the first quarter. By halftime, the score had doubled.

Tech coach John Heisman (of trophy fame) told his troops at halftime, "Men, we're in front, but you never know what those Cumberland players have up their sleeves. So in the second half, go out and hit 'em clean and hit 'em hard. Don't let up."

Heisman's troops followed orders well, as Tech added another 96 points in the second half.

"Somebody told us that Vanderbilt had been awarded the Southern championship over Georgia Tech the year before on points scored, and Heisman was out to see that Tech got its share in 1916," said Cumberland player Charles Warwick.



Early in the fourth quarter, Heisman spotted an exhausted Cumberland player hiding under a blanket on the Tech bench.

"Son," he said, "you're on the wrong bench."

"Oh no, I'm not," the battered player responded. "This is the Georgia Tech side, isn't it?"

"Yes."

"Well, then, this is the only safe place for me. If I go back to my bench, I'm liable to get sent back in the game again."

Steroids cause external growth, internal death

By Stephen Lorinser
■ Minnesota Daily
U. of Minnesota

British amateur bodybuilder David Daljit Singh, 27, was a healthy athlete until he started taking anabolic steroids.

He thought the steroids were building up his body, but they were destroying it from within. Four tumors had begun growing on his liver, and last spring he died of a ruptured liver. He is one of the athletes most recently known to have died as a result of steroid use.

The International Amateur Athletic Federation Council, the governing body for international track events, suspended nine athletes for steroid use last fall.

The risks of taking steroids—death and suspension—are great, as are the benefits. Athletic success in world competition and American sports brings fame and, more importantly, fortune.

Brian Bosworth, Oklahoma's 1986 All-American linebacker, is big, strong and mean. When he tested positive for steroids, the NCAA suspended Bosworth from playing in a bowl game. The Sooners indicated they didn't want him back.

But the National Football League's Seattle Seahawks wanted Bosworth, signing him to an $11 million, multi-year contract.

Anabolic steroids have limited medical purposes. Their greatest use, however, is in non-prescription consumption by athletes. Coupled with exercise and a high-protein, high-calorie diet, anabolic steroids can increase muscle size, strength, endurance and aggressiveness.

History of drug use

Drug use in sports is not new. As early as 1865, there were reports of swimmers taking drugs. At about the same time, cyclists used a heroin and cocaine "speedball" to increase endurance.

Fifty years later, U.S. Olympian Tom Hicks collapsed and nearly died after winning the 1904 Olympic marathon. Hicks took highly poisonous strychnine and brandy in hope of running faster.

As competitions became closer, many athletes took anything to gain the extra half-inch or fraction of a second that would mean the difference between failure and success.

In 1958, U.S. weightlifting physician John Ziegler learned of Soviet testosterone use. Fearing they might gain a competitive advantage, Ziegler helped develop Dianabol, the first anabolic steroid available in the United States.

Ziegler initially experimented with small dosages of five milligrams daily. Many of today's athletes, reasoning that more must be better, are taking up to 500 milligrams a day—100 times the usual medical dose.

As the adverse effects of anabolic steroids became known, they were added to the International Olympic Committee's list of banned substances in 1974.

The NCAA voted in 1986 to institute random drug testing to detect steroids, amphetamines and illegal street drugs.

On Sept. 1, 1987, the U. of Minnesota's men's athletic department declared war on steroid use when it sponsored a national, multi-media campaign emphasizing the adverse sexual side effects.

U. of Minnesota officials say education is the key to stopping steroids.

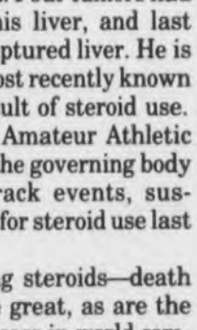
The men's athletic department, in connection with the Minneapolis advertising agency Fallon McElligott, has launched a "Steroids Are Big Trouble" campaign.

"The U. of Minnesota is concerned about people in general and athletes in particular," said Frank Wilderson, vice president for student affairs.

But will the casual and the elite athlete heed the health warnings? Or will the lure of a perfect body and a multi-million-dollar professional contract lead to greater abuse?

Many athletes admit they will do or take anything short of killing themselves to gain a competitive advantage.

How Steroids Work



Anabolic steroids are an artificial form of the hormone testosterone, which causes puberty changes in men and exists at minute levels in women.

When taken by healthy men, anabolic steroids shut down the body's production of testosterone, causing men's breasts to grow and their genitals to shrink.

Large doses of anabolic steroids trigger masculine changes in women. They experience lowered voices, increased facial and body hair, scalp hair loss, increased acne, enlarged clitoris, decreased breast size, changes in sex drive, changes or absense of menstruation, increased aggressiveness, and decreased body fat.

Anabolic steroids produce a state of euphoria, diminished fatigue and increased bulk and power in both sexes. They also cause mood swings, liver tumors, rising cholesterol levels, high blood pressure, premature cessation of bone growth, bleeding ulcers, enlarged prostate, jaundice and premature death. ■ Stephen Lorinser—Minnesota Daily, U. of Minnesota

Namath's nephew has hard act to follow... As the nephew of Hall of Fame quarterback Joe Namath, Frank Namath has faced high expectations all his life. "Kids from other schools would think that I made a team or was an All-Star because of my name," said Frank Namath. "But no one is going to give you something for nothing." Heavily recruited while in high school, Namath eventually chose the U. of Maryland where he is vying for a starting spot on the offensive line. "I'll be moving up and should get some playing time at guard and center next year," said Namath. ■ Kevin Minnick—The Diamondback, U. of Maryland

Drum beat helps deaf team march to victory... Instead of barked signals from the quarterback that denote the play and precise moment of the center's snap, the hearing impaired players on Gallaudet College's football team must rely on hand signals and a drumbeat to execute each play. "Some teams say 'How could we lose to a deaf team?' after we beat them," said sports information director Bob Westermann. "Human emotion plays more of a part at Gallaudet than other schools where it's always 'win, win, win!' " The Bisons got off to a 4-0 start this season and are rapidly gaining national recognition as a regional football power. ■ Philip Junker—The Hoya, Georgetown U.,DC

Cheerleaders seek athletic recognition... In the past, cheerleaders have been stereotyped as dizzy, loud-mouthed fans who like to prance in front of football stands. The Kent State cheerleaders are trying to change that image. "We're trying to make cheerleading a sport, and maintain it through practice, rules, and hard work," said Paul Pfahler, a junior cheerleading captain. Twenty-five hours a week, the 15 men and women work on their cheering, practicing as a group three days a week and with partners once a week. The cheerleaders also work out with weights. ■ Linda Sharkey—The BG News, Bowling Green U.,OH.

tion, battered spouses and paternity cases. Also included in the case load are lease disputes, public housing grievances, foreclosures, medicare problems, veterans benefits and successions, according to the Law School Dean's Office.

The student role will range from researching to organizing the cases. In addition, the students, unlike most lawyers, will have to travel to the homes of clients and witnesses for interviews.

Law School Dean John Kramer says that this will give the students two benefits. The first advantage is the exposure to people and their problems rather than remaining "buried in books." The second bonus is making friends and contacts in their chosen field, Kramer said.

Many students are perturbed that no credit will be given as an incentive for their volunteer work.

Other students, however, are optimistic about the program. "It's fine that we don't get credit for it. I think the idea is great, I really do. It gives all students exposure to the public, especially those who have gone into law for reasons other than to help the public," first-year student Sandy Robinson said.

Practicing attorneys will oversee the work done by the students. This interaction with lawyers is another main purpose of the requirement. Officials hope that as this unique program progresses other public interests and organizations will become involved.

RECREATION

Students relax mind and body through ancient Chinese art

By D. Stephen Voss
■ Daily Reveille
Louisiana State U.

When most people think about martial arts, they picture Chuck Norris or Bruce Lee—bulging, sweaty muscles, a black belt, and quick karate chops.

Very few imagine a well-lit room full of stress-filled college students and senior citizens seeking a "centered, harmonious existence," but according to instructor Bill Harrell Jr., that's what tai chi chuan is all about.

"People envision these Eastern arts as shrouded by incense, accompanied by the sound of deafening gongs, but should instead look at them as highly evolved arts that require serious study and diligent practice," Harrell said.

"There are so many people out there who can benefit from tai chi, but many Christian thinkers shy away from it because they think it's laced with Eastern religion," he said. "It's really a way to clean out our thoughts and cultivate our spiritual light."

Sometimes called "Chinese shadow boxing," tai chi is the martial artist's version of aerobic exercise.

Many tai chi students seek relief from arthritis, weight problems or "internal problems," Harrell said.

"This martial art is really built on fundamental principles that Mom always told us about: a suitable exercise program, proper rest and relaxation, and eating the right kinds of foods," Harrell said. "It's as simple as that."

"What terrifies me is when I see teenage college students so stiff they can't touch their toes, because they are so overweight," Harrell said.

Harrell said "literally hundreds of millions of people" in China use tai chi as an exercise method.

"I wish I had gotten involved in it 30 years ago. I think I am more limber now than when I was at college age," said James Hintze, a Louisiana State U. associate professor and student of tai chi.

"I got involved because tai chi is a physical and mental discipline, and it's good for you," Hintze said. "You don't have to be 18 and muscle-bound."

"There are so many people out there who can benefit from tai chi... It's a way to clean out our thoughts and cultivate our spiritual light."
— BILL HARRELL JR.

Harrell said the main purpose of tai chi is to relieve muscle tension, making it perfect for college students.

"We (people today) are trained to keep tension in our muscles. We don't even realize it," Harrell said.

"Tai chi involves a very mystical concept called chi—loosely translated as intrinsic energy, which moves through the body in channels called meridians and actually removes blockages along the path," Harrell said.

He said the Chinese believe people become unhealthy when these meridians are blocked by muscle tension.

"The crux is to be yielding, not to resist force with force, but with a relaxed body," Harrell said.

Harrell said tai chi can cure many problems caused by modern society.

"People in larger cities have lost touch with themselves and with each other. It's part of a dehumanization process caused when people live in crowds in our culture," Harrell said.

"We seem to thrive on violence," he said. "We expect a kind of reward when lawlessness goes unpunished."

Harrell said different tai chi groups usually develop a common "spirit" during the sessions, which reverses the dehumanization process.

Spelunkers find natural wonders underground

By Todd Mounce
■ Daily Egyptian
Southern Illinois U., Carbondale

It's dark, it's cool, it's damp, and you can't see your hand in front of your face. You're in another world, you're in a cave.

Spelunking, or cave exploring, isn't a sport for everyone. Because cavers often experience restricted movement, patience is a must.

"You have to want to do it; and if you don't want to, you're going to be miserable," said Phillip Moss, president of the Little Egyptian Grotto.

The Grotto is a student organization dedicated to cave conservation and exploration.

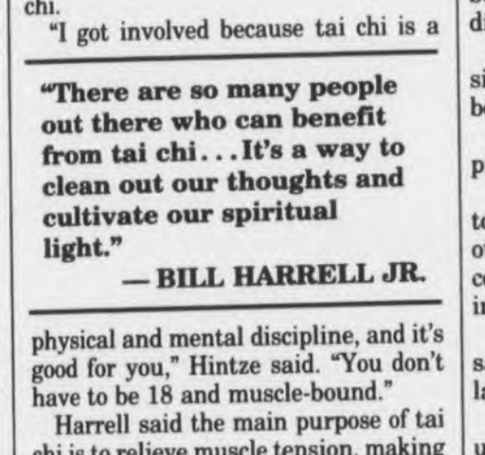
The club members incorporate exploration, surveying and photography into their weekend caving expeditions.

"There are places underground where you can go and be the first person there," Moss said. Moss, whose explorations include Mexico, has been caving for about 15 years.

"Curiosity and the unknown motivated me to begin caving," said treasurer Dan Williams.

Club members are concerned about damage being done within caves by people who aren't aware of the effect their actions might have on the cave's ecological system. Refuse is left, names written on the walls and cave inhabitants disturbed, Moss said.

Moss expressed the necessity of leaving a cave the way it is found. Bats, an endangered species in Illinois, will not frequent caves where there is human traffic. Even the compacting of sediments from walking interferes with animal life.



Members light their path with small celatin-powered lanterns, which are attached to their helmets, and handheld flashlights. They dress in clothes that repel water and aren't easily ripped. Occasionally members wear wetsuits.

Moss said there is a large concentration of caves in Missouri, Kentucky and Tennessee. The club travels to Missouri and to several other states.

Students wired on caffeine

By Pankaj Gupta
■ Daily Northwestern
Northwestern U., IL

It's late. The paper or problem set you've been blowing off is finally due. You need to be awake and alert.

Many students reach for their caffeine "fix" in the form of soft drinks, coffee, tea or tablets.

Caffeine is the most widely used, and maybe abused, mind-affecting drug in the world, said Satu Somani, a pharmacology researcher at the Southern Illinois U. School of Medicine.

What is it about this drug that provokes Americans to consume more than one billion tons of coffee, and one billion kilograms of caffeine, per year?

"I use it to stay awake (to study) for...chemistry quizzes," said freshman Syndey Chen.

In 1982, the average American consumed 90 to 130 milligrams of caffeine in coffee (1.52 cups), while the total daily intake was about 206 milligrams.

Caffeine affects the entire body through the central nervous system. It produces a sense of lessened fatigue, increased alertness, mild euphoria and a more rapid, clear flow of thought.

"I like to have a few cups of coffee to be up for my afternoon classes," said junior Melissa Rohrer.

Kaldi, an Arab goat herder, discovered coffee in 850 A.D. after observing night-long friskiness in his goats, who had fed on coffee-plant berries.

Puzzled by the odd behavior of his flock, Kaldi picked the berries and made a beverage from them. The coffee craze had begun.

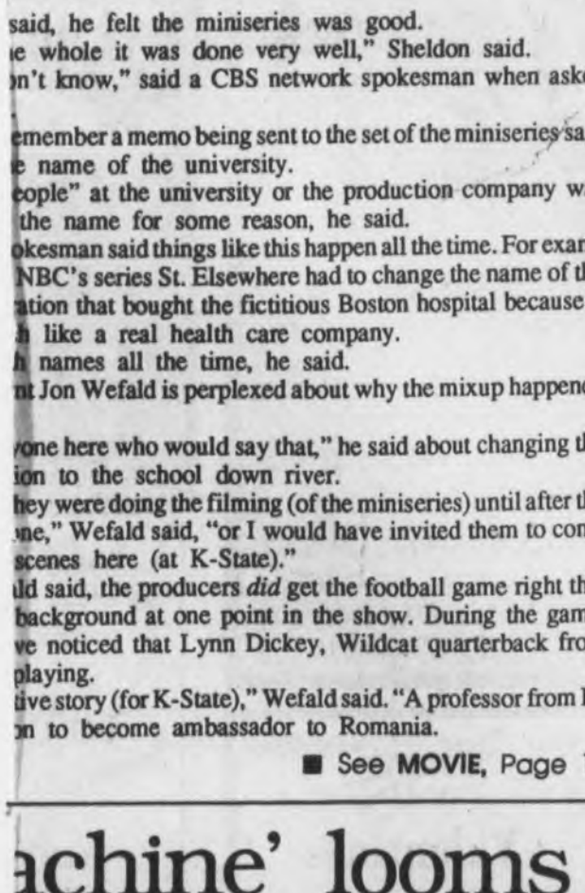
Coffee drinking was very popular during the Renaissance, supposedly providing inspiration and insight to the creators of many masterpieces.

Researchers have found that although caffeine is not addictive, some use of it can be habit-forming.

"I think people are dependent on it to get up in the morning," said Dr. Phillip Histand, director of outpatient services at Searle Student Health Service.

Though there have been no overdoses, Histand said, patients have come to him with tremors, nausea, vomiting, inability to sleep and hyperactivity.

At least fifty milligrams of caffeine are required to produce reactions in the central nervous and cardiovascular systems.



High intake of caffeine (over 250 milligrams per day) can produce nervousness, irritability, muscle twitchings, palpitations and hyperventilation.

Caffeine intake has also been related to higher risk of bladder cancer and to peptic ulcer disease.

New technique takes the needle out of dentistry... The USC School of Dentistry is doing research on a new, painless way of numbing the mouth for dental work. It's electronic dental anesthesia — a needle-free, drug-free method of blocking pain by stimulating nerves with electronic impulses — and it's as effective as local anesthesia for routine dental procedures. Patients can increase the amount of anesthesia by turning a dial on the controller any time they feel discomfort. "The best candidate (for this technique) is the needle-phobic," said Stanley Malamed, a dentist and associate professor of anesthesia. "Some people are allergic to local anesthesia, so now they have a reasonable alternative." ■ Daily Trojan, U. of Southern California

Acne medicine harmful to unborn... Accutane, the most successful chemical treatment for severe acne, can cause "serious birth defects in 60 to 70 percent of babies born to mothers on (the drug)," said Dr. Peter Lynch, head of the U. of Minnesota dermatology clinic. Treatment will not cause abnormalities in a child fathered by an Accutane user as the damage occurs during fetal development. The most common known side effect of Accutane use is chapped lips and skin. Other side effects include blurred vision and severe stomach pain. Long-term effects are not known. ■ Kate Peterson —Minnesota Daily, U. of Minnesota

Breakfast still most important meal of day... Studies indicate that those who eat breakfast live longer. Those who neglect to "break the fast" may find their energy levels lagging behind their cereal-eating friends. Weight loss is also more likely to occur when eating breakfast than when not. Thinness

mia. Both disorders are on the rise with an estimated 0.5 percent of 12-18 year-old American females suffering from anorexia nervosa, and 5 percent of adolescent and young adult females showing an incidence of bulimia; some figures are estimating the prevalence of bulimia at 20 percent of college-age women!

Males are not excluded from these disorders, as an estimated 5-10 percent of all anorexia nervosa and bulimia cases are found in men, with the possibility that up to 5 percent of college-age males are bulimics.

Anorexia nervosa is a syndrome of self-induced starvation or dehydration that is characterized by: an intense fear of becoming fat (which does not diminish as weight loss occurs); disturbed body image (no matter what anorexics look like, their self-perception is too fat); weight loss of more than 25 percent of original weight; a voluntary refusal to eat or to maintain a normal body weight; in females, a loss of menstrual cycles; and lastly, no known illness leading to the weight loss. The "typical" anorexic tends to be a perfectionist, obedient, overly compliant, highly motivated, successful academically and athletically, and well-liked by peers. Frequently, parents have high expectations and are overly protective; family conflicts are not resolved readily and it is hypothesized that anorexics restrict their food intake, pursuing "perfect thinness," as a way to exert some control in their lives.

Once they start dieting, they can't stop. In order to survive, an anorexic's body will literally break down its own muscles and vital organs (including the heart) for energy, drastically altering the metabolic and electrolyte balances. The physical consequences are often fatal.

Bulimia is recognized as recurrent episodes of binge eating (rapid food consumption in less than two hours) with at least three of the following characteristics: consumption of high-calorie, easily-digested food during a binge; termination of the binge by abdominal pain, sleep, social interruption, or self-induced vomiting; repeated attempts to lose weight by severely restricted diets, self-induced vomiting, or laxative or diuretic use; and frequent weight fluctuation greater than 10 pounds due to alternating binges and fasts. Bulimia includes an awareness of abnormal eating patterns and the fear of not being able to stop voluntarily, depressed mood and self-deprecating thoughts following binges.

Bulimics begin to diet, they get hungry, binge-eat (the normal response to starvation and dieting), feel guilty, which leads to purging, more guilt sets in and the cycle continues. Secondary to the regurgitated stomach acids from persistent vomiting, the bulimic may have bad breath, chronic sore throat, swollen salivary glands and eroded teeth. Frequent vomiting, laxative abuse and diuretic use leads to alteration of fluid status, constipation, diarrhea, and esophageal or stomach hemmorhage, which may prove fatal.

How Bulimia Kills

- HYPOKALEMIA: A loss of serum potassium, due to low food intake or vomiting, which can lead to heart or kidney failure. This is the most serious consequence.
- DEHYDRATION: Due to low food intake or vomiting.
- INTERNAL BLEEDING: Including gastric ulcers, due to trauma from forceful vomiting.
- TOOTH AND GUM DECAY: Due to vomiting of stomach acids.
- ESOPHAGAL RUPTURES
- ENLARGED SALIVARY GLANDS
- ELECTROLYTE IMBALANCE

■ Nicole Blohm—Daily Trojan, U. of Southern California

There is no single cause for eating disorders; a combination of psychological, familial, sociocultural and biological factors contribute to them. There is increasing evidence that society's emphasis on thinness is placing great pressures on many adolescents to strive for a thinner body shape.

There is also no one method of treatment. Each case represents an individual with specific needs; optimal treatment includes combining nutritional rehabilitation, psychotherapy, behavior modification, family therapy and possibly medication. Treatment spans months or years, and final prognosis is questionable.

Preventing eating disorders is not yet possible, but the recognition that people come in many shapes and sizes, and a wide range of body types is acceptable in our society, may help. Appropriate education in nutrition and exercise management may lead to a decline in the incidence of eating disorders.

nifer Botts, a health aide and one of two student coordinators for the program.

Most health aides say their experiences as "dorm doctors" have been rewarding.

"I like to feel that I make a difference in the residence hall, that I can help a person physically and emotionally," said Anita Spiess, the other student coordinator.

Their responsibilities include "answering every knock on the door anytime of the night no matter what, because they're responsible for every resident in the dorm," Botts said.

Last year's 50 health aides handled more than 5,000 cases, each averaging 40 cases per quarter, Lubin said.

"What I think makes our program unique is that it is voluntary," she said. "Their pay is chocolate chip cookies."

Local cookies may sell in N.Y.

By Melinda Tiemeyer
Collegian Reporter

Take one spiced-up recipe for chocolate chip cookies, one brown paper bag, a smiling caricature of the cook on the label and you end up with "Lance's Chocolate Chip Cookies."

Currently sold exclusively at Functions in Manhattan, the cookies may be making an appearance in New York City — at Bloomingdale's.

Lance Schwulst, senior in journalism and mass communications, submitted his cookies in a promotional campaign for Bloomingdale's that will feature Kansas products in its store. Products from across the state have been submitted for the selection process. Selection will take place this week in New York.

After hearing about the event on the news, Schwulst contacted the State Department of Agriculture and described his product to them.

"They asked me if they were any good, and I told them I was confident of it," Schwultz said. "A lot of people say it's the best cookie they've ever had."

Schwultz said he uses a commom recipe with a few revisions and additions. The major difference between his cookie and others is that his is a spiced cookie, he said.

"My roommate and I were kind of drunk one night and started making cookies — we just grabbed some spices off the shelf and poured them in," Schwulst said. "Luckily, the next day we remembered what we put in them."

After sampling his cookies, Schwulst's friends persuaded him to package the cookies and try to sell them.

"I called a friend in graphic design and he made a caricature of me, then I got the label made at Kinko's," Schwulst said. "I wanted something 'home spun' looking, so we came up with a cookie bag idea. It went really fast. We had a product and a package the next day."

Schwulst is in the process of getting his product patented, but hasn't decided if he will market it. He is waiting to hear from Bloomingdale's and is hoping to receive positive feedback.

"We've sold a few bags up at the dorms at $3.50 a bag for six cookies. I'm looking to market them at $5.00 a bag eventually," Schwulst said.

The cookies cost $2.50 a batch to make, because Schwulst is still buying his ingredients at retail prices.

"They're an expensive cookie to produce," he said. "I can only get two dozen out of a batch."

If his cookies are selected, Schwulst said he believes the Bloomingdale's clientele would be a perfect consumer for his product.

"I'm not counting on anything. I'm taking it all step by step," he said.

Miniseries takes change in locale courtesy of CBS

"JUNCTION CITY." The scene opens, looking at one of those big, nifty houses you would expect to find in historic Junction City, Kan.

It's not every day that an Exciting! Riveting! Blockbuster! miniseries comes into the back yard of Wildcat Land, but there it was, the miniseries based on Sidney Sheldon's novel "Windmills of the Gods" starting right down the road.

So it might have been a little more than just passing interest for some K-Staters as they settled down to watch the first part Sunday night.

Maybe a little daydreaming took place as some students, faculty or alumni wondered where Jacklyn Smith was when they were at K-State.

Then things began to fall apart for Wildcat fans everywhere.

The all-American girl, a K-State political science teacher in the book, is suddenly transformed into a Jayhawk.

What happened?

"I really cannot answer that," said author Sheldon. "The producer made that decision with the director."

However, Michael Viner, producer of the miniseries, said the request came from CBS network to change the names. Lee Phillips was the director.

He said it had something to do with the networks standards and practices.

"I was not as involved with this as maybe I should have (been)."

—Sidney Sheldon

Sheldon said he was first aware of the change in school names after the shooting of the film had taken place. He saw it at a premiere screening a few days before the first part aired on CBS.

"I was not as involved with this as maybe I should have (been)," Sheldon said.

However, he said, he felt the miniseries was good.

"I think on the whole it was done very well," Sheldon said.

"Actually, I don't know," said a CBS network spokesman when asked about the mixup.

He said he did remember a memo being sent to the set of the miniseries saying to change the name of the university.

Either "legal people" at the university or the production company was asked to change the name for some reason, he said.

The network spokesman said things like this happen all the time. For example, producers for NBC's series St. Elsewhere had to change the name of the health care corporation that bought the fictitious Boston hospital because it sounded too much like a real health care company.

It happens with names all the time, he said.

K-State President Jon Wefald is perplexed about why the mixup happened to K-State.

"There isn't anyone here who would say that," he said about changing the university affiliation to the school down river.

"I didn't know they were doing the filming (of the miniseries) until after the production was done," Wefald said, "or I would have invited them to come and shoot some scenes here (at K-State)."

However, Wefald said, the producers did get the football game right that was heard in the background at one point in the show. During the game, viewers might have noticed that Lynn Dickey, Wildcat quarterback from 1968-1970, was playing.

"It's a very positive story (for K-State)," Wefald said. "A professor from K-State who goes on to become ambassador to Romania.

Police question letter to editor

By Deron Johnson
Campus Editor

When Abby DeShane wrote a letter to the Collegian Feb. 1, she wasn't prepared for the response it generated.

DeShane's letter, which appeared in Monday's Collegian, was critical of the newspaper's coverage of campus events, and, as an example, she cited an alleged campus rape that had been reported to the Riley County Police Department, but which never appeared in the Collegian.

The letter stated: "I have even heard from a source at the Riley County Police Department that there was a rape on campus sometime early this year — why wasn't this reported in the Collegian?"

As a result of her letter, DeShane, a reference librarian at Farrell Library, found a K-State Police officer waiting to ask her questions when she arrived at work Monday afternoon.

"Yesterday, (the officer) was just waiting when I got here at 1 (p.m.)," she said Tuesday afternoon. The officer was Lt. James Tubach of campus police.

DeShane said Tubach approached her in front of the reference desk where she works and asked her about the letter, telling her that her information was wrong and demanding to know her source's name. She refused.

"I told him I wasn't going to tell him who my source at the RCPD was," she said, adding that even if asked by the RCPD, she wouldn't reveal her source.

After refusing, she said Tubach asked again, and she told him one more time she wouldn't reveal her source.

"He was really angry," she said. "He didn't like it all. It wasn't a pleasant situation."

Tubach said he was only out to quell what he believes to be false information.

"The only thing I was after was the source of information," he said. "It was false information as far as we are

The United State's growing stockpile of nuclear weapons is creating a "total death machine," according to Richard Rhodes, author of "The Making of the Atomic Bomb."

Rhodes discussed "The Arms Race, the Background of Hope" with a crowd of about 250 Tuesday night in Forum Hall during the first of four lectures scheduled for the Lou Douglas Lecture Series.

He said caution, fear, ambition and greed have promoted the growth of nuclear weapons.

"The reality of nuclear weapons, which the United States and the Soviet Union continually butt their heads against, is their total uselessness.

"They cannot be used. We have built for our enemies, as well as for ourselves, a total death machine," he said.

A nuclear bomb has not been exploded in anger since World War II. As a result, he said, there has been an increase in guerrilla-type fighting and the development of effective but cheap weapons.

Currently, the United States has a stockpile of about 50,000 nuclear weapons that is still growing. That is comparable to 5 million Hiroshimas, Rhodes said. Each year 2,000 nuclear warheads are built.

"We are naked to our enemies now, and in the foreseeable future," Rhodes said. "A buildup of arms only adds to the peril of an accident or a miscalculation."

He said the development of nuclear weapons has helped force nations to negotiate for world peace.

"Nuclear weapons are anonymous, mass-produced objects. But not only are they weapons, they serve as tools — tools that help promote political change."

The knowlege of nuclear weapons has provided a type of low-grade world peace, he said. And not only has a nuclear bomb never been fired in anger since World War II, but the superpowers have never placed their military at full alert.

Kremlin leary of NATO efforts

MOSCOW — NATO efforts to develop weapons to supplant those banned by the new superpower accord will undermine the agreement and could have serious consequences, Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev said Tuesday.

He also acknowledged a "deep-rooted" fear of the Soviets by some Europeans that could make them reluctant to give up nuclear arms.

The Kremlin leader made the comments in a meeting with Lothar Spaeth, minister-president of the West German state of Baden-Wuerttemberg, who is on an official visit to Moscow, the Tass news agency reported.

On Sunday, two U.S. officials attending a weekend meeting in West Germany called for improvements in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's short-range nuclear missiles and conventional forces.

Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci and Sen. Sam Nunn, a Georgia Democrat who is chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said improvements are needed because of the agreement Gorbachev and President Reagen signed Dec. 8 in Washington to scrap intermediate-range nuclear missiles in Europe.

Gorbachev told Spaeth "attempts to undermine the INF (intermediate-range nuclear forces) treaty with the help of 'compensation' can lead to a very grave political mistake."

Defense Minister Dmitri T. Yazov said in an article published Monday in Pravda, the Communist Party newspaper, that the Soviet Union wants to reduce forces in Europe to a minimum and remove the most dangerous offensive weapons.

Top of new building must go

ALBANY, N.Y. — A developer must lop the top 12 stories off a Manhattan apartment building that violates zoning regulations, even though a faulty city zoning map led to the error, the state's highest court ruled Tuesday.

The city gave the developer permission to build the unfinished 31-story tower after relying, as had the developer, on a faulty city zoning map.

Judge Joseph Bellacosa, writing for the Court of Appeals, said that even if there was a mistake by the city, "reasonable diligence" by a "good-faith inquirer" would have uncovered the true zoning rules.

The Court of Appeals unanimously agreed with lower court rulings that Parkview Associates of Queens violated a special zone with construction of the $7.2 million building on Manhattan's Upper East Side.

Gasoline tax causes problems

WASHINGTON — Congress' war on tax cheats is producing some innocent casualties: state and local governments that may be forced to cut services in order to pay a federal tax on gasoline.

The gas tax will be refunded by the federal government but no one is sure how long that will take. In the meantime, states, cities and counties will lose the use of the tax money.

"We buy about $885,000 worth of gasoline a year and the tax on that is about $80,000," explained Mayor Wayne Corpening of Winston-Salem, N.C. "What we do is pay that $80,000 to the government and lose interest on it. We can't spend the money where it's needed. And the law creates a lot of paperwork for us and for the IRS."

A similar problem faces farmers who use diesel fuel for off-the-road purposes. Starting April 1, they will have to pay the 15.1-cent-a-gallon tax on each purchase and apply for a refund when they file their income-tax return each year.

"The bottom line is that there is a revenue need by the feds," said Susan White, legislative representative of the National Association of Counties. "They want to curb abuse and don't mind doing it with our money."

Car chase ends with 2 dead

DENVER — A robbery suspect killed a policeman with his getaway car Tuesday, then was surrounded and shot to death by officers after a TV station helicopter blocked his escape while filming the chase.

A hostage forced to drive at gunpoint was unharmed during the dramatic episode that ended with the suspect's death in a northwest Denver supermarket parking lot, authorities said.

Police said the unidentified suspect also fired two shots at a car containing a woman and her 14-month-old child when he tried to commandeer their vehicle. Neither was hurt.

K-State ag center proposed

TOPEKA — Sen. Fred Kerr, R-Pratt, introduced a bill in the Senate Tuesday that would create a center to assist agriculture-related businesses.

Under Kerr's bill, the center would develop "Kansas' agriculture processing potential" by providing technical assistance to small businesses across the state. He proposed that the center be at K-State.

An 11-member leadership council also would be established to supervise the center's start-up.

"Industries associated with food processing and with other agricultural product processing are industries with an excellent potential for growth," Kerr said. "Today's society is creating increased demands for convenience foods, health foods, microwavable foods and pet foods."

"Kansas is a natural for being a center for such growth," he went on.

The bill would require businesses engaged in food processing or other value-added agriculture business to pay $10. The money would go to the center.

Funds lacking for museum

By Melinda Tiemeyer
Collegian Reporter

Results of a feasibility study cited Kansas' unstable economy as a major factor blocking progress on the proposed art museum on campus.

"The Art Museum Steering Committee has not been meeting very frequently, because at this point, there isn't really any great urgency about it," said Ruth Ann Wefald, chairwoman of the committee.

The committee is trying to raise funds for a new building on campus which would house an art collection of works that could include Pablo Picasso, Henri Matisse and Salvador Dali.

The majority of the proposed collection is currently dispersed throughout campus buildings or placed in storage, Wefald said.

However, a lack of funds has kept the project from taking off.

Wefald said the committee would need to raise about $5 million in grants and donations before a new building for an art museum is possible.

"A feasibility study was done, and it basically said that we do not have the ability right now to raise the funds to build an art museum," Wefald said. "A lot of factors are involved — one is the economy of Kansas."

Art Loub, president of the KSU Foundation, said the study reflects only a particular segment of the public's opinion toward the project.

The study also indicated that only $2 million of the $5 million that is needed could be raised, Loub said.

"People don't realize that 95 percent of the money will come from 5 percent of the population," Loub said. "Vocal support has to be turned into monetary support."

Roger Routson, assistant professor of art, believes an art museum is something the University has needed for a long time.

"It would be a wonderful attraction, and it would help to bring other events to campus," he said.

Another reason the project hasn't taken off is a lack of awareness concerning the art collection, Wefald said.

"Kansas State is not known out and about for the arts," Wefald said. "We are known for a lot of great programs, but most people don't even realize that we even have an art collection."

To increase awareness, the committee is promoting an educational program about K-State arts, she said. Its purpose is to generate interest in the arts at K-State and about the possible art museum.

"What we're trying to do is dovetail our program with existing alumni events," Wefald said. "We're going to bring our celebration of the arts to the (planned) event."

In addition to a brief slide presentation discussing the art collection, the program includes a group of students who will give cameo performances of music, dance and theater.

Individuals must look at the art museum as a University resource and as a valuable public relations tool for visitors, said Charles Stroh, head of the art department and committee member.

"People tend to see the museum as only benefiting the art department, when it really benefits the entire University," he said.

K-State is the only university in the Big Eight that does not have some kind of art museum, Stroh said.

The committee is considering using Room 315 of Farrell Library as a temporary location for at least a portion of the collection, Wefald said.

"We discussed that at the last meeting and there was a lot of excitement about getting the collection out where the students, faculty and visitors on campus can see it," she said.

FDIC office closes; fewer banks failing

By The Associated Press

ST. JOSEPH, Mo. — The St. Joseph office of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. will close, officials announced Tuesday. They said that fewer banks are failing than had been expected and that the office has had success in disposing of failed banks' assets.

The St. Joseph office will close May 31, said Fred Ozyp, a liquidation specialist with the agency.

Approximately 165 employees in the agency's liquidation, accounting and legal divisions were informed of the decision Tuesday morning.

Although FDIC has had a presence in the St. Joseph area since First National Bank was closed by the comptroller of the currency in October 1985, the office was not opened until September 1986.

Ozyp said the office is now handling about $130 million in assets — about half the $240 million in assets it carried at its peak a year ago. Assets remaining at the end of May will be transferred to the FDIC office in Kansas City.

State's poor deserve an adequate defense

Approximately 70 percent of all accused felons in Kansas cannot afford to hire a lawyer. Therefore, the court appoints a lawyer to them. Currently, the judge is allowed to force the lawyer to take on a case that provides a fee of $30 an hour, with a overall fee ceiling.

The current system was ruled unconstitutional by the Kansas Supreme Court in December 1987, and the state has until July 1 to come up with a solution to the problem.

The state Board of Indigent Defense Services believes it has come up with a workable solution. The current public defender system would be expanded to cover a six-region area. It is expected that 40 to 50 people, about half being lawyers, would need to be hired to fill the new positions. The public defenders in each region would handle all state-provided defense in their respective regions. Any overflow of cases would be handled by volunteer lawyers from the private sector. Their pay would be $50 an hour with no ceiling on total cost.

This seems to be a viable solution. A public defender's job is a good opportunity for lawyers to get a number of cases under their belts. It is also cheaper for the state. Fewer private-sector lawyers would be required to handle cases than are needed now, and this would also allow the accused felons to have more time and effort put into their cases by their lawyers.

This is not to say that all the current judge appointed lawyers are slighting their clients because the state is not able to pay the lawyer as much money. But, it would seem difficult to believe that any lawyer would pay as much attention, or go that extra mile, when they know they won't get paid for it because they have hit their ceiling.

In order to give each accused felon who can't afford to finance their own defense as good of a defense as those who can afford their own defense, incorporating a public defender's program for the entire state would be an excellent solution.

Cigarette companies not to blame for death

Antonio Cipollone wants justice. But, other than sympathy and empathy, he really is owed nothing.

Cipollone is suing three tobacco companies, alleging that they are liable in his wife's death from lung cancer after 40 years of smoking.

The companies — Philip Morris Co., Lorillard Inc. and Liggett Group Inc., parent company of the Liggett & Myers Co., — say Cipollone's wife chose to smoke even after knowing of the warnings.

However, according to a L&M researcher and a confidential document released in court, L&M developed a cigarette that nearly eliminated cancer in animal tests but never placed it on the market.

Cippolone's attorneys are now alleging that cigarette companies were negligent, in part, because they failed to do enough research on the risks of smoking, kept quiet what they did do and failed to market a safer cigarette.

Regardless of this new information, the tobacco companies should not be held liable for the death of Rose Cippolone.

Tobacco company officials said the experimental cigarettes in which palladium metal and magnesium nitrate were added to tobacco were never sold because later tests didn't match the earlier test results that showed that tumors on mouse skin and mouse skin cancers were reduced by as much as 95 percent and 100 percent, respectively.

Furthermore, the document that was presented in court was only one of hundreds of thousands gathered in the case and it must be remembered that "nearly" eliminating cancer isn't enough. Either something is cancerous or it isn't.

Perhaps the most important thing to remember, however, is that Rose Cippolone continued to smoke some 20 years after the U.S. Surgeon General required that warning labels be printed on cigarette packs. To rule now that cigarette manufacturers are liable in cancer deaths would open up a Pandora's box of litigation.

After knowing of the danger, her actions — as well as the responsibility of taking care of her own health — were her own.

KU deserves quality lecture series

The University of Kansas should be embarrassed.

Embarrassed that all the big names speak in the Landon Lecture Series at Kansas State University. Embarrassed that KU does not have a large organized lecture series that attracts important people to speak. The Landon Lecture Series on Public Issues at K-State has grown into a series of increasing importance in its 21 years. It is financed by 450 patrons who donate $100 a year. That is $45,000 a year that the series has to attract the many important public officials, journalists and economists to the K-State campus.

A lecture series with contributing patrons supplying financing each year would be a beginning to drawing these big-name speakers to campus with greater continuity.

Then KU could shed the embarrassment of being in the shadow of K-State's popular and enduring lecture series.

When is enough enough?

U.S. must quit supporting Israel

"When the Israelis arrested all these people last week, they said they were just arresting the 'organizers.' One thousand organizers? In 10 years they will just have to put a wall up around the whole West Bank and Gaza strip to arrest all of the organizers."
—Palestinian journalist Ibrahim Karaeen

Commentary

MICHAEL NICHOLS
Collegian Columnist

The present unrest in the West Bank and Gaza Strip is not something new, merely the outbreak of pent-up frustrations that have been building for years. What is new, however, is how the world is beginning to perceive Israel's military tactics to quell riots, indiscriminately using live ammunition to dispel crowds of civilians chanting slogans and throwing stones. What has become apparent is that the term "democracy" is obsolete in Israel, with a highly suppressed minority being forbidden any expression of nationalism whatsoever.

In a recent riot, three Palestinians were killed, bringing the number of casualties to 48 since the initial eruption of violence late last year. And if the figures of those wounded or denied their basic human rights were added, perhaps even the staunchest defenders of the Israeli government would be astounded.

When a black youth is cut down by the South African police in a demonstration in Soweto, human rights activists and liberals throughout the world rise in protest, and rightfully so. However, a little more than a week ago, where was this same outcry when a 35-year-old mother of eight was murdered by an Israeli soldier while trying to protect her children? Must it take decades for the American public to condemn inhumane acts in Israel, as it did in South Africa?

While many may criticize any parallels drawn between Israel and South Africa, one cannot fail to notice how both countries have become increasingly more alike over the years.

First of all, like many bastions of fascism currently in existence, Israel and South Africa make common practice of suppressing a sizeable ethnic group, imposing curfews on sealed-off districts deemed potentially unstable. Both nations also publicly persecute journalists and limit, as well as censor, their participation in "high-pressure" areas on the grounds of protecting national security.

Perhaps the most frightening of all traits shared by both nations is their exclusive dependence on a powerful and generous nation: the United States. American support of both countries is justified by our seemingly incessant desire to rid the world of terrorism and to stifle the "spread" of communism.

According to the February issue of The Progressive, the largest sum of U.S. foreign aid goes to Israel. That aid is currently $3 billion a year, 60 percent of which is strictly for the military. In the 12th edition of "World Military and Social Expenditures 1987-1988," Israel imported more than $4.1 billion in arms from the United States last year. While apparently a very large sum, one must take into consideration that much of this weaponry is later re-routed to such destinations as South Africa, or to the Nicaraguan Contras in Central America.

However, very recently, the U.S. government abstained from, rather than vetoing, a U.N. Security Council vote denouncing Israeli violence in the occupied territories. Even more startling was the State Department's mild criticism of the shooting of Palestinians by Israeli soldiers — a very rare disapproval. However rare or positive, though, these actions are hardly sufficient.

Without American aid, there is no way Israel could maintain its military might and ignore the pleas of its Palestinian citizens. In other words, a firm slap on the wrist by the United States could certainly lead to a change of Israeli attitude. Perhaps then Israel would be ready to accept some essential aspects of the problem in which it is finding itself.

First of all, Israel must realize the Palestinians are in Israel for good. Short of Meir Kahane and other blithering idiots who wish to expel all Arabs from Israel, there must be a sizeable majority of Israelis who can understand the Palestinian claim to a homeland.

Second, Israel must recognize the Palestinian Liberation Organization as the authentic voice of the Palestinian people. Israel shuns the PLO while at the same time suppressing the organization of any other political group in the region. Refusing to "negotiate with terrorists" is a blindly contradictory practice.

Third, and perhaps most important, Israel must realize that the PLO and the vast majority of Palestinians are ready for peace. The cry to drive Israel into the sea has long since been abandoned by the majority of Palestinians who would much rather have a safe nation in which to live.

The problem could be solved, lives could be saved and less money could be spent in the process if only Israel was given the facts and some forceful advice from an ally.

Society's fascination with 'big' will spell success for Hypermart

There is an old adage that says "bigger is not always better." Evidently, this is a saying that lacks credibility in our society today. One only has to watch the commercials that run on television to know we are a society that values "bigness."

Advertising agencies serve their customers based on the premise that the ads they produce will be viewed favorably by the targeted audience. This can only be done by determining the attitudes and values of the audience that the agency's client wants to reach so the advertisements will appeal to the target audience's particular set of attitudes and values. Thus, advertisements are often a good indicator of the attitudes our society has toward right and wrong, good and bad, etc.

Our society sees nothing wrong with being the "big kid on the block," and indeed perceives it favorably. Take, for example, the message reflected in the ads the Shearson Lehman brokerage company ran following its acquisition of E.F. Hutton. (Quiet everyone — E.F. might be talking!) Its main message was that Shearson Lehman was now the largest brokerage firm on Wall Street, surpassing Merrill Lynch. Never mind that it was "big" enough before the acquisition to provide every brokerage service a customer could ever want. Never mind that several hundred of E.F. Hutton's employees lost their jobs, Shearson Lehman was now the "BIGGEST."

The sad thing is not so much that E.F. Hutton was bought out (although I will miss those "when E.F. Hutton talks ... " ads), but that people view that as being favorable for them. So favorable that it is the main theme of Shearson Lehman's advertising, as if going from "huge" to "mega-huge" is going to help it serve us any better.

Let me make another example that is closer to home to show our value of "bigness." Billionaire and Wal-Mart mogul Sam Walton has seen fit to open Hypermart USA in Topeka. I fail to see what is so exciting about having a large, tacky, red and yellow tent in our state capital, but some people are getting really excited about it. I think they are excited because, at Hypermart's low prices, they can now afford to buy three disposable shirts for what they used to pay for two disposable shirts at a Wal-Mart.

Granted, there is no question that one can probably save money on purchases from Hypermart, savings that come from Hypermart's volume and bigness. However, I hope Kansas residents will consider the ramifications of their actions before patronizing Hypermart.

Economic principle says there is "no such thing as a free lunch." By and large, every dollar spent at Hypermart will be one that is not spent at local merchants' stores, stores that cannot compete solely based on price. Logic would also tell us that means some of those local merchants will probably go out of business. Thus, people will be put out of work, offsetting the increase in jobs provided by Hypermart. "Jobs are jobs" you might say, but are they?

America was built by an entrepreneurial spirit; people wanted the independence that owning and running one's own business and/or land provides. The effect of Hypermart will become obvious. We will probably be exchanging dependent, minimum-wage earners for our healthy, independent, middle-class entrepreneurs. I know which group I would rather have in my community. That is why I laud the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce's orientation of only luring new businesses that do not compete for existing dollars, but rather for new dollars.

Local businesses provide advantages aside from price. Service, genuine friendliness and a vested interest in the prosperity of the community are just a few. These advantages are enough, in my mind, to offset any short-term gains from price savings at a Hypermart.

The goal we are trying to reach is to have the highest quality of life we can, but I am not sure quality of life can be measured in the size of our stores and companies. I am sure my life would not seem more fulfilling just because I am able to get a haircut, laundry detergent and lunch in the same large, tacky, red and yellow tent.

Third candidate addresses issues

Vet Med college continues interviews for new dean

By Lori Ingmire
Collegian Reporter

The process of appointing a dean to the College of Veterinary Medicine continued as the third of five candidates, Michael Lorenz, addressed an audience on the topic of education in veterinary medicine.

Lorenz, associate dean for academic affairs in the College of Veterinary Medicine at the University of Georgia, was on campus three days for interviews.

Lorenz titled his presentation in the form of a question, "Veterinary Medicine Education -- Is There a Crisis?" He answered his own question: "Yes."

"I think there is a crisis," Lorenz said. "As educators, we're doing a good job, but we could be doing better."

A current issue at hand, he said, is a decline in the pool of veterinary school applicants. He attributed this problem to the entry-level salary of graduates of veterinary medicine, the length of the education process and the effort, time and money required to receive a degree when compared to the rewards.

"Veterinary school applicants numbers are down, with the number of available positions in the field holding constant," Lorenz said. "There has been a decrease in male applicants, although the number of female applicants has increased, which in itself is very good for the profession."

Another current topic is the medical information explosion. Lorenz said students are responsible for learning more information, with the base of factual knowledge expanding.

"The amount of medical information doubles every 20 months," he said. "Students are held more accountable."

Lorenz covered the development of interest in non-practice careers, broad veterinary medicine educations and knowledge acquisition vs. application. He said help for educational problems is available through information technology and textbooks.

"I see computers fitting into the K-State program in many ways," Lorenz said. "They would aid in diagnostic plans, updates on diseases, consultations on cases, expert systems, formularies and provide toxicology hotlines."

Lorenz has been in his current position at the University of Georgia since 1982. He received a bachelor's degree from Oklahoma State University in 1967 and earned a doctor of veterinary medicine degree in 1969 from the same university.

In 1969, he was an intern and an assistant professor at Cornell University. He joined the University of Georgia's faculty in 1979.

Students experience violent relations

By Shelly Tierney
Collegian Reporter

One in every five college students has been involved in an abusive relationship and experiencing a violent relationship can "train" people into accepting domestic violence.

"Statistics show that relationship violence is a training ground for domestic violence. It is not something that just occurs. It is usually learned at a younger age," said Denny Orr, coordinator of residential life at Emporia State University.

Orr spoke Tuesday about violence in relationships as part of the Susan B. Anthony Awareness Week.

Domestic violence affects about one in four families, he said.

"Every 28 seconds a wife is beaten by her husband," Orr said.

Violence can be physical, sexual or emotional.

Hitting, shoving, biting or hurting another person is considered physical violence.

Sexual violence includes unwanted touching, or asking an unwilling person to dress in a provocative manner or to do something sexual unwillingly.

"Emotional violence could be anything which plays on another's emotions," Orr said.

There are tension, violence and "honeymoon" stages in violent relationships, Orr said. But denial is at the center of the cycle.

Most victims will deny that violence occurs in the relationship if they are not in the violent stage of the cycle at the time, Orr said.

The honeymoon stage follows the violent stage.

During this stage the abused person may be given flowers, gifts and promises by the abuser that the violence will not reoccur, Orr said.

The abused person may exhibit a great deal of self-denial, low self-esteem and an inability to handle emotional situations.

"They tend to rely on external forces for direction. The abuser is willing to give those directions — forcibly if need be," he said.

Neither the abuser nor the person being abused may realize this cycle is occuring.

"Both are under the impression that the honeymoon stage isn't going to go away," he said.

When the relationship is in the violent stage, Orr said the person being abused is more likely to accept help from others. But, he said, the key to intervention is helping both people in the relationship.

It is important to get the abused person to a safe place before he or she can be persuaded to get help, he said.

"Get them to trust you and convince them to take a good look at the relationship," Orr said.

While trying to help someone in a violent relationship, it is important to try to understand why they may be staying in the relationship.

Farm credit system suffers; farmers unable to carry debt

By Audra Dietz
Collegian Reporter

Low grain prices and high interest rates have saddled farmers with a debt load they can't carry and the farm credit system is taking the brunt of the blow, said Dave Woolfolk, president of the Northeast Farm Credit Services.

Woolfolk spoke Tuesday on government agriculture policies at "Focus on Farming," a forum sponsored by the Manhattan League of Women Voters.

"If you understand agriculture, there's no such thing as just the American farmer," Woolfolk said.

Every phase of the agriculture industry, not just farming, is affected by the farm credit system, he said.

Measures that helps one phase of agriculture hurt another, Woolfolk said, adding that producers suffer from low grain prices, while the cattle feeders benefit.

The farm crisis is causing some major changes in the industry.

"There's a big push for efficiency, especially in credit," Woolfolk said. But, he said, agriculture can't solve its problems alone.

"I don't believe agriculture can survive without financial support of some kind," he said.

Farmers must make drastic changes to survive the crisis. They need to prepare to operate on less income in 1990, he said, because the federal budget for agriculture is expected to be cut again.

Most people don't realize the effect agriculture has on the rest of the economy, Woolfolk said, noting that the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce doesn't even have a committee on agriculture.

Agriculture isn't one of the government's priorities and is the first to go at budget-cutting time. Traditionally, when the federal budget has been cut, grain subsidies have been reduced and the farmers subsequently suffer, Woolfolk said.

Project helps wild birds

By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reporter

Modern technology affects the lives of wild animals in many ways. Often, people will attempt to correct society's encroachment by trying to nurse an injured animal back to health in their home. In the case of raptors, or birds of prey, this is often a useless gesture.

The Prairie Raptor Project is a non-profit effort designed to rehabilitate injured birds of prey in a way that will eventually allow them to be returned to the wild.

Maure Weigle, founder and director of the Prairie Raptor Project, spoke on the project Tuesday at the Holidome as part of the Winter Education Program Series sponsored by the Friends of the Sunset Zoo.

Raptors, especially young ones, found and cared for by the general public often become imprinted into thinking that they are human, Weigle said. Most die because they either do not know how to feed and care for themselves, or because they try to live too close to mankind.

The raptor project solves this problem by reducing human contact with the birds.

The raptors are kept in open-air flight cages with other birds in order re-orient for life on their own, Weigle said. As soon as the birds are physically suited to feed and care for themselves again, they are released.

Weigle began his work in 1979 when he found an injured Redtail hawk and rehabilitated it in his garage. The program has since developed into the largest raptor research center in Kansas.

In its first year, 16 birds went through the program. In 1986, 235 birds were re-introduced to the wild, Weigle said.

Sweeten Valentine's Day for someone sweet

By Robert Clasen
Collegian Reporter

Valentine's Day is one of the most special days of the year. It is the day people share their deepest thoughts and feelings with those they love the most.

It is also a time for gift-giving, a night on the town or that romantic homemade dinner by candlelight.

However you choose to celebrate, a tradition on this day is sweets.

Whether it's that box of candy given with flowers, or a special dessert by the fireplace after dinner, sweets are always a welcome, and sometimes expected, part of Valentine's Day.

Look below for desserts and candies that can add to the success of any special evening. You may even be able to deliver them with flowers for extra points from your sweetie.

Sweetheart Cookies

½ cup butter (at room temperature)
½ cup sugar
1 egg yolk
½ teaspoon vanilla
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 egg white
1 cup cake flour
¼ teaspoon salt
Finely chopped walnuts
Red jelly

Cream butter and sugar. Add egg yolk. Add vanilla, lemon juice, flour and salt. Mix dough until very smooth, then chill. Shape into small balls about the size of a large filbert. Roll balls in: first — slightly beaten egg white; second — finely chopped walnuts.

Place cookies on greased cookie sheet. Dent the top of each cookie with the tip of a teaspoon. Fill the dents with a dab of red jelly, such as red currant jelly. Bake 15-20 minutes at 350 degrees.

Makes 2 dozen, small

Cherries Jubilee

In the microwave:

Total cooking time 9 minutes.

1 can (1 pound, 14 ounces) pitted, bing cherries (reserve ¼ cup juice
1 jar (10 ounces) currant jelly
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1½ teaspoon cornstarch
1 teaspoon grated orange rind
¼ cup brandy

Combine reserved cherry juice, jelly, lemon juice, cornstarch and orange rind in 2-quart glass measure or microproof bowl, stirring to dissolve cornstarch. Cook on HI (max. power) 4½ minutes or until thickened, stirring once during cooking time. Add cherries. Cook on HI (max. power) 3½ minutes. Pour brandy into 1-cup glass measure. Cook on 50 (defrost) 1 minute. Ignite brandy and pour over cherry mixture. Serve flaming over vanilla ice cream or angel food cake.

Makes 6 to 8 Servings

Honey Candy

1 cup honey
2 cups peanut butter
2 cups dry milk
2 cups Rice Krispies
1 teaspoon vanilla

Mix all together except ½ cup Rice Krispies. Shape into balls and roll in cereal.

Creamy Fudge

1 can evaporated milk, large
4½ cups granulated sugar
3 small packages chocolate chips
2 tablespoons vanilla
2 cups chopped or broken walnut meats
½ pound margarine
1 (8 ounces) jar marshmallow cream

Mix evaporated milk and sugar in saucepan. Boil 10 minutes, stirring constantly. Remove from heat and quickly add chocolate chips, vanilla, walnuts, margarine and marshmallow cream. Beat until chocolate chips melt completely and mixture is creamy. Pour into buttered large, flat pans to set.

Makes 5 pounds

Cupid Food

1 cup sugar
1 tablespoon vinegar
1 pound semisweet dipping chocolate
1 cup dark corn syrup
1 tablespoon baking soda
1 tablespoon shortening

Line 8-inch square baking dish with aluminum foil; butter generously; set aside.

In 2-quart glass bowl, combine sugar, corn syrup, and vinegar. Cook on HI (max. power) for 8 to 10 minutes, or until mixture is thickened and microproof candy thermometer registers 300 degrees (or a small amount dropped in cold water separates into hard, brittle threads). Quickly stir in baking soda; blend well. Pour into prepared dish. Spread evenly with spoon or tip baking dish to cover bottom evenly. Let stand 1 hour, or until firm. Break hardened mixture into pieces. Set aside.

Break up chocolate and place in 2-quart glass measure. Add shortening. Cook on high power 3 to 3½ minutes, or until melted, stirring once during cooking. Dip hardened pieces in chocolate, covering completely. Place on waxed paper to cool. Store in refrigerator in an airtight container.

Total cooking time: 16 to 18½ minutes

Makes 1 pound

Apple Crisp

3-5 tart apples
¼ cup raisins
¼ cup chopped nuts
1 teaspoon cinnamon
1 teaspoon nutmeg
½ cup rolled oats
½ cup bran
½ cup wheat germ
¼ cup soy flour
¼ cup high-protein powder
½ cup oil
½ cup honey whipping cream
honey

Place peeled, sliced apples in oiled baking dish; sprinkle with raisins, nuts, cinnamon and nutmeg. Combine oats, bran, wheat germ, soy flour and protein powder. Combine oil and honey. Combine oat and honey mixtures; distribute evenly over the top of apples. Bake at 350 degrees for approximately 30 minutes. Serve with whipped cream sweetened with honey.

Quick Cookies

1 package instant pudding mix, 3¼ ounces any flavor
1½ cups biscuit mix
½ cup vegetable oil
1 egg, beaten

Form into balls. Place on cookie sheet. Press down with fork. Bake 375 degrees, 10-12 minutes.

Caramel Popcorn

1 cup granulated sugar
¼ cup boiling water
½ cup brown sugar
3 quarts buttered, salted popcorn

Heat granulated sugar in skillet over medium heat, stirring constantly and carefully, until sugar is melted and golden brown. Add slowly, boiling water, CAREFULLY, stirring until sugar is dissolved. Add brown sugar and cook at 238 degrees (soft ball stage).

Pour hot syrup over buttered, salted popcorn in large flat pan. Toss and mix well — use large, oiled fork and spoon — until all pieces are well-coated. Devour!

It really is safest to have two people making this; one to slowly pour the boiling water while one stirs. The caramelized sugar spits and pops ferociously when the water first hits it.

Makes 3 quarts.

Chocolate Fancies

1 pound chocolate confectioners candy coating
2 tablespoons butter
1 cup blanched peanuts
2 cups colored miniature marshmallows

Break candy coating into squares and place in a 1½ quart casserole. Add butter. Cook uncovered in microwave for 5 minutes on 50 percent power until melted. Quickly stir in the remaining ingredients. Make into a 9-inch square on waxed paper. Let stand until firm.

Bradbury's novel a success on screen

By Brad Atchison
Collegian Reporter

Transforming a classic novel into a movie is comparable to learning how to play the guitar. It is done either very well or very poorly.

Recently moviegoers were assaulted with "Less Than Zero," a dynamic book mutated into a mundane movie. Most of us have grown accustomed to mediocre movies based on good books, but even the die-hard Ray Bradbury reader will enjoy the film version of the classic "Fahrenheit 451."

This film is a successful attempt at transferring classic literary images onto the screen.

"Fahrenheit 451" was made in 1966, 13 years after the novel was first published. Although this film is more than 20 years old, it carries a timeless message which probably means more to us today than it did when the movie was first released.

Movie Review

The roll of opening credits sweeps the viewers into a futuristic mood. The actors and technicians are announced in the opening scenes, but there are no printed credits. This sets the scene for a trip into a world where words are only heard, not read.

It is society full of huge viewing screens and only a handful of revolutionaries who still have any interest in the printed word.

The film is filled with ironic humor typified by the community fire department, which starts fires instead of extinguishing them. Firefighters have traded in their friendly dispositions for Nazi-like personae and a firepole that you can slide up as well as down.

In this backward world, you do not call the fire department, the fire department calls on you. Possession of books is a crime. Violators not only get their books burned, but are taken away to be re-educated.

The movie revolves around Montag, a firefighter who wears the black uniform of a fire captain but possesses a curiosity about the life shared by the readers of the books he finds himself burning.

Eventually Montag adds fuel to the fire he is supposed to be fighting by befriending a young woman, played by Julie Christie, who is a practicing literate. Montag finds excitement in this relationship which he is obviously not receiving at home from his wife, also played by Julie Christie.

Montag is not searching for sex or even love. Rather, he seeks a stimulating conversation — something his literally sedated wife cannot offer him.

Eventually curiosity gets the best of Montag and he smuggles some confiscated books into his own home. The first line Montag reads is from Charles Dickens' "Great Expectations": "Whether I turn out to be the hero of my life will be decided in these pages."

This quotation represents the internal dilemma that shapes Montag's future. He finds himself burning books by day and reading them by night. Living this contradiction causes him to re-evaluate everything that has helped to shape who he is.

Burning the candle at both ends eventually catches up with Montag. Just as he decides to forsake his career as a firefighter, the department is informed of a secret library in Montag's own home.

As part of his re-education, Montag is commanded to use a flame thrower to burn his own books. Instead, he turns the flame on his fellow firefighters and escapes to the country. Here Montag finds a community of "book people," who live for the sake of literature. Each has committed a book to memory to preserve the writings for future generations.

"Fahrenheit 451," tells a story which must not be forgotten or disregarded as simply "entertainment. It carries a strong message about censorship and our society's tendency to plop down in front of a screen rather than taking the time to explore our own creativity through literature.

After seeing this 'A' movie, I feel obligated to read the book.

"Fahrenheit 451" will show at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday in Union Forum Hall, and at 3:30 Thursday in the Union Little Theatre.

Sexual diseases increase

Students receiving treatment at Lafene

By Mary Strafuss
Collegian Reporter

While AIDS continues to dominate discussion on nearly every front, some lesser-publicized sexually transmitted diseases are increasing at K-State.

Two of those diseases — chlamydia and herpes — have become prevalent at Lafene Student Health Center, said Dr. Larry Moeller.

Chlamydia, the most common STD at K-State, is perhaps also the most mysterious. It is a bacterial infection, which means it responds to drugs. Moeller said the disease has become so common that it is a "daily encounter" at Lafene.

One reason it continues to spread is because 80 percent to 90 percent of the women who are afflicted have no symptoms and up to 30 percent of the men have no symptoms.

If not treated, Moeller said, chlamydia can lead to sterility in both women and men and possible eye damage to newborn babies. This STD infects 3 million to 10 million people each year.

In addition to chlamydia, herpes is increasing at K-State. Herpes is a virus that cannot be cured by drugs.

Moeller said no particular factor is responsible for the increase other than individuals' attitudes.

"Behaviors are so very hard to change," he said. "Germs are walking the streets today."

Although not as common as chlamydia and herpes, cases of gonorrhea are found on campus as well. Like chlamydia, gonorrhea is a bacterial infection that can be treated with drugs. Because of the availability of testing, women are regularly screened for both gonorrhea and chlamydia when getting a gynecologic exam at Lafene.

"We feel really good about offering this (service)," Moeller said.

Genital warts are also commonly diagnosed at Lafene. Both men and women can contract warts, and women run the risk of cervical cancer if not treated. The warts are treated with liquid nitrogen or an acid application. In some cases, they can be surgically removed, Moeller said.

There are choices to make to prevent the danger of STDs.

"Everyone needs to be armed with knowledge," Moeller said.

Lafene is available to answer any questions on STDs and many pamphlets are there for the taking, he said.

"My motto is, 'When in doubt, check it out,'" he said.

Area parents argue for Kids' Klub

By Audra Dietz
Collegian Reporter

Parents, students and teachers kept Manhattan city commissioners in debate more than two hours Tuesday, urging the city officials to maintain the After School Kids' Klub for Manhattan school children.

ASKK, started Jan. 11, is running a $5,900 deficit. Commissioners support the club, but argued that it wasn't feasible to operate.

Seventy Manhattan grade school children are now enrolled in ASKK and almost half of them rely on subsidised fees.

"The enrollment doesn't justify the expense," said Mike Conduff, city manager.

Fees for the program are $3.00 per child per day. Reduced fees for low-income families are $2.00 and $1.00. Twenty-five children are paying the reduced fees. Unless the fees are increased or more children pay the full rate, ASKK can't continue, commissioners told the audience at the meeting.

The projected cost for the rest of the school year is $23,685 with current enrollment. By the end of the school year, ASKK is expected to lose $15,357.

Ray Davis, who has a child in ASKK, wants the program to continue.

"If we don't survive this semester, it won't happen next year," he said. Davis said he would rather have his child in ASKK than attending a day-care center.

Commissioner Dave Fiser argued in favor of keeping the program going until the end of the school year even if it operates at a loss.

"I think it's worth the risk of the taxpayers' money," Fiser said.

Fetal transplants generate controversy

Fast-growing tissue may be key to disease treatment

By Alison Neely
Staff Writer

Transplanting aborted fetal tissue could be the key to treating diabetes and Parkinson's disease.

Using fetal tissue may seem strange, but it has assets other tissues don't. For transplant purposes, fetal tissue grows faster than adult tissue. It is more adaptable to the surrounding environment after being transplanted and causes less immunological rejection.

Parkinson's disease is a condition caused by degeneration of the portion of the brain that produces the chemical dopamine, a neurochemical that transmits information inside the brain. Lack of dopamine causes the symptoms of Parkinson's disease: body rigidity and tremors.

By transplanting the dopamine-producing portion of the brain from a fetus into a Parkinson's disease patient, it is hoped the symptoms will disappear.

Some successes have been made in animal experiments, according to a Nov. 3, 1986, article in U.S. News and World Report. Researchers induced Parkinson's disease in adult monkeys by destroying the dopamine-producing area of the brain, then transplanted fetal monkey brain tissue from the same area. Within 67 days, the symptoms had almost disappeared.

Under microscopic examination, the researchers discovered that the fetal cells had generated nerve fibers connecting to the host brain. Brain tissue does not have the properties to reject transplants of brain tissue. The connecting fibers indicate that the tissue was not just producing dopamine, but growing to replace the area destroyed initially.

Adrenal gland transplant is becoming a possible alternative to using fetal tissue in the cure of Parkinson's disease, according to an article in The New Republic. Known as the "squirt technique," a portion of a patient's adrenal gland, which is located on top of the kidney, is extracted and then injected into the dopamine-producing brain area. This procedure stimulates dopamine production.

While the adrenal transplant serves the same purpose as fetal tissue transplant, the "hope behind the attempts to transplant nerve cells, rather than adrenal cells is that the transplants will communicate with the host brain in a manner more sophisticated than by simply pumping out a required chemical," according to an article in Science News. The nerve fibers generated by the fetal brain transplant are the start of this communication.

Another benefit of fetal tissue is for diabetes patients who suffer from an insulin deficiency. Islet cells, located in the pancreas, are responsible for insulin production. Insulin regulates the level of sugar in the bloodstream. When the level escalates, as in diabetes, the body is in danger. The heart and kidneys may fail and eye capillaries may rupture, leading to blindness.

In the past, research has been conducted to remove islet cells from adult pancreas donors in hope of transplanting them into diabetics. This operation had a low success rate, according to U.S. News and World Report. The adult pancreas is hard and gritty, and the cell removal methods damaged much of the expected intake.

The fetal pancreas, on the other hand, is soft and the cells are easy to remove. According to U.S. News and World Report, many adults who have received transplants of the fetal pancreatic cells said they can feel the difference and are reducing their daily intakes of insulin.

These pancreatic cells may be available on the market as early as 1990. Hana Biologics, a California-based research company, has been conducting clinical studies with cells harvested from donors. It is the only American company conducting these experiments with plans for marketing.

Four years of research have already been conducted using pancreatic cells. Nancy Peterson, director of corporate communications at Hana Biologics, estimates it will take a minimum of another 1½ years before the research is complete. For Parkinson's disease, which has been under research for two years, the waiting period is another four years.

The fetuses used at Hana Biologics are purchased from a procurement agency, Peterson said.

Few groups or individuals actively protest the work being done at Hana Biologics. The majority of letters and calls received at the research firm are from diabetics, parents with diabetic children and people with Parkinson's disease, she said.

"Our main opposition comes from anti-abortion groups," Peterson said. "However, we believe the technology can provide treatment for people with very serious illnesses (and) not using the tissue available would pose a very serious ethical question."

Ethical questions arise from use of tissues

Doctors, laywers recommend restrictions

By Alison Neely
Staff Writer

Ethical problems concerning the use of aborted fetal tissue for experimentation purposes continue to mount as researchers delve further into their disease-curing work.

Guidelines for the tissue use were formed at a conference sponsored by the Center for Biomedical Ethics at Case Western Reserve University, according to an Aug. 16, 1987 article in The New York Times. Doctors, lawyers and ethicists endorsed the use of fetal tissue, but recommended a two-fold set of restrictions for the use.

- Doctors involved in the abortion decision are not to be involved in the research conducted using the tissue.
- Anonymity should be maintained between donor and recipient, who also should not be related.

The question has been raised about whether a woman could ethically abort a fetus in order to provide tissue for another family member who might need a transfer. According to The New York Times, a California woman inquired whether she could be artificially inseminated with her father's sperm. Then, when her fetus was aborted, it would provide brain tissue to be transplanted back into her father, who suffered from Alzheimer's disease.

Legally, doctors are protected when using the tissue. In 1975 — two years after abortion became legal — the federal government set guidelines for obtaining and using the tissue.

Researchers are permitted to use the tissue for medical and scientific purposes if the fetus is dead and the decision to end the pregnancy has nothing to do with research.

Being considered dead is more complicated than simply not breathing. A fetus may be considered dead while its brain can still function. This poses problems for researchers using fetal nerve tissue.

"It's a scare tactic anti-abortion people are using to keep the fervor up. If people don't understand it, then it's easy to say 'I don't approve.'"
—Vera Perry

The term "brain transplant" often surfaces during discussions of fetal brain tissue transfers, conjuring Frankenstein-like images. It is because of these connotations that the government is hesistant to become involved, said James Shanteau, professor of psychology and a specialist in organ donation.

"The administration won't touch it with a 10-foot pole. It puts the government in a very bad light if they get involved because of the term (brain transplant)," he said.

Since the research is so new, very little information has been published about the pros and cons.

Shanteau said he does not expect to see any new legislation until the research is beyond the exploratory stages.

However, lack of government regulation does not convince pro-life advocates there is no need to protest.

National Right to Life President John C. Wilke holds the entire idea as "morally repulsive," according to The New York Times.

The medical experimentation with fetal tissue will provide additional rationalization for those who believe in abortion, he said.

President of the Kansas National Organization for Women, Vera Perry, said she finds these fears to be ill-founded, especially considering the lack of adequate research and available information at this time.

"It's a scare tactic anti-abortion people are using to keep the fervor up," she said. "If people don't understand it, then it's easy to say 'I don't approve.'"

The Right to Life organization also fears the experimentation will inspire women to have abortions explicitly to sell the fetus.

While part of the 1975 guidelines state the decision to end the pregnancy should not be influenced by the prospect of research, it is an increasing concern that women will consider this as a monetary option.

Fetus farming, as it is called by Sarah Merrill, assistant professor of philosophy specializing in medical ethics, could become a problem. It is mainly teenagers and third-world women who will be exploited in the process, she said.

Although it does not condone abortion for any means, the Roman Catholic Church does not reject the idea of using fetal tissue in transplants. The church's main concern is with the dignity of the body being used.

"If it were done with respect for the mother and respect for the fetus, it would be all right, said Monsignor James Hake, chancellor of the Diocese of Salina. "The same guidelines would apply as with donated organs."

The church recognizes two kinds of abortions: direct and natural. Spontaneous, or natural, abortions are not premeditated, whereas direct abortions are, Hake said.

"No moral guilt is to be connected with the natural abortion. The evil is in the intent and the action itself," he said.

Either way, the fetus may be used for experiments if the proper respect is shown, he said.

Hairless goat beats odds

Staff/Rob Squires

Leon Conner, senior in veterinary medicine, holds Nudie, a female hairless baby goat born Jan. 16 at the Veterinary Medicine Complex.

Officials were not 'kid'-ing

By Lori Ingmire
Collegian Reporter

Although life is full of hairy situations, the College of Veterinary Medicine has faced a "hairless" situation since the birth of a goat who was born without its coat of hair.

The hairless goat, born Jan. 15, has survived longer than expected. Although it is not an extremely rare occurrence, animals born without their haircoat are in a very undesirable condition.

"It is not that rare of an occurrence," said Horst Leipold, professor of pathology. "Although this is the first time I've seen a hairless goat, instances of hairless calves have come to my attention several times."

Leipold said the goat will require special care all of its life. It will need to be kept out of sunlight and cold temperatures. Any adverse weather influences would be harmful, he said, because the animal's haircoat will not be present to serve its extremely important function.

Leipold compared this specific case to past cases involving cattle. He said the abnormality occurs before the animal is born.

"In 80 percent of the cases studied, the calves were born hairless due to a genetic factor," Leipold said. "In the other 20 percent of cases, a pre-natal infection was determined as the causing factor."

Leipold said the cause of the abnormality is unknown with only speculation occurring at this time. It is an undesirable condition which he feels should be avoided and eventually understood to prevent future cases.

The goat has some hope of growing hair, Leipold said, but the growth may be temporary. In similar cases in the past, the animal has not developed a full haircoat but has grown a short, fluffy type of hair.

Vietnam soldiers' remains identified

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Six sets of remains, including one returned 2½ years ago, have been positively identified as Navy and Air Force fliers missing from the Vietnam war, the Pentagon said Tuesday.

One of the victims was from Kansas.

The remains of the six were identified by an Army laboratory in Honolulu. They will be transported from Hickam Air Force Base in Hawaii to Travis AFB, Calif., on Thursday after a full military honors ceremony.

The Pentagon identified the missing men as:

- Air Force Lt. Col. Edward W. Lehnhoff of Fort Scott, lost over North Vietnam on Nov. 18, 1967.
- Air Force Col. Oscar M. Dardeau Jr., lost over North Vietnam on Nov. 18, 1967.
- Air Force Col. Franklin A. Caras, lost over North Vietnam on April 28, 1967.
- Navy Capt. Trent R. Powers, lost over North Vietnam on Oct. 31, 1965.
- Navy Cmdr. Edwin B. Tucker, lost over North Vietnam on April 24, 1967.
- Navy Lt. Clemie McKinney, lost over South Vietnam on April 14, 1972.

Tigers blemish 'Cats' conference mark

Wildcats lose cliff-hanger to Mizzou, 79-75

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

COLUMBIA, MO. — Nope, this isn't a misprint. K-State center Fred McCoy hit a three-point shot with 5 seconds remaining in the game to tie the University of Missouri, 75-75.

Unfortunately for the Wildcats, Mitch Richmond couldn't believe McCoy hit the shot.

Richmond intentionally fouled Tigers' forward Mike Sandbothe on the inbounds play, and he and MU standout Derrick Chievous hit four three thorws in the closing seconds to give host Missouri a 79-75 win over K-State Tuesday in the Hearnes Center.

The loss was K-State's first in the Big Eight Conference, and drops the No. 14 team in the nation to 6-1 in conference play and 14-5 overall.

"I didn't know it was a 3-point shot, so I was looking to foul," Richmond said. "I feel pretty bad about it."

McCoy, who K-State coach Lon Kruger said "never" shoots the ball from there (the 3-point line) in practice, ended up with the ball after an inbounds scramble and let it fly.

"I knew it was a three," McCoy said. "My body was falling forward, but I was concentrating on keeping my feet behind the line."

The play wasn't designed to got to McCoy. Kruger wouldn't say who was supposed to take the shot, but it was probably meant to go to guard William Scott, who led the 'Cats with 20 points.

Kruger can accept the fact McCoy took the shot — especially since he made it. But the intentional foul call on Richmond left Kruger a little miffed.

"I didn't have a clear look at it, but the officials finally made that call (an intentional foul), and they haven't made it all year," Kruger said.

For Sandbothe, his clutch free throw shooting was a fitting end to a story that could be turned into a television mini-series. Sandbothe was in the hospital earlier in the day with the flu and brought a glucose I.V. to the game with him as a precaution.

"He did a heckuva job. It might make him giggle — he'll remember that moment for a long time," said Missouri coach Norm Stewart.

Still, the finish was exciting enough so that not many fans left early to warm up their cars or to beat the postgame traffic.

Missouri built a 12-point lead with 13:33 left in the second half, before K-State held the Tigers to just 4 points during an eight-minute span. K-State's defense allowed the 'Cats to come back to tie the game, 53-53.

Then the 3-point barrage began. K-State and Missouri made six consecutive shots from outside the 19'9" arch. Chievous, who led all scoreers with 26 points, scored nine from outside the bonus line.

"The 3-point plays changed the game. To be honest with you, I don't know why I voted for it," said Stewart, whose team improved to 14-5 overall and 4-3 in the Big Eight.

But Stewart had to be happy in this case, as the 3-point surge gave the Tigers the lead, forcing K-State to foul in order to catch up. Missouri was 10-10 from the charity stripe in the final 41 seconds.

Missouri built a 40-32 lead at the half, led by guard Lee Coward's 12 points. Coward finished the game with a career-high 25 points.

Charles Bledsoe kept K-State in the game early with seven first-half points. After icing K-State's win Nebraska Saturday, Bledsoe turned in another all-around performance with 15 points, 8 rebounds and four blocked shots.

"He's played very well of late. This is two games in a row that he's got some big rebounds, some blocked shots and had a lot of bounce on the defensive end," Kruger said. "He's getting consistency, which is what you want from any basketball player."

Saberhagen signs with Royals

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kansas City Royals pitcher Bret Saberhagen avoided an arbitration hearing and agreed to terms Tuesday night on a three-year contract that will pay him nearly $4 million.

Royals General Manager John Schuerholz said the deal actually has yet to be completed, but the contract's wording already has been approved orally by both sides.

The contract is the highest for a starting picher in the Royals' 19-year franchise history. Saberhagen, 23, was 18-10 last year with a 3.36 earned run average.

He is 55-39 in his career with the Royals, including a 20-6 season in 1985 when he was the World Series most valuable player as the Royals defeated the St. Louis Cardinals in seven games.

The first two years of the contract are guaranteed, with the third year at the Royals' option.

"It turned out excellent for both sides," Saberhagen said. "The thing I like is that now I don't have to keep going through this every year. It was driving me crazy.

"I don't think it was an outrageous salary, either. If I pitch the way I'm capable of, the Royals will have the bargain."

Saberhagen will receive base salaries of $1.1 million this season and $1.25 million in 1989, with an option year in 1990.

Lady Cats taking high morale to face Missouri

By Chase Clark
Sports Writer

After losing by only six points to the Big Eight Conference leader, Nebraska, morale is high on K-State's women's basketball team.

It will take more than high spirits, though, to pull a victory out of the hat in tonight's contest at 7:30 against the University of Missouri in the unfriendly confines of Hearnes Center in Columbia, Mo.

K-State is 3-7 in Hearnes and has not won a game there since the 1981-82 season. However, K-State leads the fierce series with Missouri, 16-15. If the Lady Tigers win tonight, Missouri will be the only Big Eight school to have a .500 or better record against the Lady Cats.

"It's tough to win at Missouri," K-State coach Matilda Mossman said. "We have to go in there and play our type of game. We can't let Missouri control the tempo and get into a transition game."

Missouri, 13-8 overall, is in sole possession of second place in the Big Eight race with a 5-3 conference mark. Nebraska leads the Big Eight with a 7-1 mark. Oklahoma State, Kansas, Iowa State and Oklahoma are tied for fourth place with 4-4 records.

K-State, 8-13 overall, will have its hands full against the high-power offense of Missouri. The Lady Tigers are averaging 77.8 points per game in conference play. K-State is averaging 64.7 ppg in Big Eight play and is in last place in the conference with a 1-7 mark.

The fast break transition was too much for K-State to handle two weeks ago in Ahearn Field House. Missouri came out strong and built up a 17-point lead at halftime, then held on in the second stanza for a 79-66 victory.

"We let Missouri get off to a 26-8 run in the first half," Mossman said. "We took some horrible shots in the first half. As a result, they were getting long rebounds and scoring layups at the other end. They were outrebounding us and our kids were too slow getting back on the transition.

"In the second half, we got back quicker on defense and we outscored Missouri by four in the second half," she added.

NOTES...Tonight's game will be broadcast live on WIBW (580 AM) radio...The Lady Cats have won just three of 10 games on the road this season and none of the four Big Eight games played away from Ahearn...K-State's youthful lineup — three freshmen and two sophomores — has had success, coming away with two wins and one loss with three rookies in starting roles.

Mitch Richmond: the making of an All-American

By Becky Ives
Collegian Reporter

Mitch Richmond has been described as an impact player, an outstanding player and an outstanding person. K-State's sports information office is trying to add one more adjective to that list — All-American.

The 6-foot-5 senior from Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., is beginning to make his name nationally recognized through his play, and K-State's primary sports publicity outlet is making sure the name 'Mitch Richmond' gets out.

One of the jobs of the sports information office is to help potential All-American candidates at K-State get national exposure.

"We are getting the word out on him," said Duane DaPron, sports information director. "Mitch's capabilities and the way he has played has created quite a following."

Phone calls have been made to national publications like Sports Illustrated and Basketball Times. Kenny Mossman, assistant sports information director, said he calls Sports Illustrated because of its wide coverage area.

"I call Sports Illustrated every Sunday night to update how Mitch is doing," said Mossman. "Morin Bishop, the Sports Illustrated basketball writer, has been very receptive."

Sports Illustrated ran a picture of Richmond taken at K-State's game against the University of Oklahoma Jan. 16, and the latest issue of the magazine has a feature article on him. But his coverage is expanding beyond Sports Illustrated.

The weekly publication Basketball Times is widely read by the United States Basketball Writers Association. The USBWA votes for the top 10 players in the nation who will comprise the All—American team. The latest issue of Basketball Times is featuring a story on Richmond.

Another step in gaining more recognition is to play in a nationally-televised game. The Wildcats will have this opportunity Feb. 18 when they play the University of Kansas in Ahearn Field House.

ESPN will televise the game, giving Richmond his first chance to play in front of the country this season, and to be noticed by ESPN's sports announcer, Dick Vitale.

"ESPN does so much college basketball that we try to get his name in front of Dick Vitale," said Mossman. "You either hate Vitale or love him, but regardless, when he talks about a basketball player people tend to listen.

"There is a fine line. We don't want to call people too much or they will quit listening. We are walking the line of doing all we can do, without doing too much. We definitely are not sitting on our hands."

This attention comes as somewhat of a surprise to Richmond — but not an unwelcome one.

"I didn't anticipate all this happening at the beginning of the year," Richmond said. "But it would be great to let everybody around the world know who Mitch Richmond is."

Richmond is providing people with plenty to talk about. If it is statistics that make an All-American, then Richmond has those to show. Through 18 games, he has led the team in scoring 13 times, scored more than 20 points 13 times and scored more than 30 points four times. He has scored in double figures in 34 consecutive games, shot more than 50 percent from the field, averaged 6.4 rebounds per game and averaged 3.6 assists per game.

But statistics aren't the only thing that makes an All-American. "Right or wrong, statistics can play a big part, but points and rebounds are not enough to make a player," said K-State coach Lon Kruger.

"Number one (for an All-American candidate) is good basketball skills. That is basically what they are voting on. It is also the importance of a player to their teams and how they handle themselves as an individual," Kruger said.

"Mitch has all those qualities without question. His basketball skills, his individual character and his personality are outstanding. I don't know how a player can do anything more for his team," Kruger added.

If personality and character make an All-American, Mossman agreed Richmond ranks with the best of them.

"In Mitch Richmond, we have one of the most outstanding people I have worked with. He could have a run-away ego, but he doesn't. Mitch is the same person now as the day he got here," Mossman said.

N.Y. art gallery experiences huge theft

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — At least 11 Old Master paintings worth more than $6 million, some dating back to the 14th century, were stolen from an Upper East Side art gallery, police said Tuesday.

"This certainly sounds like one of the biggest art thefts in history in America," said Milton Esterow, editor and publisher of Art News.

"This is the largest art theft in dollar amount in New York City that I've heard of," said Lt. John Kelly of the Special Frauds Squad.

A police source who insisted on not being identified said the burglary at the Colnaghi Art Gallery included works of Fra Angelico, Lodovico Carracci, Paolo Catlamara, Gaspar Dughet, Jean-Baptiste-Simeon Chardin, Giovanni Benedette Castiglione, Nicola van Houbraken, and Willem Kalf.

The titles of the works were not disclosed.

"It has to be the largest in America," said Connie Lowenthal, executive director of the International Foundation for Art Research, which tracks and recovers stolen art. Lowenthal said she could not recall any recent art theft that approached the Colnaghi burglary in dollar terms.

The 1987 Guinness world record book says the biggest art theft worldwide was a 1974 theft at the home of Sir Alfred and Lady Beit in Ireland. A Vermeer that was taken was worth $6.9 million and the total was $19.2 million, the record book says.

Esterow said the Colnaghi gallery, which has headquarters in London, is a respected gallery that specializes in Old Masters.

A man who answered the phone at the gallery and refused to give his name confirmed the robbery, but said the gallery would not comment on it during the police investigation.

"A lot of star players walk around with dark glasses on and Band-aids on their bodies, but that's not Mitch. He's a star but he doesn't behave like one. He is pretty down-to-earth," he said.

If team play makes an All-American, then Richmond himself supports this quality.

"The guys know what we can accomplish together," Richmond said. "We know our roles and know what we have to do.

"I'm not thinking about being an All-American right now. I just go out and play my best. If I do that, then the awards will come."

But will all of Richmond's characteristics add up to All-American status?

"Obviously, we are a bit prejudiced in our opinion," Kruger said. "Realistically, I think Mitch's chances are good. His play has gained attention nationwide, and people are going to continue to follow his progress.

"But the most important thing right now is that Mitch plays well, and right now he obviously is."

weapons have also kept wars in other countries from escalating, Rhodes said.

The Strategic Defense Initiative has only complicated the issue of the arms race, and has in no way solved it, he said.

"Using nuclear weapons would produce nations of the dead, even the potential of the world of the dead.

"The knowledge of nuclear weapons will result in either multiple sovereignties that exist peaceably. Or simultaneously, the arms race will materialize into mass nuclear fear."

Rhodes' book follows the history of the atomic bomb's creation. It has won the National Non-Fiction Book Award, the National Book Critics Circle general non-fiction award, and has been nominated for the Pulitzer Prize. He has also written non-fiction and fiction books and articles for Harpers, Atlantic, Esquire and Playboy magazines.

The next lecture in the Lou Douglas series will be March 8. Michael Parenti, a guest professor at Howard University, will be discussing "Monopoly Culture and Democratic Struggle."

Movie

"I think that's just the producers taking liberties," he said of the name switch.

Also, what about the commute that poor Smith's character must make every day? About 90 miles to the University of Kansas, as opposed to the approximately 15 miles to K-State.

"It's very incongruous that someone would be driving from Junction City to Lawrence," Wefald said.

The long drive for the protagonist is only one thing that Joseph Hajda, professor of political science, found different between the book and the miniseries.

Hajda helped Sheldon develop the character for the book, along with providing insight into the life of a university professor.

"(The miniseries) was very different (between) what we (Sheldon and he) talked about here (at K-State) and what appeared in the book," Hajda said. "The film was completely inaccurate.

"I was really disappointed."

Hajda said he might have felt differently had he not met and talked with Sheldon.

Other objections he said he had with the miniseries were that the main character was only one dimensional and that the relationship between the students and that character was poorly represented.

"My greatest objection is ... that the parts are mismatched," he said, explaining that different parts in the movie did not flow as well as they did in the book.

"These guys messed up the whole thing in my books," Hajda said.

He also said Dove Productions had asked the Union Bookstore for some K-State paraphernalia.

"We did send (the production company) some merchandise," said Mary Lou Hutchison, bookstore manager. "T-shirts, sweatshirts and the like."

K-State was not the only thing changed in the transition from book to "blockbuster." The name of the Junction City Daily Union was changed to the Kansas Chronicle.

"I don't know if that had anything to do with rights or what," said Jeanette Erichsen, editor of the living section for the paper. Erichsen helped show Sheldon around the Manhattan/Junction City area when he was here last summer.

Reviews of the movie around Junction City were "kind of mixed," she said.

"Quite a few people were discouraged" about the treatment given to Junction City, K-State and the surrounding area, Erichsen said.

concerned."

Tubach said no rape report had been filed this year with either campus police or the RCPD. Lt. Scott Campbell of the RCPD said that although he was unable to find any such report, he couldn't be positive that none had been filed.

After DeShane refused to reveal her source, she said Tubach talked to Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries.

"He told Brice that I was inciting hysteria," she said, adding that Hobrock deemed it a private matter.

"(Hobrock) told me 'It's your right, it's your letter, it's privileged information,'" she said. "I think (Hobrock) probably wanted to reassure me."

Tubach said he talked to Hobrock because he believed DeShane acted as a spokeswoman for the library.

"I talked to (Hobrock) due to the fact that she signed the letter as a spokesperson for the library," Tubach said. "If you didn't know, you would think 'Hey, this is someone who is a spokesperson for the library.'"

Both DeShane and Hobrock maintain that DeShane wrote as a private citizen, not on behalf of the library.

"I think it's a private matter as far as I'm concerned and it has nothing to do with the library," Hobrock said.

Tubach said he wasn't intending for Hobrock to pressure DeShane into revealing the source.

"There's really nothing we can do other than ask her to divulge her source," he said.

DeShane said she was angered by the whole matter.

"I was upset that he did it right there at the reference desk," she said, adding that she felt "extremely intimidated" by Tubach. "I think that was the idea.

"I don't think it was professionally done."

Tubach said he "definitely" did not intend to intimidate DeShane.

"There's no reason why we should intimidate anybody," he said. "As far as we're concerned, it's false information. Nobody wants to lead the public astray and make something out of nothing."

Ban on homosexuals found unconstitutional

By The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — The Army's ban on homosexuals was ruled unconstitutional Wednesday by a federal appeals court that said homosexuals are entitled to the same protection against discrimination as racial minorities.

"The discrimination faced by homosexuals in our society is plainly no less pernicious or intense than the discrimination faced by other groups" afforded protection from discrimination, said the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in a 2-1 decision.

The ruling was the first by a federal appeals court to grant strict constitutional protection to homosexuals and to prohibit a branch of the armed services from excluding people on the basis of sexual orientation.

In 1986, the Supreme Court upheld a Georgia anti-sodomy law that allowed criminal prosecution for private homosexual acts. Lower courts, including the 9th Circuit in a 1980 decision by Judge Anthony Kennedy, who recently was confirmed to the Supreme Court, have allowed the military to base exclusions on homosexual conduct.

But the appeals court Wednesday said the Army's 1981 regulations go further by targeting a soldier's sexual orientation, regardless of conduct.

A ruling that specific sexual conduct can be forbidden by criminal laws cannot be translated into "a state license to pass 'homosexual laws' — laws imposing special restrictions on gays because they are gay," Judge William Norris said.

Leonard Graff, legal director for National Gay Rights Advocates in San Francisco, hailed the ruling. "I think it's about time that the courts recognized that gay people have been denied their rights," he said.

The Defense Department had no immediate comment on the ruling.

Edward Hawkins, an appeals specialist in the civil division of the Justice Department, said in a telephone interview from Washington, D.C., he could not say what the government's next step would be until he saw the ruling.

In a dissent, Judge Stephen Reinhardt said that the Supreme Court in the Georgia case held that homosexuals are not entitled to special constitutional protection, since their sexual conduct can be punished criminally.

Reinhardt, however, condemned the Supreme Court ruling, and predicted someday it would be overruled by "a wiser and more enlightened court."

The appeals court ruled in favor of Perry Watkins, 39, who enlisted at age 19 in 1967 and admitted on a pre-induction medical form that he had homosexual tendencies.

The ruling affirmed a May 1982 decision by the U.S. District Court in Seattle, which held the Army could not discharge Watkins on the basis of his sexual orientation because he disclosed he is gay when he was drafted.

At the time of Watkins' induction, the Army discharged soldiers for sodomy and other specific sexual acts, but not for homosexuality itself.

After the regulations were changed in 1981, the Army sought to discharge Watkins, and succeeded in 1984 after a series of court decisions.

The court Wednesday ordered the Army to reconsider Watkins' application for reenlistment without regard to his sexual orientation.

Watkins had been supervisor of the personnel administration center at Fort Lewis, near Tacoma, Wash., at the time of the initial court ruling in 1982. He was discharged four years short of the 20 required for pension eligibility.

Pentagon statistics show the four services discharged 1,398 men and women on grounds of homosexuality last year, or about 0.6 percent of the active-duty force.

Union director no longer 'acting'

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

Following a nine-month search, K-State on Wednesday named Jack Sills as Union director. Sills, a 26-year employee of the Union, had been acting director since last May.

"Jack Sills has provided energetic service to the Union for a number of years and has been sensitive to the needs of the students and responsive to the ever-changing climate of the University," said Pat Bosco, assistant vice president and vice president for institutional advancement. He said more than 50 individuals had applied for the position following a nationwide search.

"I am really excited about the opportunity to be the director of one of the top unions in the country," Sills said. "The Union will continue to be alert to the changing needs of the students and the community and adjust to those needs."

Sills, a native of Montrose and a graduate of Kansas Wesleyan University, has been a member of the Union staff since 1962 and has advanced through the ranks from accountant to his new position of director.

Sills is also a retired colonel in the U.S. Army Reserves with more than 34 years of service, and he has commanded reserve units in Manhattan, Topeka and Kansas City.

Sills said the decision-making process he learned in the Army Reserves will be a valuable asset in his role as director.

He will be responsible for a permanent staff of 145, about 200 student employees and a budget of $7.8 million. Union departments include food service, the bookstore, concessions, the copy center, information desk, programs, publicity, recreation, administration and business offices, maintenance, personnel and payroll.

Sills' role doesn't end at the Union door as he will also represent K-State within Manhattan as a member of the City of Manhattan Convention and Tourism Committee and the advisory council of the Chamber of Commerce Convention and Visitors Bureau.

"The New York Times has listed K-State as one of the top five Unions in the United States, so I don't foresee any drastic change in direction for the Union," he said.

"I have played a role in the decision-making process for several years, and in my capacity as acting director I have played a big part in the decision process," he said.

Sills succeeds Walt Smith, who retired last May.

"During the time I was the acting director, I appointed a committee called the Union Enhancement Committee to look at what is needed by the students, faculty, administration, alumni and visitors to campus," Sills said.

The committee is composed of Union staff in various capacities and student representatives from student government, fraternities, sororities and the Residence Hall Association, he said.

The committee has developed some innovative ideas as well as some that have been tried before, and all of them will be considered, he said.

Panama trained rebels, official says

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Panama's military leader, Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, provided military training for U.S.-backed Nicaraguan rebels after he met twice in 1985 with Lt. Col. Oliver L. North, a former top Panamanian intelligence official testified Wednesday.

North told Noriega in October 1985 that the Panamanian training bases were needed because U.S. laws at the time banned any direct U.S. help for the rebels fighting Nicaragua's leftist government, Jose I. Blandon said through an interpreter.

Blandon, who was fired last month by Noriega as Panama's consul general in New York, also told a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee that Vice President George Bush used Noriega to send a warning to Cuban leader Fidel Castro hours before the U.S. invasion of Grenada in 1983.

Bush, who was asked at the White House if he ever called Noriega, replied, "Nunca — Never." "Nunca" is the Spanish word for never.

Blandon, testifying under oath for a second day, also repeated his assertion that the CIA regularly sent Noriega reports on the political positions and personal lives of some U.S. senators, including Sens. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

The CIA "categorically denied" Blandon's statements on Tuesday, but he refused on Wednesday to change his story.

"There is no reason in my heart and in my mind to invalidate what I have said," he told the subcommittee on terrorism. "Unfortunately, what I said is true."

Board approves water plant expansion

Officials attach conditions to construction, plan

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

The Board of Zoning Appeals approved the city's request for expansion of the Manhattan Water Treatment Plant in a 3-1 vote Wednesday, but not before attaching three conditions responding to concerns of area residents.

The conditions will alter the expansion of the plant to the south onto property located at the north end of Goodnow Park between Tuttle Creek Boulevard and N. 5th St.

Many area residents have been fighting the plant expansion, fearing loss of the neighborhood park.

After three hours of debate, Gene Ernst, appeals board member, moved approval of the city's request with the following conditions:

■ The construction staging site will be located to the northeast of the plant, as opposed to the south.

■ Other options for a type of shielded lighting will be pursued.

■ A master plan will be developed within a two-year period for keeping Goodnow Park as close to the current size as possible.

The city must conform to the conditions because they were passed with the request's approval, said Board Chairman Mike Thomason.

Residents have 30 days to appeal the decision, said Bruce McCallum, director of public works, adding that the city will delay plant expansion until after that date.

"We would then proceed with advertisements for bids on the project — which would take an additional 45-60 days," he said.

At best, expansion construction could begin sometime this summer, McCallum said.

The city's request was tabled at a meeting in January to give officials time to review plant expansion alternatives presented by area residents.

One proposal, which was to expand the plant to the southeast, would cost the city about $500,000 more than the original plan presented to the board in December, McCallum said.

The city does not want to see the park destroyed, said Larry Hulse, director of community development.

"We want to renovate and upgrade Goodnow Park," he said, adding that park expansion to the east is one possibility.

McCallum voiced support for the proposal.

"That's a lot of area to mow," he said. "Quite honestly, I'd like to turn it over to Terry (DeWeese, director of parks and recreation) to mow. We could plant trees, add picnic tables — some sort of beautification project."

The area south of the access road into the plant could easily be adapted for park use, McCallum said.

Several area residents spoke against the proposal in an attempt to persuade the board to deny the city's request.

Steve Upton, who presented the alternatives for plant expansion last month, pushed his proposal for expanding into the southeast corner.

Dave Manning requested that the city pursue a new type of non-glare lighting, similar to that installed at Manhattan Town Center, to reduce operational costs. Manning was also concerned about the noise level increase that two extra water treatment basins could cause.

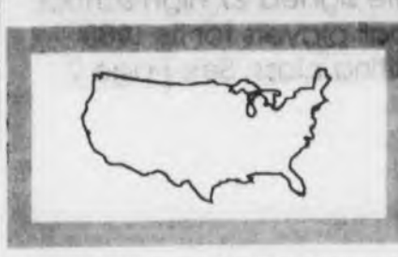
Manning also asked the city to study the safety situation which arises from children playing in the park while construction is underway.

Dorothy Branson, who called herself "the history buff" of the residents, said that over 1,000 residents had signed a petition to save the park. Branson presented a letter that ran in a Manhattan newspaper in May 1938, at about the time the park was dedicated.

"I'm not sure what we are going to pass on to our future generations," she said.

Her husband, Lester, emphasized that the residents were not opposed to plant expansion; rather, they had a "question where it ought to be."

"I just don't know what you do to replace a park," he said.



The plant was scheduled to begin its second phase of expansion in 1982, McCallum said, adding that phase three is to begin in the year 2000. The present treatment plant serves the City of Manhattan as well as K-State.

"Our largest user is still Kansas State University," he said. "If student population holds up or increases, we will see an increase for water."

More than 35 residents attended the meeting. Several grouped together in the back of the room under a computer-printed sign that read "Save Goodnow Park."

States violate civil rights law

WASHINGTON — Secretary of Education William J. Bennett said Wednesday that six Southern and border states are still in partial violation of the civil rights law and must take further steps to rid their college systems of the remnants of segregation.

Bennett said his department has found four other states, Arkansas, North Carolina, South Carolina and West Virginia, in full compliance with Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

He asked the governors of the six states — Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Missouri, Oklahoma and Virginia — to send him written assurances within 90 days that they will carry out by the end of this year desegregation measures they agreed to previously.

The action was the latest turn in federal efforts that stretch back nearly 20 years to force states which once segregated their colleges by law to improve traditionally black institutions and open doors for minority students and faculty and at traditionally white campuses.

Most of the steps the six states must take involve physical repairs, renovations or construction of facilities at traditionally black colleges. Relatively few involve commitments or actions by the states' flagship universities, where black enrollments still lag behind their share of the population.

Bennett acknowledged that none of the states had met the goals and timetables for minority recruiting and hiring they agreed to in 1978 desegregation plans.

Indian ends standoff effort

WHITE EAGLE, Okla. — A former Ponca Indian tribe employee who was armed with a rifle ended a standoff Wednesday when negotiators from the Bureau of Indian Affairs agreed to hear his complaints about tribal government.

"I have no intention to intimidate anybody or hurt anyone," Maynard Hinman told Oklahoma City television station KOCO in a telephone interview during the nine-hour standoff. "This is not an effort to hurt or intimidate anybody. It is an effort to underline the seriousness of our situation."

Hinman, 43, confirmed in the telephone conversation that he had a .30-30 rifle, which officials said he gave up when he began talking with Bureau of Indian Affairs negotiators.

Hinman had talked to local authorities but he refused to come out of the tribal administration building or to give up his rifle until BIA negotiators arrived.

Negotiators were dispatched from the BIA regional office in Anadarko.

White Eagle dispatchers said the negotiators talked to Hinman on the phone for several hours before convincing him to leave the administration building just after 3 p.m.

"They went over and talked to him and told him that they would agree to some of the deals that he wanted and wanted to talk about the others," said a spokesman at the White Eagle police station who did not want to be identified. "At that time, he relinquished his hold on the building."

Child molester fails probation

PORTLAND, Ore. — A child molester who had been ordered to post signs identifying himself as a dangerous sex offender was sentenced to 10 years in prison Wednesday for violating probation.

"Your probation did not fail because you failed to post the signs. Your probation failed because you failed to admit you had a problem," Multnomah County District Judge Dorothy M. Baker told 47-year-old Richard J. Bateman.

The judge said Bateman was attending but not participating in alcohol and sex-abuse counseling sessions, as required.

Baker last year had ordered Bateman to post signs outside his house and on his car saying "Dangerous Sex Offender, No Children Allowed" after he pleaded no contest to molesting a 5-year-old boy and 5-year-old girl.

When Bateman's probation officer reported that the sign on his house was obscured, the judge scheduled a probation revocation hearing. But Bateman failed to show up.

Three weeks later, an anonymous tip led to his arrest at a Beaverton construction site, where he was working under an assumed name. His probation officer, Tom Grinnell, also said Bateman had not posted a sign on his car.

Bateman must serve at least five years before becoming eligible for parole.

Golden retriever saves owner

EVANSVILLE, Ind. — A 10-year-old boy fell into an icy lake while trying to save his golden retriever, then was helped to safety by his pet, who kept him afloat and nudged him toward solid ice, the boy's father said.

"We'll have to find a nice steak bone for him," Glenn A. Henderson said of Merle, a 65-pound, 2-year-old retriever.

The dog stayed with Glenn "Sam" Henderson until a rescue team could pull the boy from the lake just west of Evansville after the mishap Tuesday afternoon.

Merle was chasing a stick Sam had thrown when the golden retriever broke through the ice. Sam, believing his dog was in trouble, fell into the water while trying to save his pet, Henderson said.

"Merle was behind him, pushing him toward the ice, nudging him and keeping him up. And Sam was holding onto him," Henderson said.

Wichita fire kills 2 children

WICHITA — Two children were killed, a third was seriously injured and five others escaped injury Wednesday night in a house fire, officials said.

A 4-year-old girl and a 3-year-old boy died from injuries suffered in the fire, a nursing supervisor at St. Francis Regional Medical Center said. A 2-year-old girl was listed in serious condition with burns on her face and head.

One adult male also escaped injury in the fire at a residential home, fire officials said. The names of those involved were not released, and the cause of the blaze was under investigation.

Marijuana smokers may face risk of lung cancer, study says

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — One marijuana cigarette is as bad for the body as four or five ordinary cigarettes, and regular pot users may face the same lung cancer risk as pack-a-day smokers, says the author of a new study.

"Our study deflates somewhat the myth that smoking just a little bit of marijuana can't be that bad for you compared with tobacco, since tobacco smokers generally smoke far more," said Dr. Donald Tashkin.

The reason is the way pot users smoke, tending to take deep puffs and hold them in.

The new study found that this style of smoking means one joint, or marijuana cigarette, deposits four times as much tar in the lungs as one tobacco cigarette. And it results in five times as much carbon monoxide in the bloodstream.

"The smokers of only a few joints of marijuana a day may have at least as great a risk of developing lung cancer, if not a greater risk, as the average tobacco smoker," said Tashkin, a researcher at the University of California at Los Angeles.

He estimates that three or four joints a day could pose about the same lung cancer risk as three-quarters of a pack or a full pack of cigarettes. There are 20 cigarettes to a pack.

Tashkin said his research suggests that pot smokers may also face an elevated risk of heart attacks.

His latest study was published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

Experts have long suspected that marijuana smoke is harmful to the lungs, but there has been little hard evidence of this. Six years ago, a panel of the National Academy of Sciences concluded that pot smoking probably has similar effects as tobacco, and heavy prolonged use may lead to cancer.

Surgeon General C. Everett Koop has called marijuana "a major public health problem in the United States."

An estimated 25 percent of the population has tried marijuana, and millions are thought to use it regularly.

In earlier studies, Tashkin found that those who smoke three or four joints a day have as much bronchitis and damage to the major airways of the lungs as do pack-a-day cigerette smokers.

"That puzzled us," he said. "Why should smoking one-seventh the quantity of marijuana compared to tobacco produce a similar prevalence of symptomatic abnormalities as well as pathologic changes?"

The researchers recruited 15 men who had smoked both marijuana and cigarettes for at least five years and looked for differences in how the men smoked them.

They measured the volume of each puff, how much air got mixed in, how long they held the smoke, how long they waited between puffs, how much tar they breathed in and how much tar they exhaled.

They found that the smokers inhaled three times more smoke from one joint than one cigarette. And a third more tar was retained from each puff of marijuana.

"The result is that there is a four-fold greater burden of tar on the lung from the smoke of a single marijuana joint compared to one cigarette when each type is smoked the way it's ordinarily smoked," Tashkin said.

Tashkin said he believes this poses a significant cancer risk, although there is no direct evidence that pot smokers actually suffer an unusually high incidence of lung cancer.

He also noted that THC, the substance that produces a marijuana high, speeds up the heart rate by 50 percent.

Report divides Austria

Document criticizes Waldheim

By The Associated Press

VIENNA, Austria — The unexpectedly critical report on the World War II activities of President Kurt Waldheim has widened a deep split among Austrians, intensified calls for his resignation and divided the governing coalition.

On Wednesday, the Socialists who govern with Waldheim's conservative supporters added their voice to the criticism of the president, but they stopped short of demanding that he quit.

The conservative People's Party, which backed Waldheim in the bitter 1986 presidential campaign, was the only political party to throw its weight fully behind the president.

Waldheim's supporters had predicted the report by a panel of six historians would clear his name. Now the same conservative politicians and commentators reject it.

Unidentified sources quoted by Austrian news media said Waldheim and the conservatives accepted it only after fierce rows in the coalition government.

There were rumors that Waldheim was preparing to resign. A source close to the president, speaking on condition of anonymity, called the report "devastating."

But Waldheim, the 69-year-old former secretary-general of the United Nations, said again Wednesday he had no intention of resigning.

He said Hans Rudolf Kurz, the chairman of the panel, "has unequivocally stated that there was no culpable conduct on my part and that I was not involved in any war crime actions."

The Austria Press Agency quoted him as saying the panel also repeated "previous statements regarding the degree of knowledge" of Nazi atrocities in Greece and Yugoslavia and that he saw "no reason ... to take any steps whatsoever."

The small environmental Greens party joined Nazi hunter Simon Wiesenthal and former Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, a Socialist, in calling for the president to step down.

The chief secretary of the Socialist party, Heinrich Keller, said, "The Socialist party speaks neither for nor against a resignation" but is "ready to accept such a decision."

Greens party deputy Walter Geyer said the Socialist deputies in Parliament he had spoken with admitted in private that Waldheim "damages Austria" and must step down. "No one dares to say it publicly," he said.

The 202-page report, released Tuesday, documented Waldheim's actions as a German army lieutenant from 1942 to 1945. It said he had consistently concealed his past and lied about what he knew during his service in the Balkans.

It said he was very well informed about Nazi atrocities in Greece and Yugoslavia and failed even once to oppose them. But it said the question of whether he is guilty of any war crime remains open.

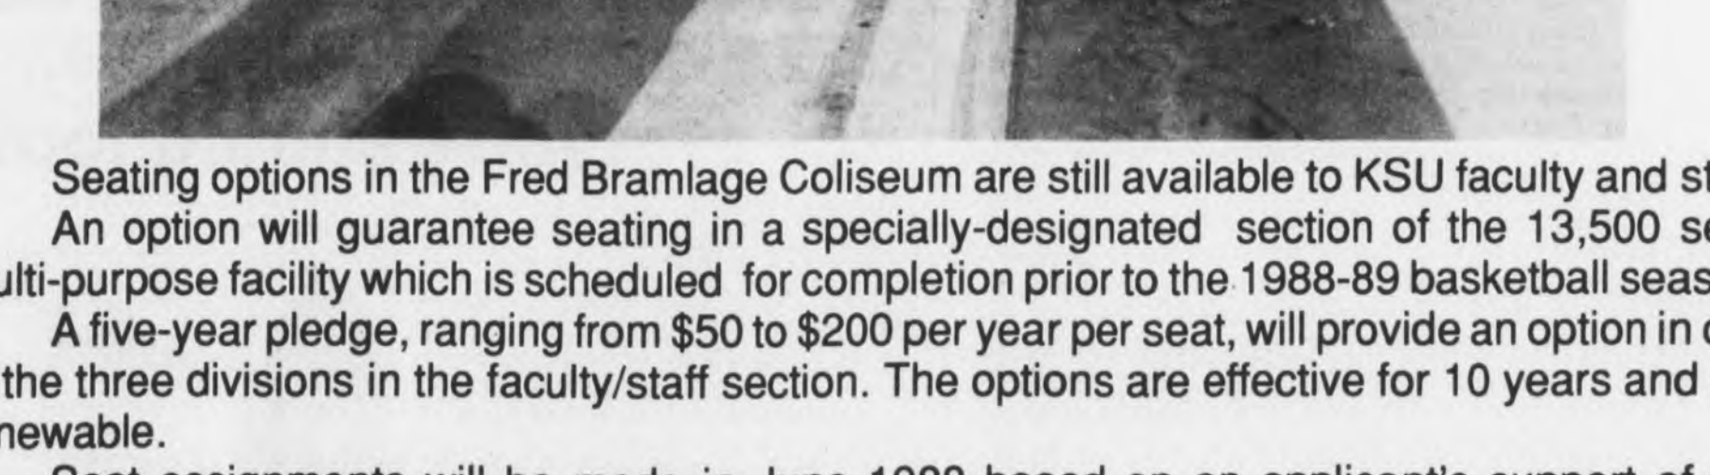
FACULTY/STAFF OPTIONS FOR THE BRAMLAGE COLISEUM



Seating options in the Fred Bramlage Coliseum are still available to KSU faculty and staff.

An option will guarantee seating in a specially-designated section of the 13,500 seat, multi-purpose facility which is scheduled for completion prior to the 1988-89 basketball season.

A five-year pledge, ranging from $50 to $200 per year per seat, will provide an option in one of the three divisions in the faculty/staff section. The options are effective for 10 years and are renewable.

Seat assignments will be made in June 1988 based on an applicant's support of the Coliseum Capital Campaign, support of the athletic department, and number of years season basketball tickets have been purchased.

Options payments must be 80% fulfilled prior to seat assignment and 100% complete by December 1988.

Susan B. Anthony week should stress variety

The issues of rape and violence should be important to women. In the fight for women's rights, the right for women not to be raped or submitted to violence should be discussed during an important event like Susan B. Anthony Awareness Week, which is going on this week.

However, other issues — positive as well as negative — should not be ignored during this important week. week.

This week's activities address the topic of violence against women. A week spent examining the violent acts to which women are subjected does not seem to be in the spirit of the accomplishments for which Anthony labored.

Many topics could have shown the positive endeavors of women in the past and the progress women intend to make in the future.

For instance, with all the future businesswomen attending K-State, it would have been interesting and helpful to have at least one discussion on the masculinization of women when they enter the business world.

The discussion could have offered successful ways for women to become prosperous without giving up their principles. These future businesswomen could have learned that it is a "dog eat dog" world only because ideas making it that way are perpetuated.

Another excellent topic would have been the gains made in women's rights since Anthony's time and those that still need to be accomplished in that area. Many women would like to be involved in gaining rights for women, but they lack information on what needs to be done and how to go about doing it.

A discussion on what women can do to enact tougher laws against those who violate them would be useful and constructive. But many women need to know whom to write to and what legislation is necessary to enact such laws.

How to avoid violence and rape and how to perform self-defense are also topics worth pursuing, but there are other positive, useful topics of interest to women.

It is good for women to be aware, but they should be aware of more than just the negative things that being female can bring them.

Longer hospital stays add to inflating costs

The "medical arms race" strikes again.

Although it is inarguable that the cost of health care at U.S. hospitals is nothing short of exorbitant, a recent study indicates that our nation's hospitals are unnecessarily extending the length of time patients are admitted. This adds more substance to the emerging view that our nation's hospitals are out of control.

And the hope of decently priced health care has another strike against it.

The study confirmed that, at hospitals located in high-competition areas, average lengths of patient stays were 16.9 percent higher than in lower competition areas.

The study revealed that the hospitals responded to the competition not by lowering prices but by adding fancy equipment, extra beds and other amenities. These additions only served to duplicate services and increase costs, the researchers said.

Of the almost 500,000 patients studied, researchers were unable to find medical reasons for longer surgical stays of patients at high-competition hospitals.

What all this means to individuals — at least in high-competition areas — is that they face rising costs and unnecessarily long stays in high-competition hospitals. The study revealed that this was not a problem in lower competition areas.

The public should not be forced to put up with the higher prices caused by the competition, but it is difficult and time-consuming for individuals to search for the lowest prices of health care, especially when the differences are minimal.

It is up to the hospitals themselves to stop the ridiculous practice of keeping patients longer than necessary and adding extra luxuries for no other reason than to make more money.

A team of doctors representing each hospital in a high-competition area should be established to randomly review cases in the various hospitals to ensure that patients are not being held longer than necessary.

This would be a system based on honor because the doctors would be checking on themselves and their own hospitals. But because it would be done with their peers from the other hospitals, it would be difficult to cheat.

Hospitals and doctors probably would not enjoy the reputation of being the bad guys, so they should take this positive step of self-evaluation and control to ensure the public has reasonably priced health care and a reasonable length of stay in the hospital.

Bennett's 'Madison High' fails to consider educational reality

Commentary

BECKY LUCAS
Collegian Columnist

It's a miracle high school students can learn anything in today's schools.

About a month ago, Secretary of Education William Bennett released a report discussing the model high school. It seems that his vision of a new high school — under the fictitious name of James Madison High — should ensure a grade-A, unbeatable education for all who enter its hallowed halls. Unfortunately, Bennett seemed to forget that students would soon be running through the freshly painted hallways, leaving graffiti markings and dirty shoe marks wherever they went.

Bennett also seemed to forget that few high schools will ever have the opportunity of starting at square one. Rather, high schools must learn to make do with what they have instead of building a new school.

A prime example of "making do" is occurring in the Shawnee Mission School District in Kansas City right now. Two years ago the district implemented a plan to do away with junior high schools that had seventh, eighth and ninth grades in favor of implementing a middle-school system with only grades seven and eight.

This, of course, pushed the ninth-graders into the high schools. When this occurred, the high schools found it a prime time to do some re-evaluating, almost creating what Bennett would no doubt be happy to see: a Shawnee Mission Madison High School.

Curriculum requirements for graduation were upgraded and changed. Some course offerings were dropped, and others were added. In theory, the restructuring plan had worked, and it looked like a great idea turned into an actuality.

But something even the great Bennett seemed not to have taken into account when building his James Madison High School was the actual classroom situation in the school.

Now in Bennett's imaginary James Madison, I visualize sparkling white hallways with smiling teachers standing at the doors to their rooms, greeting students as they walk into the rooms.

The rooms, of course, have been constructed to meet all standards needed by the teachers. There are plenty of desks and lots of shelves and chalkboards for the teachers' and students' use.

In James Madison High, teachers have a bearable class load — teaching no more than two subjects — and a strong administrative staff to rely upon in the event that discipline problems should arise. But since there are no students roaming the halls at James Madison, discipline is not likely to be a problem.

In reality, as opposed to the fictional James Madison school, many teachers cart their possessions from one room to another. Other teachers don't have enough chairs or desks for their students to sit in, and still other students meet in the teachers' cafeteria for class since no other room is available.

How, do you wonder, would Bennett solve this school's problem? Possibly by tearing it down and erecting a James Madison II High School. But as everyone knows, money is tight and districts cannot afford the cost to rebuild schools.

It would seem fantasy solutions and real-life solutions often differ.

What Bennett and many others fail to realize is that the curriculum a high school offers is only part of the solution to the education dilemma facing the United States.

The curriculum may be an important factor in a high school, but so is the physical environment. How can teachers be expected to teach and students be expected to learn in one of the aforementioned environments?

So, you say, this sounds like it could be a problem, but not near here. If you say this, you are wrong.

The Manhattan schools have teachers who travel from room to room, and the Shawnee Mission schools have math classes which meet in the drivers education room. How can a math teacher be expected to teach math without a chalkboard?

Teachers who work in situations like this overcome their handicaps or quit the teaching profession. Teachers who have class in the teachers' cafeteria arrange for a mobile chalkboard, and they deal with real-life problems as best as they can.

The problems facing the U.S. education system go deeper than just changing the curricula in high schools throughout the country.

By attempting to solve the problem, Bennett has ignored many equally pressing problems that actually face today's high schools.

Changing the curriculum is easy. Changing the environment and the attitudes of students are problems that cannot be solved by building a spotless new school. Unless that school is solely in the imagination of one man.

Then the problems are solved, and "they all lived happily ever after," as fictional tales usually end.

Not everyone should look, feel so good

Commentary

CATHERINE DOUD
Collegian Columnist

February is shaping up to be a truly bad month. As Garfield the cat would say, "February is the Monday of months."

I'm not in the habit of quoting cats that often, but his words (thoughts?) ring true. A lot of things have happened this month, and not very many of them have made me happy — except, of course, for the Wildcats being ranked 14th in the nation.

My February depression goes much deeper than just that Congress wants Columbus on the dollar bill. Major events have happened that will probably depress me and other easily depressible people for years. However, like the dollar, these new changes are disguised in the form of great achievements.

Take, for example, Retin-a. This little cream is supposed to be able to dissolve wrinkles. Sure, it sounds like a good idea, but have you ever stopped to think about all the implications?

It is no longer acceptable to be old. It is no longer acceptable to be marked by age. I used to look forward to growing old; at least then no one would expect me to look good. Now, manufacturers are slowly taking away all the excuses I used to anticipate.

There are even more problems with the cream. Some people — mostly blondes — are very sensitive to the cream, and it causes side effects so that they can't use it. These side effects include red, peeling, itchy skin that leaves you looking worse than you did before you used the cream.

The worst part about the new wrinkle cream is that once you start using it you have to keep using it to retain its benefits. Like so many other beauty aids that are acceptable in our society, this cream reinforces the idea that once you look artificially good, people expect you to continue looking good. This gets expensive.

Actually, Retin-a is the least of my problems this month. There is a larger shadow on the horizon: the coming of fake fat. No doubt you have heard of it already. From the people who brought you artificial sugar, there is now a way to eat all the fat you want without gaining an ounce. There is now no excuse for being fat.

Thanks to the wonder of science, people can now gorge to their heart's content, secure in the knowledge that they won't have to pay for it on the scales tomorrow. Gluttony is now acceptable, and exercise is unnecessary since there are no calories to burn.

It's nice to think of a world where everyone is perfect. There is no fat, there are no wrinkles, everyone looks just like everyone else. But, hey, they all look good.

All of them, that is, who have the money to buy all of this junk in order to look like everyone else. Wouldn't it just be easier to make ugliness the "in" style?

Another major scientific breakthrough that was published this month may someday affect the way people live, literally. Using the same technology that enabled doctors to do heart surgery on infants while still in the womb, doctors can now pick and choose which child will live and which won't in the cases of multiple births. It is a highly selective form of abortion.

This idea does have some merit. It is often mentioned in regard to cases where women have used fertility drugs or had numerous fetuses implanted in their body in hopes of having one healthy child. Sometimes more fetuses develop than the mother can handle, thus making the likelihood of a successful delivery slim. By terminating some of the fetuses, the chances of having a safe delivery are improved.

It's still not an easy decision. Usually the parents involved have spent a great deal of time and money hoping to conceive a healthy child, and the loss of even one fetus is heartbreaking. However, this surgery often saves numerous fetuses who would otherwise have died if they had all been allowed to go full term.

The real problem with this surgery is the impact it has for the future. The procedure would allow parents to terminate one of a set of twins, selecting the sex they want to keep. It could also be used to terminate deformed or physically unappealing fetuses. Parents are gaining more and more control over the birthing process.

The day is not far away when the same technology that allows us to conceive fetuses in a petri dish before implantation will allow us to freeze some of the fetuses and then thaw them out 20 years from now, so that a person could have an identical twin 20 years younger.

Of course, if this is possible, we could probably begin using perfect human specimens to fertilize eggs and then place the fetuses in less perfect humans to be conceived. Thus, horrible hereditary diseases could be eliminated, and the human species would be healthier and more attractive.

This is being done in cows and horses today. We have the technology to create a vast homogeneous herd of humans.

Soon we may all look alike thanks to science. The important question is, will they come up with a way to make us all think alike? Or, have they already?

Display features Kansas' role in Civil War slavery conflict

By Robert Short
Collegian Reporter

A piece of Kansas' bloody Civil War history is on display in the front lobby of Farrell Library this month to remind people of the crucial role this state played in the slavery issue, said Noel Young, instructor of library.

The "Bloody Kansas" exhibit portrays Kansas as the scene of vigilante anti-slavery groups battling with pro-slavery Border Ruffians during a period between 1854 to 1858, he said.

The display, which Young volunteered to coordinate, features the book "John Brown" by W. E. Burghardt Du Bois.

The book presents a unique description of the anti-slavery Brown as a selfless companion of black people, Young said.

This book provides a unique perspective on Brown and this time in history because most of the mainstream history written on Brown describes him as violent and unstable, he said.

Young volunteered to do this project because he is very interested in Kansas history.

Virginia Quiring, associate dean of library, said the calender of library exhibits is drawn up months in advance to allow faculty volunteers to choose which exhibit they would like to organize and still have time to put together the materials needed for the displays.

"We usually like to pick something that is relevant on the local, national or educational level that the library has related materials on," Quiring said.

Young said he feels it is important to tie our past to our present.

There is an important comparison to be made between the Border Ruffians of our Civil War and the Contras of Central America because both groups used violence to get their point across, he said.

The "Bloody Kansas" exhibit is a follow-up to the January display commemorating Kansas as the 34th state to enter the Union, Quiring said.

It is a good time for a Civil War display since Abraham Lincoln's birthday is Friday, she said.

Library displays are not all Kansas-related — many deal with national events such as the bicentennial of the Constitution last fall, Quiring said.

KPL may lower gas prices

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — KPL Gas Service announced Wednesday it will seek Kansas Corporation Commission approval to lower the cost of natural gas it distributes to Kansas customers by nearly 15 cents per thousand cubic feet.

The reduction would amount to about $17.50 a year for the typical residential customer using 120 mcf a year, or an average of 10 mcf per month.

The lower rates would apply to KPL's customers in more than 200 cities and towns of Kansas, including Arkansas City, Atchison, Augusta, Baxter Springs, Beloit, El Dorado, Emporia, Fort Scott, Iola, Kansas City, Leavenworth, Osawatomie, Paola, Parsons, Pittsburg, Topeka, Wellington, Wichita and the Johnson County suburbs.

David S. Black, KPL's chairman and chief executive officer, said the lower charge for gas is a result of nearly two years of negotiation between the company and its main supplier, Williams Natural Gas Co.

Under an agreement, the WNG pipeline system for gas transportation services will be re-opened to KPL, he said, pending approval by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

"This agreement offers a number of benefits to our customers," Black said in a statement issued by the company. "In addition to lower gas costs and a broad range of sales and transportation services, it commits WNG to provide a gas storage service to assure adequate supplies to meet peak winter needs."

Film focuses on violence

2 million women beaten each year

By Steve Walker
Collegian Reporter

Battery is the leading cause of injuries to women in the United States. This includes intimate violence: being beaten or abused by a person you love.

"It would be nice to think we're dealing with the weird population — but we're not," said Judy Davis, executive director of the Crisis Center Inc. "Battered women are the women we know, and they are everywhere."

Davis showed the film "Two Million Women" during a discussion she led Wednesday concerning intimate violence and women.

The film focused on women who had been in physically abusive relationships and how they resolved their problems. Some women, according to the film, say: "If a man hits me just once, I'd leave right then."

The film explained why other women are compelled to stay in abusive relationships. The man might apologize, coerce, plead, cry or convince the woman he will change, but most men don't.

"When you love someone, you will do anything for them — even if it hurts," said a high school girl in the film who had been beaten by her boyfriend of two years.

Some women remain in abusive relationships because they might not be able to support themselves, have no friends, or are alone, hopeless and afraid.

According to the film, two million women are beaten each year by their husbands and boyfriends.

"We're just beginning to uncover the numbers," said Davis. "I don't think that the numbers are going up. It's (just) that more people are talking (about it)."

Some men may have an inability to express anger, fear or jealousy without the use of physical violence, the film said.

Signs that can point to potential violence include jealousy and possessiveness, Davis said.

"Jealousy is a symptom of a problem," she said. "Low self-esteem and a need to control those who matter in their lives is why men abuse those they love."

Davis said the most common threats men make to the women they beat are "I will kill you if you leave me" and "I will take the children and you will never see them again if you leave me."

"I'm still shocked by it all (the number of battered women), and I work in the middle of this stuff every day," Davis said.

Panel discusses attitudes, beliefs

By Vince Huser
Collegian Reporter

Six male panelists met Wednesday night in Union 207 to conduct an audience-participation session on male attitudes and actions toward violence against women.

"Our attitudes and actions: Men discuss violence against women" was a discussion organized by the Women's Resource Center in conjunction with Susan B. Anthony Awareness Week.

Frank Saal, professor of psychology, moderated the panel in a discussion about attitudes and beliefs men have about abusive violence — both mental and physical — towards women.

One topic discussed was ways in which men are mentally abusive to women, specifically in the way they domineer them.

Phil Anderson, instructor of speech, said, "We're culturalized to do it. Specifically in my own background in the '50s ... (there were) phrases that had to do with the domination of women and being the man of the house."

Phrases like, "While I'm away you're the man of the house, Tommy," illustrate some of the attitudes that people are brought up with.

"It's heard from your parents and your peers and it's been handed down," Anderson said.

Also, words like "wimp" and "sis-

Corps delegates discuss culture

By The Collegian Staff

Cultural adjustment is often a problem for many Peace Corps volunteers — not the adjustment to a new culture, but the readjustment back to American culture.

This was the belief of most of the eight Peace Corps volunteers who gathered in the Union Wednesday night to talk about their experiences with about 20 prospective volunteers.

Personal change and learning through mistakes were other points made by former volunteers.

"I knew just enough Spanish to get me in trouble," said Gloria Freeland, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications and assistant director of Student Publications Inc.

Freeland worked in Ecuador in the early 1970s, concentrating her work on health and nutrition.

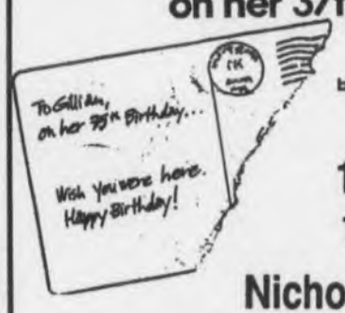
Charles and Meredith Stroh used the corps as an opportunity to get married and get away from the political turmoil in the United States in 1969.

Even though the Strohs went to Afghanistan nearly 20 years ago, they still have ties with the people there. One of Charles' former students is now in Manhattan.

The Strohs spoke of the work of married people in the corps and the difficult adjustment for women in a different culture.

Men in other countries think of American women as they see them in movies, said Charles, a professor of art. It is even more difficult for single women to adjust because people often can't believe they would want to leave their country and family, the Strohs said.

A problem for married people joining the corps and leaving the country is that there is not just one set of upset parents but two, Meredith said.



"If our children wanted to (join the corps), I would worry but I would say to do it," she said.

Six volunteers from K-State are among the 5,600 who are now out of the country, said Rob McRae, the area representative for the corps.

K-State has placed 360 volunteers in foreign lands, which ranks it among the top 60 in placement.

Where can you turn when you are being ABUSED?

By Nancy Chartrand
Staff Writer

It's 3 a.m. and you are at the corner convenience store. Your two young children are with you, wearing only their pajamas because you did not have the time to dress them. You have been badly beaten by your husband during one of his violent outbursts. You are scared to death to go back and even more scared because you have no place to go.

More women than most people would like to realize have been in a situation like this.

The Crisis Center Inc. of Manhattan recognizes the need to give shelter and counseling to women in situations like this and many others.

"We (the Crisis Center) are a local-born, private, non-profit organization, which opened in 1979 for the purpose of serving the victims of spouse abuse, battered women and rape victims," said Judy Davis, executive director of the center.

The center also works with people in dating relationships that are abusive.

"You don't have to be battered to be abused," Davis said.

According to Davis, the center handles more cases of wife abuse than those of sexual assault.

The center operates a shelter where spouses and their children who are afraid to return to their homes can live for a period of time. Each year the center provides shelter for approximately 500 to 600 women and children.

The center, which has a 24-hour hotline for handling crisis calls, is staffed by four full-time employees. It also utilizes volunteer workers.

"We have at any given time about 50 volunteers," Davis said.

Those who wish to become volunteers go through intensive, initial training sessions that amount to about 16 hours.

Then individual interviews are held. If the candidates pass this stage, they may become volunteers. New volunteers start out by being paired with experienced personnel.

The location of the shelter is kept secret in order to protect the center's clients. However, the telephone number is public.

The secrecy of the location is so important that all volunteers must sign an oath promising they will not divulge the shelter's location. This emphasizes to the volunteers how important secrecy is, Davis said.

Because the phone number is public, husbands can call their wives when their spouses are at the shelter. However, Davis said, "The confidentiality of the clients is protected at all times."

For this reason, those who answer the crisis hotline are not allowed to tell callers if the person they are requesting is there. Callers are told that the message will be relayed if the person requested is present.

"We do (at times) get abusive calls from husbands, boyfriends, etc.," Davis said.

There is no limit on the length of time a client may stay at the shelter. The range of time has been anywhere from 24 hours to several months. Women may require a longer stay in extreme situations, such as when a husband is quite violent for a long period of time, Davis said.

"We determine the time case by case, and I have no inclination to change," she said.

Housing at the shelter may not always be the best alternative for every victim. Rape survivors, for example, need a sense of security, privacy and a peaceful atmosphere in order to recover, Davis said. She said rape victims do not usually stay at the shelter because people tend to come and go frequently and, therefore, the environment is sometimes chaotic.

When a woman enters the shelter, she signs a contract listing her goals and how she plans to reach them.

The shelter works just like a home, with each woman and her children — if they are with her — doing assigned chores.

Many projects like the center were started by a battered woman taking other battered women into her home, Davis said.

The Crisis Center does not offer therapy but refers clients to outside organizations.

"We (the Crisis Center) educate on the dynamics of abuse, give information and act as a support group," Davis said.

She added that the center would also offer help to any man, if the situation were to arise.

Between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m., a staff member is available to answer hotline calls. Volunteers are given assigned shifts to work on nights, weekends and holidays and are not required to be at the center during their work hours. Volunteers often carry a pager, so they can be contacted at a moment's notice.

For example, if the woman at the convenience store were to call the hotline, the message service would page the volunteer and give him or her the location and telephone number of the woman.

The volunteer would call his or her partner, and then they would either call the woman back or go to the convenience store.

Once they arrived, they would determine what the woman wanted or needed.

If she decided she wanted to go to the shelter but needed some items at home, the volunteers would get a police escort to do so.

"We usually do not do this right away," Davis said. This is because the husband might still be in a violent mood.

Davis said there have been instances where a husband will try to attack the police officer.

"The police are there to keep peace, but sometimes we still run into problems."

Sometimes the center uses former clients in its program. However, the center usually waits until the clients have been out of the shelter for a time.

"We can't use them for about a year," Davis said. "Clients need to distance themselves; otherwise, they could relive their own experience."

If you or anyone you know is the victim of an abusive relationship, call the Crisis Center Hotline today at 539-2785.

Jazz bands to be evaluated in McCain

By Greg Vogel
Collegian Reporter

Jazz will be flowing out the doors of McCain Auditorium Friday when approximately 500 people converge on the facility to participate in the Central States Jazz Festival.

Bands participating in the festival will be placed in various classifications, ranging from junior high school, high school, community colleges and colleges.

The goals of the festival are to give educators and their students the opportunity to have an impartial evaluation of the quality of the work they are doing. It also provides an opportunity for the younger players to learn what's going on from the professionals, said Alfred Cochran, assistant professor of music and coordinator of the event.

The idea for the festival began about 20 years ago. People were concerned that there was not ample opportunity for young, high school and college-age musicians to be judged on the quality of the work they were doing at school in the jazz areas, said Cochran.

A series of regional festivals was then set up across the country, and K-State was one site selected.

"This became one of the first nationally recognized jazz festivals in the country," Cochran said.

The festival allows participating bands to see how they stack up against the band from across town or across the state, he said.

The professionals judging the various bands throughout the day are the U.S. Air Force Falconaires. The band, stationed at the U.S. Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Colo., will present a concert Friday at 8 p.m.

Cochran said he believes the chance to see the Falconaires is a good opportunity for the public and students at K-State.

"For the students and members of the community, it's a must see kind of a thing," he said. "The band is hot — it's just an incredibly fine organization and one of the best jazz bands in the country."

All bands at the festival will perform for a panel of three judges from the Falconaires. The judges use a standard form to rate the band according to blend, balance, jazz style, improvisation and various other criteria, Cochran said.

A score is then determined from the form and the band is given a rating. The rating system used ranges from one to five, with a rating of one being superior, he said.

After the bands complete their performances in the large part of McCain, they go downstairs to the green room and are given musical pieces they have never seen before, Cochran said.

The director is given a minute to study the music. He can then explain it to the students and then they have to sight read it, he said.

There is another judge at this time who rates the students on their ability to read new music, he said.

"For a teacher, this is a very valuable measurement of the teaching he is doing," Cochran said.

At the end of this process there will be a member of the Falconaires who will speak to the band about its performances. The bands will receive one verbal and four written commentaries by the Falconaires on their performance.

The performances throughout the day are free to the public, with events beginning at 9 a.m.

The evening concert, featuring the Falconaires, will also have performances by selected bands from the different schools at the festival. Admission will be charged for this event.

Miami's drug dealers 'branch out'

By The Associated Press

ATLANTA — One youth outlined the word "Miami" on his teeth in gold and diamonds. Others wear Miami T-shirts, jackets and hats to flaunt their status as Miami Boys, a loose-knit band of drug dealers who have brought their cocaine and violence north to Atlanta.

"Georgia is sitting on top of a volcano," said Jimmy Davis, supervisor of drug enforcement for the Georgia Bureau of Investigation. "The South Florida Vice Presidential Task Force has put so much pressure on drug dealers ... they've branched out."

At the height of Miami's cocaine wars, the task force was established to strengthen drug enforcement in southern Florida. Its efforts have driven some dealers farther north, resulting in calls from Georgia officials for similar aid.

The Miami Boys once was a formal gang that moved in recent years to Atlanta's low-income areas to sell drugs, said Lt. John Woodard, commander of the narcotics and vice unit of the Atlanta Bureau of Police Services.

"Now you've got so many imitators," Woodard explained. "It's the glamour of the drug culture."

Woodard said he noticed about two years ago the young men, ranging in age from 15 to about 25, coming to Atlanta to sell cocaine and crack.

Police suspected a trend when they found several people carrying larger than usual amounts of cocaine. Instead of just a few small bags of the drug, the men had 200 to 300 bags, Woodard said.

In addition to large amounts of narcotics, Miami Boys have changed Georgia's drug business with their violent tactics. Uzis and Soviet assault rifles frequently are weapons of protection and aggression, Woodard said.

Proud of their affiliation, some dealers wear Miami T-shirts, hats and jackets. Sometimes they pose for pictures with their guns, cocaine and crack, Woodard said.

He said about 20 Miami Boys have been arrested, some more than once, over the last two years on drugs and weapons charges.

"The thing that worries us is that they are very violent in their approach to law enforcement and their clientele," Davis said.

"Sellers hold a gun on buyers," Woodard added. "That is a new situation."

Not only the buyer and the seller are at risk, but sometimes an innocent bystander can get caught in the crossfire.

In October, a 60-year-old woman was killed during a shootout between drug dealers over territory. A drug dealer was killed by a Miami Boy during a shootout in January 1987, Woodard said.

Kansas House passes ambulance service bill

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A bill designed to better organize the state's supervision of local ambulance services won House approval today.

The measure, which passed on an 121-4 vote, would abolish the bureau of emergency medical services and its 18-member advisory council and replace it with a 13-member board appointed by the governor. It now goes to the Senate.

The new board would approve all training programs.

K-State's 1988 signees 'best group'

By Russ Ewy
Sports Writer

Despite the dreary weather, a ray of sunshine fell upon K-State's football program Wednesday, when it signed 27 high school athletes for its 1988 recruiting class.

"We're extremely pleased with the quality of this class on and off the field," Coach Stan Parrish said. "I think they're the best group we've recruited since we've been here. We got a lot of big kids which we need, and at the same time, we picked up some skill players that we need, too."

At the top of the recruiting class is 5-foot-11, 185-pound tailback Sonny Ray Jones from Ravenna, Ohio. He set the best single game rushing performance in the country for a high school player last year by gaining 445 yards on 20 carries, while scoring five touchdowns. He ended the 1987 season with 1,962 yards rushing, averaging 192 yards per contest.

Jones will bring a positive outlook to K-State, as well as a goal of going to a bowl game.

"I feel K-State and myself can grow together and the players we brought in will increase our chances of winning," Jones said. "I feel that if we win two games each year more than we won the season before we will be achieving something. That means by the time I'm a senior we will have won eight games and eight games will get us to a bowl game."

"We have three receivers and two running backs," Parrish said. "I think one of the running backs (Jones) has a chance to be something special."

In addition to Jones, Parrish said the signing of punter George Matsakis was a move toward strengthening his team's biggest weakness of a year ago.

"The Lord has strange ways of working. George was the first kid we heard from this (Wednesday) morning, and he fills our most pressing need," Parrish said. "I project he'll kick the ball in the 41-42 yard range right away. He's as important as anyone we signed."

Parrish signed four in-state players to his list of recruits, despite tough competition for Kansas prepsters with other schools.

"We're excited about the four kids that we recruited. Neither one of us (K-State or the University of Kansas) had a very good year (recruiting) in the state. There were some good players in the state and we were in the fight for several of them right to the end. We would have like to have had three or four more, but that's the way it goes in recruiting, particularly when you come off a season like the one we came off."

Kansas signees include:

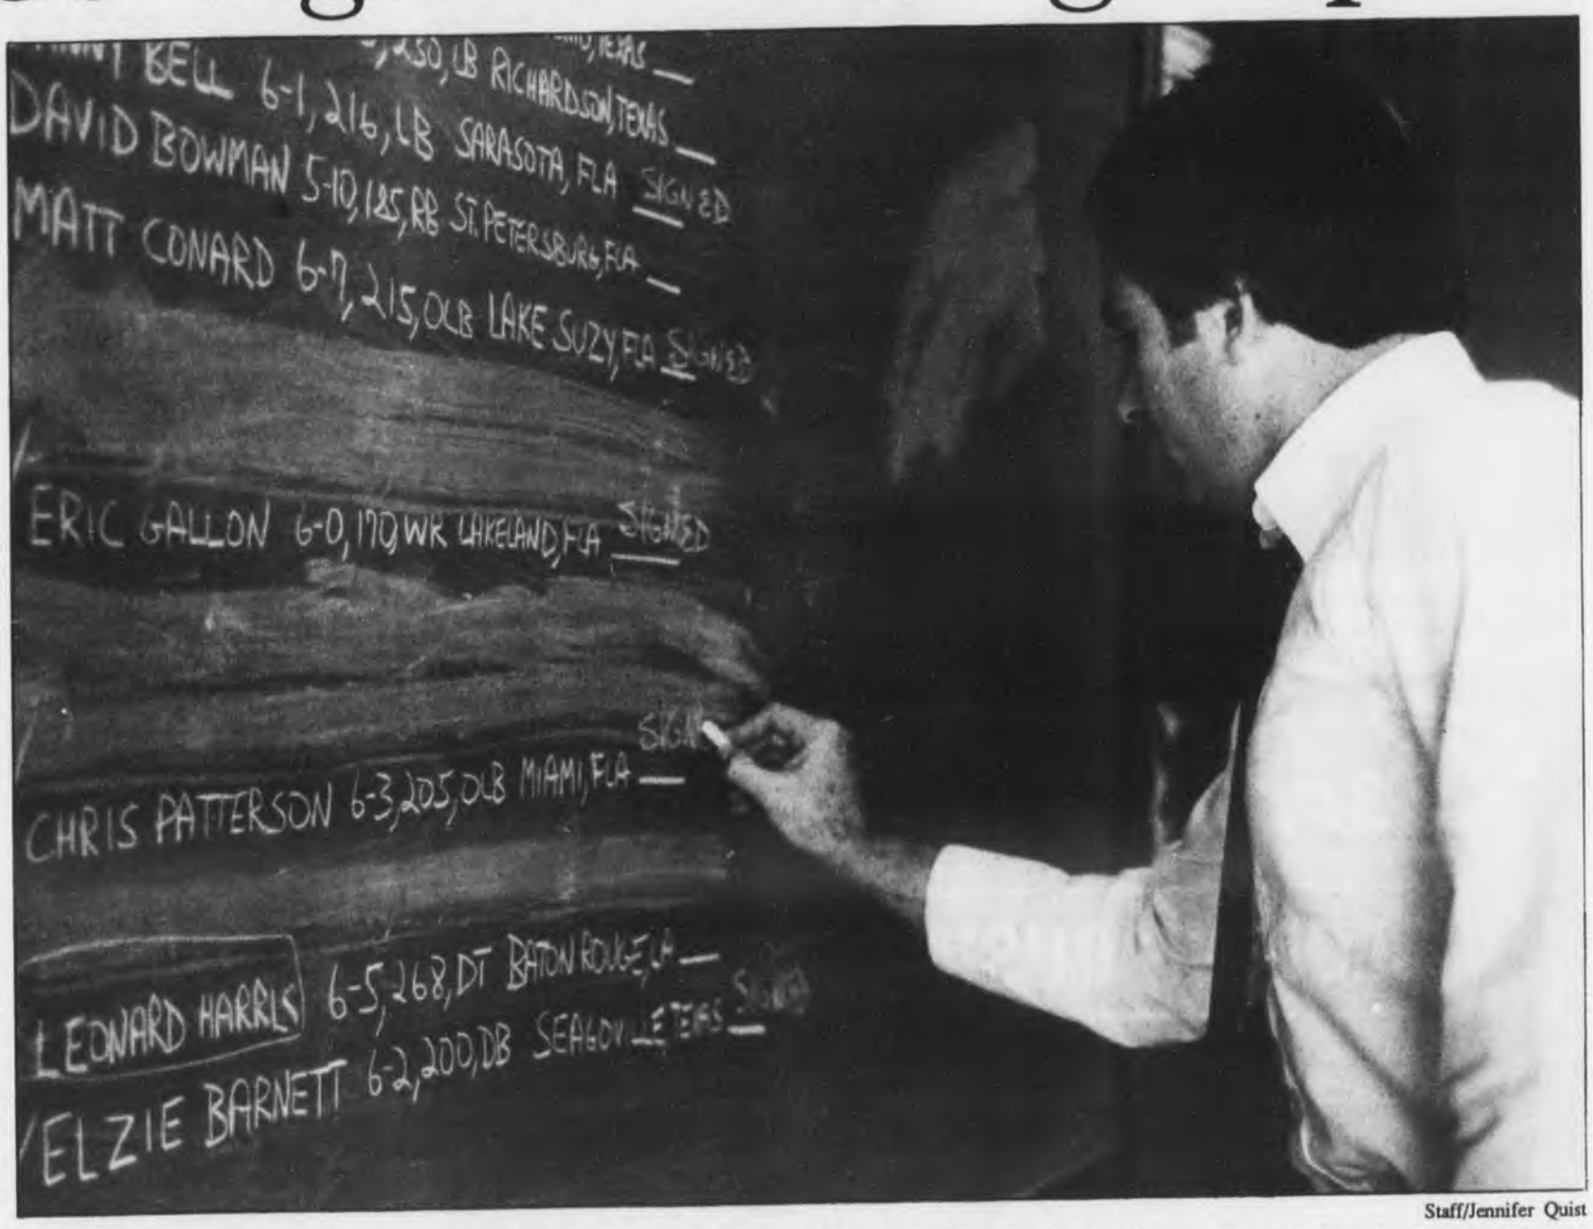
■ Brooks Barta, a 6-foot, 195-pound outside linebacker from Smith Center, who led his team in tackles with 110 (70 solo), while helping lead his team to a 21-1 record in his last two seasons. He was also named to the Kansas Shrine Bowl West squad.

"He and Simoneau (Jeff, who signed with Arizona State) were the 1-2 punch down there," Parrish said of Barta. "He's all-everything, a great student and a great person."

■ Scott Travis, a 6-foot-3, 210-pound outside linebacker from Manhattan. He was named to the All-I-70 league team and played defensive end on Manhattan High's class 6A state runner-up squad during the 1987 season.

"He's another achiever," Parrish said. "He will get better and better. His best football is all in front of him."

■ Mike Orr, a 6-foot-7 tight end from Paola. Orr will play on the Kansas Shrine Bowl East team and was named a Class 4A All-State selection, and was an All-Frontier league pick as well.



"He's big, strong, fast — what a Big Eight tight end ought to look like," Parrish said of Orr. "He's got all the tools you look for in a tight end."

■ Jody Kilian, a 6-foot-5, 220-pound linebacker from Belle Plaine. Kilian was a Class 3A All-State selection, and earned All-Central Plains League honors.

"He's a big, fast kid who has his best years in front of him," Parrish said. "We think he could play defensive end or down line inside at some point."

A standout from Texas and the last player to sign with the Wildcats late Tuesday afternoon was Frank Hernandez. At 6 feet, 175 pounds, Hernandez was second in the nation during his senior year with 98 receptions good for 1,757 yards.

Sports columnist David Svoboda also contributed to this report.

K-State head football coach Stan Parrish marks the name of another recruit on a chalkboard in the footbal office. The Wildcats signed 27 high school students to the team Wednesday, the first day letters of intent could be signed.

Parrish has high hopes for future

Commentary

TOM PERRIN
Sports Columnist

Just like every other college football coach in America on national letter-of-intent signing day, K-State's Stan Parrish says he's absolutely elated with his new group of recruits.

"I don't think there's any question that it's by far the best class we've had," Parrish said. "I think time will bear that out and the others that recruited against us would verify the competitiveness of these kids."

And who knows, Parrish may have good reason to be happy. K-State went to Texas and signed 11 players from perhaps the top football state in the country. Parrish was also able to tap connections back in his home state of Ohio to sign four players and took five from Florida.

Parrish singled out two of the Ohio signees, tailback Sonny Ray Jones and punter George Matsakis as having extraordinary potential. Parrish said Jones "has a chance to be something special" and called Matsakis "an excellent one." K-State used three different punters (none successfully) during last year's 0-10-1 season. Frank Hernandez, a Texas all-stater at wide receiver, appears to be a potential star as well.

The one area where Parrish and his staff had most difficulty recruiting was in Kansas. In the past, this wouldn't have been that big of a deal because Kansas isn't known for producing a lot of major-college talent. This year, however, the Sunflower state was a recruiting hotbed. And of the top 11 recruits in the state as rated by the Topeka Capital-Journal, K-State signed just one, Smith Center running back/linebacker Brooks Barta. In all, the Wildcats signed four Kansans.

Ouch!

"Where there's good players, there's a lot of schools. What people have to understand is that every state loses 50 percent of their kids to out-of-state schools. That's not abnormal," Parrish said. " We would liked to have had (more Kansas players) and worked very hard on two or three that we didn't get.

"Perhaps if we had won a few more ballgames, it would have been different."

Indeed, selling a high-school standout on a team that finished 0-10-1 last year, has had two winning seasons in the past 25 and has been to only one bowl game in 92 years of football can be a difficult task. Recruiting against perennial top-10 schools isn't easy, either.

Four Manhattan High School players signed with NCAA Division I schools and just one of those, linebacker Scott Travis (son of Athletic Director Larry Travis) picked K-State. Offensive tackle Coby Crowl and linebacker Mike Ringgenberg are headed for Missouri while linebacker Brett Wallerstedt (brother of former K-State linebacker Matt) will attend Arizona State.

"With the kids from Manhattan, it's a catch-22. A lot of kids don't want to stay at home, I don't care who's there," Parrish said.

This year, more than any in recent memory, the big-name schools sent recruiters to Kansas. They left with a considerable haul of talent.

Arizona State also took Smith Center's Jeff Simoneau, the state's top tailback. The top fullback, Scott City's Lance Lewis (brother of former K-State fullback Rick) will attend Nebraska. Ark City linebacker Matt Gee chose Southern California while Wichita Northwest lineman Dexter Smith is headed for Florida.

In contrast with the high schools, Kansas junior colleges have long been known for producing top talent such as Nebraska's Heisman Trophy winner Mike Rozier who attended Coffeyville Community College.

However, after recruiting a load of junior-college players the past two

Colorado gets first win in Big Eight Conference

From Service Bureau and Wire Reports

The Colorado Buffaloes secured their first Big Eight Conference win of the season Wednesday night, beating the Iowa State Cyclones, 87-75, in Boulder.

The loss for the Cyclones was their fifth in a row, and drops them to 16-8 overall and 2-6 in conference play. Colorado improves 5-15 and 1-6.

In the other conference game Wednesday, Danny Manning scored 23 points and got outside shooting help from his teammates as Kansas beat Oklahoma State 78-68.

The Jayhawks, 14-8 overall and 3-4 in the conference, made all six of their 3-point shots after coming into the game averaging 24 percent from outside the stripe. Kevin Pritchard made two and finished with 20 points, while Milt Newton hit three and scored 17.

Oklahoma State dropped to 12-9 overall, 3-4 in the Big Eight.

Manning, who only had eight at the half, scored 11 in the final seven minutes as he helped the Jayhawks hold off Oklahoma State down the stretch.

The Cowboys trailed by 12 on four occasions in the second half, but rallied to twice pull within four, the final time 63-59 with 2:54 remaining.

Then Manning made a baseline jumper and Jeff Gueldner sank two free throws to make the score 67-59 with 2:12 left.

After John Starks amde two free throws, Kansas answered with five

K-State loses in last seconds

By Chase Clark
Sports Writer

For the second time in as many days, Missouri beat K-State at the free throw line in the closing seconds of the game.

The K-State women's basketball team held the lead for more than 30 minutes against the Lady Tigers Wednesday night in the Hearnes Center in Columbia, Mo. But once again they came out on the losing end, as Missouri used aggressive play on both ends of the court and hit two free throws with eight seconds left, claiming a 67-65 victory.

"We certainly competed hard," K-State coach Matilda Mossman said. "I'm disappointed we had an 11-point lead and couldn't maintain it. Our kids competed hard, though. Who would have thought we would have had an 11-point lead with seven minutes to go."

With the win, Missouri, 14-8 overall, stays in second place in the Big Eight Conference with a 6-3 mark behind Nebraska. K-State dropped to 8-14 overall and 1-8 in conference play.

Youth played a factor in the game, just as it has all season long. The starting five for K-State consisted of three freshmen and two sophomores, while Missouri placed two seniors, two juniors and a freshman on the court to start the contest.

"We had three freshmen and two sophomores on the floor," Mossman said. "We just lost our poise a little bit, had some turnovers and got a little shook and didn't do the things it took to hold the lead and win the ballgame."

Missouri was unable to get the lead in the first half, as the Lady Cats dominated the first 20 minutes of play. K-State went into the locker rooms with a nine-point lead, 36-27, at the half.

Throughout most of the second half, the Lady Cats tamed Missouri and built up a 12-point lead with under 12 minutes left in the game.

Missouri went to its bread-and-butter player, Tracy Ellis, to put points on the board and keep the Lady Tigers in the duel. An aggressive full-court press and a half-court man-to-man defense created costly K-State turnovers in the second half.

With under six minutes left, Missouri's Tonya Jorgenson tied the game, 57-57, with an outside field goal. Jorgenson scored again on Missouri's next possession to give the Lady Tigers their first lead of the game.

K-State battled back and took the lead, 62-61, with less than 2:30 remaining. Missouri's Lisa Ellis hit a basket with 30 seconds left to give the Lady Tigers a 65-64 lead.

Lady Cat Nadira Hazim went to the line and connected on one of two free throw attempts to tie the game, 65-65. But on the ensuing inbounds play, Hazim was called for a blocking foul, and Jorgenson was sent to the line for a one-and-one with six seconds left. Jorgenson hit both shots, giving Missouri a 67-65 edge.

Students take advantage of study facilities

Staff/Rob Squires

Brad Rebel, junior in accounting and finance, studies in the Durland Hall lounge Wednesday evening. The lounge is primarily for engineering students, but others find the area a quiet place to study.

Engineers not alone in Durland

By Steve Walker
Collegian Reporter

Engineering majors know all too well that good news spreads quickly.

One example is the increasing popularity of the lounge and study area in Durland Hall, where the College of Engineering is located. The lounge is supposed to be for the use of K-State's engineering majors, but non-majors may be taking advantage of the facilities at the engineering students' expense.

The lounge, which is located on the second floor of Durland Hall, is an ideal place to study, students say. It's quiet and comfortable and has couches and partitioned desks.

The primary attraction of the Durland lounge, according to students, is its convenience. Students can use it all night if they are in the building prior to the doors being locked, and the area is quiet.

Other popular study areas on campus aren't so convenient. Farrell Library closes at 11 p.m., and the Catskeller, located on the bottom floor of the Union, closes at 10:30 p.m. Although the Catskeller has snack and drink machines available, some students complain of the noise and the smoking area that is located next to it.

"Any benefits that (Farrell) Library and Catskeller have, Durland has them all," said Sean Sturrock, senior in marketing. "It's a great place for anyone to get away and study."

However, some engineering majors complain that too many non-majors are using the area.

"It's noticeable that a lot of non-majors are using Durland lounge," said Stefan Bird, senior in mechanical engineering. "You go up there and it's filled. It's really hard to find a place to study there during the day."

Jim Jurczak, junior in mechanical engineering, agreed.

"The lounge can't accommodate everyone when non-majors study there," Jurczak said. "Sometimes we go up there to meet or study and it's filled up with non-majors. We're getting taken advantage of."

Although the lounge is intended for engineering students, non-majors using the facility aren't being asked to leave. However, if too many non-majors use the lounge, the engineering department may begin monitoring it.

"No one's complained," said Betty Slemen, an administrative assistant in the engineering department. "Engineering has the best facilities on campus, so naturally (non-majors) come here."

Legislators propose kennel regulations

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Critics of a bill that would put commercial kennels under state regulation Wednesday called the proposal "hilarious" and "unworkable."

"I repeatedly hear the word 'humane,'" said Sean Gideon, representing Potagold Cattery. That word means human-like, he added.

"We are discussing livestock," he told the joint Senate and House Committee on Federal and State Affairs. "Please remember you are deciding if livestock should be treated human-like."

The bill would require the state to license and inspect all commercial cat and dog kennels and certain kennels maintained by hobby breeders. It would also require that kennels be cleaned every 24 hours.

Supporters of the measure cite the poor image Kansas has received from breeders shipping sick puppies to pet stores on the East Coast. During Tuesday's testimony, a 15-minute tape of news broadcasts from Connecticut and New York were shown in which Kansas was identified as a source of sick puppies being sold in pet shops.

"The bad image of the pet industry of Kansas was created not by a product, but rather by individuals," Gideon told the committee. "These people thrive by creating catastrophic headlines. We need to silence everyone involved in promoting a bad image for the state of Kansas."

He said the proposed law would handicap the breeding industry in Kansas, and at the same time would not ensure the health of the animals.

"In fact, there is nothing which would prohibit a producer from placing two dead animals in a kennel and shipping them to a pet shop or other final consumer," Gideon said. He called the bill hilarious.

Don Jones, president of Jones Kennels, Inc. of Netawaka, said commercial kennels are already licensed by the United States Department of Agriculture.

"We are already required to keep most of this information and I see no need to duplicate that paperwork," he said. "We do not want to put ourselves in a position to jeopardize our business due to unfounded publicity or unfounded regulations."

Berry Newell, representing Petland, Inc. which owns a chain of 150 pet stores across the country, said that USDA regulations were adequate to combat substandard kennels.

"We are, for the most part, satisfied with the quality of pets we receive from the state of Kansas," he told the committee.

He also said the bill would place undue burden on commercial breeders.

"There are things in there that are almost unworkable," he said.

Dr. David Bromwell, chief of the Bureau of Animal Welfare for Illinois, told the committee that state passed a similar law back in 1965 to ensure commericial breeders sell quality pets.

"Our regulations enhance and do not destroy their business," he said. "We make them better business people."

The only people that would be adversely affected by the bill would be those breeders whose dogs are substandard, he added.

"I despise the word puppy mills," he said, a statement that drew applause from people who opposed the bill. "I'm very much in support of good healthy commercial breeders."

Dr. Debbie Anderson, a veterinarian, held an 11-month-old puppy in her arms that had no right hip and a deformed knee.

The dog, she said, was sold by a commercial breeder in southeast Kansas as prime breeding stock.

"This puppy is an example of the quality of dog that all too often comes from our Kansas commercial breeders, and ends up in pet stores here and across the country," she told the committee in support of the bill.

Late Wednesday, the chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee issued a statement saying he doubted Blandon's allegation on the CIA reports.

"Based on information previously given to me, I have no reason to believe that there is any truth to the allegations in regard to the improper furnishing of information to Noriega," Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., said.

In testimony before the subcommittee Wednesday afternoon, a Panamanian pilot, his features hidden by a black hood, said Noriega contracted in 1982 with Colombia's Medellin narcotics cartel to protect cocaine shipments flown into Panama en route to the United States.

straight points on a free throw by Otis Livingston, a Manning slam dunk and two free throws by Pritchard.

Kansas then made six of seven free throws in the final 1:28 on four of four by Manning.

Starks led Oklahoma State with 21 points and Royce Jeffries had 17. The Cowboys' leading scorer Richard Dumas, made just one of 12 field goals and scored 11 points, five below his average.

By moving into the No. 14 spot in both the Associated Press and United Press International polls, K-State gives the Big Eight a total of five teams which have been ranked 14th or higher this season — Oklahoma, Kansas, Missouri, Iowa State, and now, the Wildcats.

It's no secret Big Eight fans love their basketball. Conference teams are averaging 11,118 people in attendance per home Big Eight game — better than 91 percent of capacity. Five teams are averaging more than 10,000 people per game — Iowa State, K-State, Kansas, Missouri and Nebraska.

Ironically, the No. 1 team in the conference, Oklahoma, averages fifth in attendance compared to arena capacity, filling just 83.5 percent of the Lloyd Noble Center for Big Eight home games. K-State ranks fourth.

The Sooners, K-State's next opponent Saturday, have plenty of good things to say about each other.

Said Harvey Grant of Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs: "He's fun. You love to go practice. You know you'll have fun. He's a helluva guy. Very humorous."

K-State's Rita Matteucci bought the ball up the court hurriedly, only to miss a 3-pointer as time was running out.

"Our kids did a good job at the end," Mossman said. "Jorgensen hit the big free throws to win the game for them. We got the shot we wanted (on our last possession), but it just didn't fall."

The Lady Cats had four players cross the double figures barrier in the game. Diana Miller led the team with 17 points. Janet Madsen scored 12 points, Hazim collected 10 points and Matteucci had 10 points.

Missouri was led on offense by Tracy Ellis with 26 points. Lisa Sandbothe netted 15 points and Lisa Ellis connected for nine points.

sy" have made men conform to act a certain way toward women, panelists said.

Other topics discussed were responsibilities men should take when they see violence against women and the role that communication and education could have in eliminating the problem.

"I think (the education) can be done during freshman orientation," Anderson said. "I think there ought to be a week-long orientation that would include this kind of information, as well as alcohol and drug abuse."

Also discussed was the age at which education on violence against women should begin. Whether it is in grade school, junior high or high school, it is an issue that needs to be addressed, panelists said.

Other members of the panel were Kevin Hochman, senior in electrical engineering; Student Body President Troy Lubbers; Philip Kirk, junior in agricultural economics; and Jim Sand, hall director of Moore Hall.

Nofziger convicted of illegal lobbying

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's onetime political director, Lyn Nofziger, was convicted Thursday of illegally lobbying top White House aides by jurors who said they had no trouble finding evidence of influence-peddling.

"The evidence just kept coming up all the time," said Towana Braxton, the foreman of the federal court jury that convicted Nofziger of three counts of illegally representing private clients at the White House within a year of his resignation from Reagan's staff in January 1982.

The jury, which deliberated about six hours, cleared Nofziger of a fourth illegal lobbying charge and acquitted his partner, Mark A. Bragg, of a single aiding and abetting allegation.

Nofziger, the first former high government official convicted under the revolving-door provisions of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, attacked the statute as a "lousy law" and compared his offense with "running a stop sign."

"I feel I am innocent. I don't think I did anything wrong," said Nofziger, 63, whose lawyers vowed to appeal the convictions.

The former White House political director, who dates his association to the president back to Reagan's days as governor of California, could receive a maximum two-year sentence and a $10,000 fine for each of three convictions.

But lawyers familiar with the case said it was unlikely the former presidential aide would be given a prison term at his sentencing, which was set for March 25 by U.S. District Judge Thomas A. Flannery.

Independent counsel James C. McKay said he found the verdict depressing because "I just hate to see someone get convicted of a felony. But we felt we had to do our job."

But McKay said "we think the jury's verdict confirms what we felt from the beginning: that we had a case to make and we made it."

The jury's verdict was announced at 11:55 a.m., nearly 90 minutes after the panel began its second day of deliberations.

Nofziger's wife, Bonnie, fought back tears as she left the courtroom.

Nofziger was convicted of appealing to then-presidential counselor Edwin Meese III in an April 8, 1982, memo for help getting Wedtech Corp. a $32 million no-bid Army contract.

House endorses salary increases

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The House Appropriations Committee on Thursday endorsed Gov. Mike Hayden's recommendations for a 4 percent cost-of-living salary increase for state classified employees.

The committee also endorsed the governor's recommended 5 percent cost-of-living salary increase for faculty at the state's six regents universities.

However, the committee went $1.7 million beyond the governor's recommendation for extra faculty salary increases under the Board of Regents' Margin of Excellence plan.

The vote on state employee salaries didn't come until after lawmakers argued over whether they should decide statewide issues such as pay increases before the whole Legislature decides what to do with a $135 million income tax windfall the state is expected to receive.

"We too often make decisions in a vacuum," said Rep. Robert Vancrum, R-Overland Park.

Rep. David Miller, R-Eudora, said the committee shouldn't make decisions on funding issues such as money to local school districts until the windfall issue is decided.

But, Rep. Jack Shriver, D-Arkansas City, said he was frustrated that lawmakers had not decided yet what to do with the windfall.

"I wish it was settled the first day of the session," Shriver said. "But we have to go on with our work."

Because committee members decided on the 4 percent increase, they will automatically use that increase when deciding how much money to build into agency and institution budgets as the total state budget is developed.

The increase for classified employees also would include an average 1.73 "step" increase for state employees. That is the increase they also receive as they move up the state's career advancement ladder.

At regents universities, committee members voted to give faculty a 5 percent base salary increase, but also voted to fund the regents' total request for $6.7 million in additional increases to all faculty.

Vehicle strikes pole, splits in half

Driver conscious, able to speak during rescue

By The Collegian Staff

Riley County Police officers are investigating a single-vehicle accident in the 6800 block of Anderson Avenue, approximately six and one-half miles west of Manhattan, in which a car was split in half when it struck a wooden utility pole broadside.

The car, a late-model Ford Mustang, was headed west on Anderson when it struck the pole on the driver's side, cutting the car in half. The back end of the vehicle landed in a field on the north side of the road. The front half of the car stopped in the front yard of a home at 6863 Anderson Ave.

Police said the driver of the car was conscious and able to tell them that he was alone in the vehicle at the time of the accident.

Firefighters were called to pry the driver out of the vehicle.

The driver's identity and condition have not been released.

School's enrollment not damaging

By Chris Wilhelm
Collegian Reporter

Despite a decrease in the Graduate School's enrollment during the past year, administrators are not expecting any major setbacks for the University.

"I think there are 30 to 40 fewer (on-campus) graduate students this year as opposed to last year, but the overall decline of (graduate) students is not a tremendous loss," said R.F. Kruh, dean of the Graduate School.

The school's 1986 fall enrollment was 3,423. That number dropped by 278 students to 3,145 in the fall semester of 1987.

The largest percentage of the drop was due to the reduced number of students taking graduate courses off campus, Kruh said. That number dropped from 911 in 1986 to 691 in 1987.

"We often have fluctuations in the number of graduate students," he said. "I don't believe this drop in enrollment is any kind of continuing trend."

About 2,400 of the graduate students live on campus, Kruh said. The remaining students live off campus and usually have full-time jobs.

The additional responsibilities of living off campus often restrict them from continuing their education, he said.

"There are always fluctuations. (Fluctuations) are hard to predict and even harder to explain. The numbers are down for this year, but they could be up 50 or 60 next year.

"With many of our graduate students throughout the state employed on a full-time basis, many of them are finding that they can't continue toward their graduate degrees at this time. Students who might have been able to take one or two night courses are, for various reasons, not being able to do so," Kruh said.

Agencies continue to pay support fee

By Chad L. Sanborn
Staff Writer

Last year at this time, Gov. Mike Hayden had just announced a 3.5 percent state-wide budget cut. K-State administrators, burdened with already low money reserves, found themselves in need of funds.

The administration asked seven on-campus agencies to pay the University an institutional support fee in order to help alleviate money shortages. However, the request did not sit well with the agency directors.

Although the University assessed the fee in order to pay for services it provides to the agencies, the agency directors claimed the fee was unfair because they provide services to the University.

Furthermore, the directors claimed they were not allowed to budget for the fee, thus making it inappropriate.

The fee is collected from the K-State Housing Department, Lafene Student Health Center, Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, Student Publications Inc., the Union, the Kansas Artificial Breeding Service Unit and parking permit revenues collected by K-State Police.

Each agency must pay 3 percent of its non-exempt income. Agencies which receive student fee money and interest income do not pay the support fee on that portion of their income. If the agency pays for its own utilities, such as in the Union's case, then the fee is 1.5 percent of its non-exempt income.

On the most recent payment, occurring near the end of October 1987, the seven agencies paid almost $190,000, according to vouchers made to the Office of Administration and Finance by the agencies.

Tom Schellhardt, assistant vice president for administration and finance, said the administration patterned the fee after the 3 percent charge on all research grants. The charge helps pay auxiliary costs, such as utilities, custodial services, personnel and payroll.

Though the University provides these and other services to the agencies, the agency directors said their relationship with the University works both ways.

Dave Adams, director of Student Publications Inc. and associate professor of journalism and mass communications, cited high school journalism contests and campus directories as two of several services the agency provides the University.

Agency paying the fee	Amount this payment
Student Publications, Inc.	$ 7,300
Lafene Student Health Center	14,200
Department of Housing	92,000
KSU Police (Parking)	7,600
Dept. of Intercollegiate Athletics	17,000
K-State Union	40,300
Kansas Artificial Breeding Service Unit	9,602

Staff/Elton Mayfield

From the last fee payment, $127,500 went for various unexpected costs:

- According to Schellhardt and bank records, $17,000 went to the debate team, which found itself short of traveling funds last fall.
- The KSU Childcare Cooperative, now under the direction of the housing department, received $5,000 to help pay debts it incurred before the department began managing it.
- The largest amount, $100,000, went to maintain the computers available to students, including those in Fairchild and Cardwell Halls.
- The recent Martin Luther King Jr. week festivities cost the University $5,500.
- Finally, $45,000 from the upcoming fee payment is budgeted to help pay for the processing of National Direct Student Loans.

The federal government used to pay for processing the loans, but now the University has to pick up the tab, Schellhardt said.

President Jon Wefald makes the final decision on which programs will receive money from the fee, much like with any other budget decision, said George Miller, vice president for administration and finance. After receiving recommendations from his staff, Wefald assigns funds according to priority and need.

Because both sides agree services are exchanged, the administration

Shamir opposes U.S. peace plan

JERUSALEM — Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir opposes two key elements of a U.S. peace initiative and is preparing alternative proposals he will present in Washington next month, Shamir aides said Thursday.

U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz telephoned Shamir and Foreign Minister Shimon Peres to say he will visit the Middle East after his scheduled Feb. 21-23 visit to Moscow, Israel television reported.

The American peace plan calls for an international conference in April to launch talks on an interim solution in the Israeli-occupied territories based on Palestinian self-rule. Negotiations on a final settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict would begin in December, regardless of the outcome of the autonomy talks.

Shamir opposes an international conference and rejects the proposed timetable for the talks, said Yossi Ben Aharon, director general in the prime minister's office, in an interview with Israel radio.

Ben Aharon said the timetable could render the talks meaningless because the parties would know that whatever they decided could be reconsidered as soon as discussions on a final settlement began.

Instead, Shamir wants Palestinian automomy to be implemented gradually, said the newspaper Yediot Ahronot.

Haig to drop out, support Dole

CONCORD, N.H. — Former Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., who received less than 1 percent of the vote in the Iowa precinct caucuses and is running last in polls in New Hampshire, plans to drop out of the race and endorse Sen. Bob Dole, published reports said today.

Haig has called a news conference today to discuss the future of his presidential campaign, but the manager of his campaign for the Republican nomination for president, Brian Sweeney, refused to comment on whether Haig would be dropping out.

However, The Washington Post and the Dallas Times Herald reported in today's editions that Haig would announce that he was dropping out and endorsing Dole of Kansas, who won the Iowa caucuses on Monday and whose campaign was showing strength in New Hampshire, which holds a primary Tuesday.

The Post cited an unidentified "well-informed Republican source" for the information, while the Times Herald attributed its story to an unidentified "leading Dole operative."

Youth wounds school officials

PINELLAS PARK, Fla. — A 15-year-old high school student opened fire Thursday during a confrontation with school officials in a cafeteria, wounding two administrators, one critically, and a teacher, police said. The youth and a companion were in custody.

The shootout occurred at Pinellas Park High School after the school officials scuffled with the boy and his 15-year-old companion. Both were armed with .38-caliber revolvers that police say they had taken in a burglary.

One of the students had been suspended Wednesday for cursing a teacher, police said.

Police shot one of the youths in the leg as he tried to flee the school, and the second was arrested about an hour later at a residence, authorities said. Both were being held on charges of attempted murder and burglary. It was not immediately clear if the youth who allegedly shot the three in the cafeteria was the same one who exchanged shots with police.

During the altercation, assistant principal Richard Allen was shot in the head; assistant principal Nancy Blackwelder, who had signed the suspension order, was shot in the abdomen; and teacher Joseph Bloznalis, who tried to subdue the teens, was shot in the leg.

'Secret' material goes public

WASHINGTON — The FBI assigned a "secret" classification to material circulated publicly by a conservative group, and sent it to more than 30 field offices in an investigation of opponents of Reagan administration Central America policies, according to an FBI document and interviews.

The conservative group aide who compiled the information said Thursday he found it "somewhat humorous" that the material was classified, and "became part of a major investigation."

The aide, Mike Boos of the Young America's Foundation of Reston, Va., said he sent the same material to about 500 conservative individuals and organizations in the Washington area, and published it in a conservative newsletter, The American Sentinel.

Excitement slows rats' aging

WASHINGTON — A little excitement in infancy can lead to a sharper mind and clearer thinking in old age, according to a group of researchers studying the effects of aging on the brains of laboratory rats.

Robert M. Sapolsky, a Stanford University researcher, said he and a group of Canadian scientists found that giving just minimal handling to infant rats imprinted a hormonal response that led eventually to a smaller loss of learning ability and memory when the rats reached old age.

"This is currently a rat story and it's not clear if this is a human story, but that is what we're working on," said Sapolsky.

He said the scientists conducted the experiment using two groups of infant rats. One group was taken from their cages and placed in a bed of wood shavings for a brief time. The other group was left in their cages and received no handling.

Later, the two groups were put through a maze to test their ability to think and learn.

After 2½ years, said Sapolsky, the tests showed the rats that had received the additional stimulation of being handled early in life were clearly able to think and learn more quickly than the rats that weren't handled.

Prompt help may reduce rape trauma

By Victoria Ohmacht
Collegian Reporter

The trauma of rape can be lessened if women receive prompt medical, legal and psychological help from friends as well as professionals, three local experts said Thursday at a discussion that was part of the "Susan B. Anthony Awareness Week."

Victims who receive early attention can eventually consider the trauma as "an incident in your whole life, and not your whole life," said Dorinda Lambert of the Counseling Center. Dr. Paula Davis of Lafene Student Health Center and Kris Kelderman-Hedke, Riley County victim assistance coordinator, also spoke.

Lambert said rape victims can suffer from a post-traumatic stress reaction much like Vietnam veterans. Veterans may flash back to a combat situation if they hear a helicopter fly overhead, Lambert said.

"A man can come up behind them or simply touch them on the shoulder, and it will trigger a reaction" that brings back the trauma, she said.

Friends can help victims by being aware of their own feelings about rape and reassuring victims "that they are going to be OK, and that people still care," Lambert said.

"You have to be able to listen in an active way and listen without being judgmental," she said. For example, asking the victim for details about the rape can make the woman defensive, as well as adding to feelings of guilt and shame that may already exist.

Victims should also be encouraged to have a medical exam as soon as possible, Davis said.

"The sooner the better, but if it's late, it's never too late," Davis said. In addition to treating injuries, tests for pregnancy and disease are conducted.

Within 72 hours of the rape, a "morning-after pill" can lessen the chances of an unwanted pregnancy, she said. Side effects of this pill are similar to birth control pills.

The medical exam "can seem threatening, and this is the time to have a good friend or advocate with you," Davis said.

Riley County victim assistants provide services as soon as possible after the assault, said Kelderman-Hedke.

Rape victims should be called "survivors," she said.

"We concentrate on the positive aspects ... that now they have control over their lives again, that they are safe, and we start from there," she said.

Kelderman-Hedke acts as a liaison between the victim and officials from the county and law enforcement, as well as helping with angry family members who blame themselves for the incident.

"(The victim) often feels responsible for family members' anger at not being able to protect her," Kelderman-Hedke said. Encouraging women to seek professional therapy is a main goal of her work, she added.

Opinions vary on adding Washburn to state system

By Chad L. Sanbom
Staff Writer

Last month, Gov. Mike Hayden recommended the Kansas Legislature increase funding for Washburn University for 1988-89, and that the money be disbursed through the state Board of Regents.

Washburn, located in Topeka, is the last American city university funded primarily by tuition and city property taxes. It is under the direction of the Kansas Board of Education.

Getting Washburn into the regents system was one of the promises Hayden made during his campaign for governor in 1986, and his recommendation is seen by some as a step toward fulfilling that promise.

The Legislature is now considering a bill which would increase funding to Washburn by 5 percent in a grant administered through the regents. In the past, the Legislature has funded the university directly by matching its credit/hour income.

Kathy Peterson, spokeswoman for Hayden's office, said that although the governor has no definite agenda for getting Washburn into the regents system, he still wants them included eventually.

"I think the governor fundamentally believes that (Washburn) should be brought into the state system," she said. "He wants to replace what is considered by many to be an out-of-date system of a municipal university and put it under the state."

However, leaders of universities already in the state system are worried the addition of Washburn would only make an already bad financial situation worse.

In light of what they considered less-than-adequate funding from the state, the regents put together a three-year plan requesting additional money to increase faculty salaries, upgrade university buildings and enhance other academic programs.

The plan is called the Margin of Excellence.

Rep. Bill Bunten, R-Topeka, a major supporter of including Washburn in the state system, dismisses the idea that the addition of Washburn would mean less funding for the other universites as "ludicrous."

"I reject that argument," he said. "It is not the kind of thinking you would expect from the intelligentsia centered in our universities. It is not a very in-depth look at the situation."

Charles Reagan, assistant to K-State President Jon Wefald, said the administration has not really discussed the issues surrounding Washburn's inclusion in the regents system.

Bunten, who calls the addition "a positive thing for higher education in this state," said the people against the move are making the assumption that the legislature funds the schools from a base pool of money rather than an ever-increasing pool.

"Look at the amount of money we (the Legislature) appropriate for universities. It grows every year. If we fund them from a base pool, then why are we considering giving them $41 million more this year?" he said, referring to the Margin of Excellence plan.

Bunten claims the other regents universities would actually benefit from Washburn's inclusion because its district has 10 representatives and three senators in the Legislature.

As evidence, he pointed to the community colleges which are also managed by the board of education.

"There is a dichotomy. The community colleges want to be associated with Washburn. The universities should recognize what 10 representative and 3 senators — a number of those who vigorously support higher education — add up to."

Bunten said the grant also provides that students from counties other than Shawnee County may attend Washburn without paying out-of-district fees, as they are now required to do.

Both Bunten and Peterson dismiss the idea that adding Washburn to the state system will lower Topeka property takes.

In fact, Bunten said, the bill which would make the grant a reality was written so there would be no Topeka property tax abatement.

K-State missed due to risk

By The Collegian Staff

K-State was apparently left out of the limelight from the miniseries "Windmills of the Gods" because a former instructor and graduate student employed by the University had the same name as the lead character in the miniseries.

An insurance holding company recommended to CBS that it change the name of the university after finding out there actually had been a Mary Ashley employed as an instructor by K-State, said John Fairman, assistant vice president for University relations.

The company provides insurance coverage for productions and researches them to uncover any circumstances such as this, he said.

In the movie, Mary Ashley, portrayed by Jaclyn Smith, is a political science teacher at the University of Kansas. In the Sidney Sheldon book of the same name, she was employed at K-State. Last summer, Sheldon visited K-State, Manhattan and Junction City, where Ashley was supposed to have lived, to research his book.

The real Mary Ashley was a graduate student in architecture and employed as a graduate teaching assistant in the Department of Architecture, said Robert Burnham, head of the architecture department.

He said he believes she is now working in South Dakota.

Different sources connected with the miniseries gave conflicting accounts as to who ordered the name change.

A CBS spokesperson said it would have come either from the production company or K-State. Producer Michael Viner said it came from the network, but Sheldon said it was either the decision of Viner or director Lee Phillips.

Fairman said he talked to Viner on Thursday and found out the reason for the name change.

License plates no place to show school spirit

There is currently a bill before the Transportation and Utilities Committee that would allow the members of alumni organizations from any of the public or private post-secondary schools in Kansas to buy a specialized license tag promoting their school.

Senate Majority Leader Bud Burke, who is one of the sponsors of the bill, said he has heard from many alumni who want the plates.

"It's a great opportunity to brag about our universities," he said. And B.J. Pattee, director for special projects for the University of Kansas Alumni Association, has said the plates would be a good recruitment tool and a way for Kansans to show their support for higher education.

Could this be one of those few bills that everyone likes, nobody hates and has no hidden drawbacks?

No.

On Jan. 1 of this year, Kansas switched to the "SAM-123" license plate system to simplify license tags. Now imagine being a Highway Patrol officer and the dismay you would feel when, just two months after simplifing license plates, the Senate starts work on a bill that would allow any or all of the nearly 400 post-secondary schools in Kansas to have their special plates.

Concerning the alumni plates, Secretary of Revenue Harley Duncan said, "I think this is a step backward." And Lt. Bill Jacobs of the Kansas Highway Patrol has said that officers have enough trouble distinguishing letters of regular license plates and that adding different types of plates would only make identification more difficult.

And here we come to a critical point. What are licence plates for anyway? The answer to that question is to identify the vehicle it's attached to.

And a law that could create some 400 different types of plates is not going to make identification any easier.

The purpose of a license plate is to identify the car and not to advertise your favorite university. Loyal alumni wishing to display their support on their cars should try bumper stickers. And if that's not enough, they can have their car painted in school colors.

But the license plate is and should remain for identification purposes only.

Despite biases, history is vital to teach, learn

Introduction to Western Civilization, Modern Era, Introductory Western Heritage, Rise of Europe: No matter what the school calls it, the course is always similar.

And always required for graduation.

The typical course starts somewhere between the first of the greek philosophers and the last of the Middle Ages, and ends — depending on the windiness of the professor — sometime between the beginning of the industrial revolution and the end of World War I.

To some it is boring, a required course whose relevance will cease immediately after the final. To others it is fascinating and will affect the way they look at Western society for a lifetime. To most, its influence lies between the extremes.

Whatever the impact, the information is relevant to modern Americans.

Currently, the administration of Stanford University is considering dropping its Western Civilization course as a condition for graduation.

Opponents of the class point to its emphasis on male dominated, anglo-saxon culture. They contend the course teaches a bias towards women and minorities because it never relates their accomplishments to Western society.

According to these critics, the whole requirement should be eliminated.

They are correct in criticizing some courses' narrow focus on white, protestant men. They are wrong in wanting to eliminate the class.

Like it or not, the male-dominated society is our predecessor. Discontinuing to teach this will not change history. In fact, those who do not study history risk repeating it.

The best change in the study of Western heritage, would be to supplement the facts, dates and names with hows and whys.

How did the white society enslave and destroy the African and American Indian societies? How does it still continue to do so? Why are women so feared by men that have not been allowed to compete freely with men until very recently?

Pretty or otherwise, our heritage is our heritage. As a society we must first learn why we have made mistakes before we can begin to correct them.

Racist symbol flies over capitol

If you think racism is dead, you are dead wrong. If you think conscience-minded people have forgotten about the Confederate battle flag flying over Oklahoma's capitol building, you delude yourself. Some insist the flag should fly because of its historical value. ...The flag would lose none of its historical value if it were relegated to a museum. At least there it would not be rubbed in the faces of those who suffered so much at the hands of the men and women who waved it.

Setting record straight

Those white lies can be haunting

Commentary

RIZWAN MITHANI
Collegian Columnist

Those souls who have been following all my columns with a religious fervor would not have missed noticing the mention of a certain J.R. Harper in three out of my four columns published yet. He was deliberately excluded in last week's column.

It all started as a big joke in my mind. I thought I would make Collegian readers wonder as to who this J.R. Harper was — someone who had something witty to say about almost every topic on which I chose to write. Also, I thought most readers would see through the prank after a few weeks.

Hold your breath: The fact is J.R. Harper is my roommate! The quotes attributed to him are of my own invention. In fact the closest he has come to writing anything is term papers on obscure subjects like "Lychees."

Like many budding writers, I made the mistake of beginning my career by making up stories. Most people belonging to the species of budding writers tend to have a natural gift for exaggeration. This habit grows if it is nourished complacently and sympathetically. But as a rule (with certain exceptions like Max Schulman and Mark Twain, which nevertheless prove the rule) it results in nothing. For one cannot create something out of nothing — Confucians disagree with this philosophy, as they believe if we create from something, we are only changing something.

I have been saved from stumbling into this pitfall. My special friend, (whose identity I choose to keep anonymous), pointed out tome I was indulging in telling blatant lies, even though it was in the name of fun. Also, I know of at least one person who is referring to my column for her composition class. I did not realize that what I write is everybody's business.

I realize that it is unethical to deliberately mislead people by what one writes. Most readers tend to place great faith in the printed word. Have not you heard yourself uttering, "It is true. I read it in such and such place." This I realize is dangerous because the printed word is written by ordinary down-to-earth people like you and me. The writers of the printed word are likely to falter, either unknowingly or by design.

What is truth today? "Truth" and "falseness" no longer have absolute meanings. They are relative terms. You hear everyone using phrases like "more true" and "less true." A truth ceases to be true if the majority does not believe in it. I used to think (and possibly correctly) that either something was true or it was not true. Today, to realize veracity you have to suffer myriad mendaciousness.

How to define absolute truth is beyond the scope of my discussion. But something is not necessarily true because men lay down their lives for it. Millions have died in Iran for a mistaken cause. Their leader the Ayatollah Khomeini has succeeded in fooling some people all the time. In fact he fooled all the people for some time. But never will he be able to fool all of the people all the time.

Truth is always difficult. This sometimes makes life tedious. If you tell the truth, you are sure to be found out, sooner or later. Being frank is not the most comfortable thing to be. The trouble it can get you into increases three-fold, if you are someone who observes a lot by watching and hears a lot by listening. Most people do not like to hear the truth about themselves.

It is not my intention to ordain that you should always speak the truth. For a truth that is spoken with malicious intent is worse then all the white lies you can invent. It is also stupid to washyour own dirty linen in public — you would rather keep quiet.

Mark Twain said: "Truth is the most valuable thing we have. Let us economize it." With due reverance to the departed soul, I beg to differ. In fact, would you believe much in somebody who wrote under a pseudonym instead of his real name Samuel Clemens? Well, Sam fell into a trap by trying to completely analogize money and truth. But truth is more like happiness. Your happiness increases by sharing it. Similarly, truth's value increases by spending it. If you bury truth, it would develop into a plant from its seed — one is bound to find out the truth sometime.

The above discussion makes it sound like I had committed a grave crime. No — except for the innocent prank, to the best of my knowledge, I have tried to represent facts truly. Of course, most of it is opinion and you may disagree with it, since opinions are subjective and are based on a person's past experiences, present feelings and future expectations.

I believe it is not too late to make a New Year's resolution. In the future, I resolve to write the truth, and to the best of my knowledge, nothing but the truth.

U.S. mentality allows fascination with guns to continue unbridled

Commentary

DERON JOHNSON
Editorial Page Editor

The shotgun blasts did not immediately startle me. That, I would realize later, was startling in itself.

It was a recent morning when I was walking to class — you know, one of those days when I had slept too late and realized that to attempt to find a parking spot on campus would only make the day start off wrong.

Anyway, I was within a block of campus when I heard it: a trio of what sounded like shotgun blasts piercing the crisp air. I had walked a few steps before I realized what I'd heard; I don't know on what to blame the delay — maybe it was the morning fatigue that had not yet surrendered to the day's agenda.

However, I think it was more than that. I suspect it was my conditioning that told me such sounds are normal. I also suspect it was my conditioning that prompted me to second-guess what I had heard. After all, cars that backfire sound like shotgun blasts. Even three backfires in quick succession was a possibility, wasn't it? However, there was only one problem with this reasoning: There were no cars in the immediate area.

Before my mind allowed the sounds to fade to the recesses of my memory, another thought arose: What if it were shotgun blasts? And what if people were dying even as I debated the reality of what I had heard? Would I treat it with the seriousness it warranted? Or would I ignore it and hope that my rationalizations would win out?

I immediately started thinking about Manhattan and the small-town, wholesome nature it embodies, thinking that the kind of thing I was imagining couldn't possible happen here. And then I mentally scolded myself for being so naive, at the same time remembering recent mass murders, including those in Arkansas, Iowa and Wichita during winter break.

Specifically, however, I remembered the grisly incident from Kansas City, Kan., last fall when a toddler and her pet dog survived for two to three weeks while the girl's mother, father and sister lay dead nearby. I remembered in detail the neighbor who told a reporter about hearing the gun shots: "In this neighborhood, we hear things like that all the time."

Well, in my neighborhood — and Manhattan in general — we don't hear things like that all the time. So why wasn't I taken aback when I heard the shots? I think part of it has to do with our society being so fascinated and infiltrated with guns, both in real life and fantasy.

Now, before all the National Rifle Association members pick up the phone to tell me the merits of guns and the freedom to own firearms, save it. Gun control is one of those issues on which I am not particularly impassioned. Yes, it is undeniable that guns are directly responsible for untold numbers of deaths each year, but I'm not wholly convinced that gun control could or would solve this national tragedy. In fact, I'm not convinced that anything short of an overhaul in our society's mentality could work.

But back to the matter at hand. I think we are so used to seeing guns, hearing guns and reading about murders committed with guns that we readily accept them as the societal element they have become. But what about places like Britain, where officers are not issued guns except in special instances? And even then, they must account for every bullet used.

How would most Britons react to three shotgun blasts in an otherwise peaceful neighborhood? Probably with horror, as should all of the world's residents. But America is a nation unlike most others in its preoccupation with guns.

Just think about our attitude toward firearms: We give guns to our children, whose fascination with G.I. Joe has made the "action figure" among the best-sellers every Christmas. We make the gun-wielding and virtually brain-dead Rambo among the most popular characters in modern-day cinema. We manufacture and buy plastic toy guns that look so much like the real thing that officers have shot at — and sometimes killed — those pointing them. And we kill thousands of our own every year with guns.

But I suppose what our society does is its own business. After all, this is America.

Incidentally, I did call the Riley County Police Department, which dispatched officers to the area I heard the shots.

And once again, Manhattan got lucky.

Making sense

Editor,

Re: Catherine Doud's "Language quickly losing clarity, sense" in the Jan. 28 Collegian.

Some other English Composition instructors and me was wanting to say something in defending of Miss Doud's statements of what she said about us and what she meant by mixing us up in the Iran-Contra scandal and Orwellian Newspeak in such a manner as that we thought was incoherent, conflicting and problematic in focus.

Furthermore, we maintain today's society and is multi-faceted and thus reflects as such in its entirety and oral and written expression. In conclusion, we ask, as far as inseminating disinformation, we declare and disclaim our false designations as "Gods," since some of us are women and are therefore "Goddesses," we wonder and maintain?

In addition to, we want to assure the University community of the Kansas State University campus that we are committed to and do ordain and establish to ourselves and our posterity, that we are doing the best of our jobs that we can manage to maintain to teach the students in our courses the best to write and thus communicate in a fashion that is an understandable way to comprehend.

Signed, with sincere dignity and apprehension,

Progressive view

Editor,

In the Collegian's editorial on Feb. 2, which matter-of-factly accepted the demise of K-State's Air Force ROTC program, the Collegian emphasized that "the military is a business."

That is a very progressive, if not radical, statement for the editorial board to present to the public. For the sake of the public's education, I hope the Collegian will attempt to further clarify its unelaborated (and probably unconscious) logic.

We all know that every business must make a profit. So, what are the profits of the expensive U.S. military presence and interventions around the world?

Might the intangible profits be diminished expenses for the labor and natural resources of other, primarily underdeveloped, countries? Are the visible benefits things like cheap beef for fast food and TV dinners, cheap coffee for our mornings, bauxite, bananas, diamonds, oil, sugar?

Are the federal deficit and the trade deficit, which were cited in a prior news article as causing the closing of the AFROTC program, indicative of non-profitable federal overspending on the military?

Please, editorial board, elaborate your seemingly progressive views.

Evil motives

Editor,

Re: the editorial "Danforth amendment dangerous for nation" in the Feb. 5 Collegian.

Gee, Collegian, thanks for opening my eyes to the evil motives of senators John Danforth, Kit Bond, Robert Dole and Nancy Kassebaum. I had no idea that our area's most respected government leaders were so malicious.

"People like Danforth should quit using legislative maneuvers to skirt issues they find objectionable." Boy, can you imagine where this country would be if people ever used legislation to change things they disapproved of?!?!

As you menticned, Title IX states that any institution receiving federal money could not discriminate on the basis of sex, race or handicap. It's sad and disgusting that the most handicapped, unborn children must lay down their lives for so-called equal rights.

And what about the rights of ethical physicians and nurses who are forced by their government to kill innocent infants just because thats where the money's coming from? Frankly, I'm nauseated to think that some of my own money is being used for unnecessary abortions. What about my equal rights?

I applaud the legislators who supported this amendment. It's reassuring to know that some of our governmental leaders still have morals. I'm sorry you don't like it, Collegian.

Black and white

Editor,

This letter is in response to Daphne Ulveling's letter on Feb. 1. Although many of Brent Windsor's "inadequacies" of Lafene were poor or unfounded, he still has a right to express his opinion within limits. Your "defense of Lafene" was to destroy his "offense," which won't get you through law school.

Lafene has been known to make mistakes in handling, diagnosis and treatment of students' injuries. Myself and other people have experienced that as fact. One interesting case was when a 22-year-old was diagnosed as having Osgood Slaughters, a disorder of the knees. He has tendonitis.

Lafene, however, has some excellent personnnel. Three that must be mentioned are Dr. Smith, Dr. Moeller and Bob.

Ms. Ulveling, Mr. Windsor has every right to express his views. Your letter to the editor has only proved that two people can write pointless, unsubstantiated letters about the same subject. Nothing is black and white.

Who's snoozing?

Editor,

What's the scoop? This year the paper made a welcome addition to the paper: the TV listings. Now if only it was slightly accurate.

Often the same column is printed twice, as if the exact same programming is offered on two networks at the same time. After awhile, I accepted this as a fact of life and continued on. Then in Tuesday's paper, the TV listing was for Monday. It doesn't take a journalism major to know that isn't timely information. I figure by the end of the semester it will be a month behind if someone doesn't wake up.

So what's the scoop? Who has been sleeping on the job?

Police pressure

Editor,

This letter is in response to the activity of the K-State police due to the alleged reporting/non-reporting of a rape on campus.

I find it intcresting that a K-State policeman would take time out of his busy schedule to hassle someone who exercised her constitutional right of freedom of expression. Why was Lt. Tubach so angry? This was not a story in the Collegian; it was a letter to the EDITOR appearing on the EDITORIAL page. I don't know about anyone else, but I did not read it as a factual story. While I am not doubting the word of Ms. DeShane, I simply don't believe that Tubach was justified in confronting her at her place of employment as a representative of K-State police.

If he does not agree with her opinion, he is free to write his own letter in response. As I see it, he (and since he was acting as a K-State police officer, so was the K-State police) was trying to intimidate DeShane into revealing her source at the Riley County Police Department so he could go and intimidate them.

Since Lt. Tubach is a member of the police force, he undoubtedly has access to records of the kind that are in question. In fact, a letter written by him or the K-State police would probably have had more credibility as they have access to the records and DeShane does not, at least directly. However, HIS actions tend to undermine THEIR credibility, and any such letter now would probably be fruitless. Furthermore, RCPD Lt. Scott Campbell told the Collegian that while he was "unable to find any such report, he could not be positive that none had been filed."

Therefore, we do not know if DeShane's source was correct or not, and presumably neither does Tubach. Why didn't Tubach go to the RCPD and demand to know why they could not prove that no such report had been filed? Perhaps Tubach was trying to find the source of DeShane's information to aid the RCPD track down the whereabouts of the report, if indeed it exists. If so, then an honest attitude would have been more congenial, if not more professional, than a confrontational one.

I think an article explaining the police department's policy on matters of this nature is long overdue. Perhaps there is a valid reason why crimes of this sort are not reported in a "Police Blotter" of some kind. Tubach claimed that DeShane was "inciting hysteria." I disagree. Perhaps awareness, rather than hysteria, would be the result.

In any case, at the very least Lt. Tubach acted in an unprofessional manner and should apologize to DeShane. By the way, these are my opinions, not the official opinions of the K-State physics department or the graduate school.

On tenure policies

Editor,

Re: The editorial "Procedure for tenure stresses wrong areas" in Tuesday's Collegian.

While I agree with the content of the editorial, I'm afraid there is a major disagreement or misunderstanding between University administrators and most "common folks" as to what the primary function of a University really is. If a poll-taker were to stand on a street corner and ask passersby such as your and my parents, college students, etc., just what they think the primary function of a University is, most would surely answer "teaching." But if the same poll-taker were to ask University administrators, the answer would most likely be "research."

Why do I say this? Speaking from my own experience in the Department of Computer Science, research-oriented faculty automatically receive better numerical ratings in the annual evaluation process than do teaching faculty. For example, let Reach and Teach represent two CS faculty members, where Teach teaches five courses per academic year and Reach teaches but two. According to standard departmental policy, they probably have the following time allocations:

- Departmental duties: Teach 10 percent, Reach 10 percent;
- Research time: Teach 20 percent, Reach 70 percent;
- Teaching time: Teach 70 percent, Reach 20 percent;

Assume they are both ranked "satisfactory" in EVERY category listed on the COMPUTER SCIENCE FACULTY EVALUATION form. Their respective numberical "grades" will be 8.4 (Teach) and 9.4 (Reach)! Thus, Reach automatically receives a higher score than Teach for doing the same "satisfactory" work. (Incidentally, the maximum score is 10.)

Who is more likely to get tenure?

associate professor of computer science

Refreshing change

Editor,

This letter is written in support of the theme concept used to celebrate Susan B. Anthony Week. Though I appreciate the intent of the editorial in Thursday's Collegian, I do not find the selection of "Violence — Breaking the Cycle" inappropriate. Violence against women is a topic that pervades all of our lives, in the work place, in our homes and in our hearts and minds. I am confident that Susan B. Anthony would be supportive of the process of naming and confronting issues squarely and thoroughly. This is a positive process and involves both men and women in sincere collaboration.

In the past Susan B. Anthony Week has been celebrated much as the Collegian suggests. These activities have been well-done and worthwhile. But the idea of selecting a different theme to highlight in-depth each year I find more exciting. We exist in a television age where a lead line often constitutes a story — mini-coverage on mega-issues. Since this is so prevalent, I find it a refreshing and educational choice to focus as thoroughly as possible on one theme each year. I congratulate the Women's Resource Center on this constructive idea and on a successful and informative week of programming.

Disgusting fans

Editor,

The overtime win against Iowa State Feb. 3 was very exciting, but I find myself disgusted with fan behavior. I was appalled when the crowd cheered because Ron Meyer was being taken out of the game. I am not criticizing their right to dislike a player, but he is a member of the K-State basketball team and therefore should at least receive a little respect from the crowd.

Lon Kruger obviously feels he plays well enough to make the team. If you are going to support part of the team, you should support all of it. The behavior at the game is something I would expect of KU fans, not those at K-State.

Parental ties maturing

Iowa State researches relatives

By Brian Hummell
Collegian Reporter

A study conducted by Iowa State University shows that both aging parents and their adult children believe their relationship is a strong one.

"We should try to help nurture and support that relationship in any way we can," said Joyce Mercier, professor of family environment at Iowa State.

Mercier, one of the two members who conducted the study, presented some of its findings in a seminar conducted Thursday as part of the Center For Aging seminar series.

Mercier focused her comments on interaction patterns, quality of the relationship, and filial responsibility and expectations in the parent-child relationship.

The study sample consisted of more than 200 Iowa residents who were 60 years of age and older, and lived in independent housing. The respondents came from 26 counties, with a response rate of 72 percent.

The study also examined housing options available to older individuals and their housing preferences. It also made recommendations to professionals who deal with older individuals.

Mercier said the study shows a predominantly favorable response in the areas of interaction — resident visitation, face-to-face contact and telephone communication — and the quality of the relationship.

Responses differed the most when it concerned children's responsibility to their parents.

"Children have higher expectations of themselves than their parents have," said Mercier. "The feelings of responsibility increase as the parent ages."

Of the children polled, 85 percent feel responsible for caring for their parents when ill, 92 percent feel responsible for providing financial help and 75 percent feel responsible for returning sacrifices their parents made for them. However, the number of parents who expect this treatment is about 30 percent lower in each category.

"Guilt and anxiety felt by the children because of their physical distance from their parents is the probable cause of the child feeling a greater responsibility than the parent expects," Mercier said.

Mercier cited a second study which showed older parents would rather live in a nursing home than live with their children. This is because the older parent feels like a burden to the child, she said.

K-State players perform 'To Gillian' in-the-round

By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reporter

It is a little spot of summer in the middle of a Kansas blizzard.

It is the K-State Players presentation of "To Gillian on Her 37th Birthday" which was presented Thursday at 8 p.m. The play will also be performed at 8 tonight, Saturday, and Feb. 17-20 at Nichols Theatre.

Set during the hot summer months, the show focuses on the life of David, a reclusive college professor who is learning to cope with the death of his wife, Gillian. His friends and family are gathering at his Long Island beach house to help him cope during the day that will not only mark her 37th birthday, but also the second anniversary of her accidental death.

"This is not a depressing play. It's not about death, it's really about life. It's about the affection that may get lost between people, but then resurfaces, and struggles to come out and make it worthwhile," said Kate Anderson, associate professor of theater and director of the play.

One of the interesting features of "To Gillian" is the audience's position in relation to the stage. The construction of Nichols Theatre, which normally places the audience on three sides, allows for another section of seats to be arranged on the fourth side. Thus, the audience totally surrounds the stage, in what is called theater-in-the-round.

"Because of the cyclical nature of life, I felt it would be truer to the play to have it in 'the round,'" Anderson said.

"Every time the actors turn their back on the traditional front, they are facing forward to three-quarters of the audience. On a metaphysical level, that is interesting — the idea that when you turn your back on one side, you open up a new possibility on the other."

The design of the set is simple. A majority of the action happens on David's oceanside patio, which consists of a large wooden deck, a long staircase and a back porch. It provides both visual appeal and visibility for the audience. The emphasis is placed on the actors and their movements.

"When you do a (normal proscenium production), you have to have some sort of backdrop," Anderson said. "But when you do it in 'the round,' you can get away with simply having some sort of central unit that you can work on.

"That is why we chose more of an architectural idea, rather than a pictorial idea."

Tickets for the performance are available at the Nichols Hall Box Office every weekday afternoon.

Test to be adapted for dogs

Illegal drugs anticipated in racing

By Robert Manchon
Collegian Reporter

Toxicology researchers at K-State are adapting a commercially available, human drug-screening kit to cost-effectively test racing greyhounds for illegal drugs.

With the adoption of pari-mutuel betting in Kansas, researchers at K-State say greyhounds may be the next candidates for illegal drug use.

Greyhounds are drugged to boost performance, said Gary Griffith, analytical toxicologist. The research team will first look at the two most commonly used "uppers" — adrenaline and caffeine.

"We don't know yet how long stimulants stay in a dog's system after a race, and we don't know if (with) the various breakdowns, products will show up in the test," Griffith said.

The research team of Griffith; Fred Oehme, professor and head of veterinary toxicology; Clifton Meloan, professor of chemistry; and Barbara Markley, graduate student in chemistry, received a $30,000 grant from Marion Labs to standardize and adapt their screening test.

If the researchers' drug-screening adaptation is successful, they plan to create additional screening tests for other commmonly used drugs, pain maskers and depressants. The main objective is a test that screens large numbers of samples at a fairly low cost. This process will take about a year to complete.

Using the fast chromatography test that will specifically identify the chemicals present, the team hopes to be able to run about 12 samples in two hours. According to Griffith, each drug will show up on the chromatography paper as a specific color migration pattern, caused by its particular solubility properties.

The researchers test the urine of resting dogs that have received known doses of the drugs under study. Then, urine samples from drugged racing greyhounds will be analyzed following excercise.

"Depending on the enforcement rules, the animal, the owner and frequently the trainer can be banned from racing."
—Fred Oehme

"We need to establish, first of all, if the test can detect the drugs in dogs, and then, if it will continue to detect them as a dog's metabolism breaks them down during and after excercise," Oehme said.

According to Oehme, most states that permit greyhound racing screen the top three dogs after each race. If drugs are found, a more sophisticated test is run to establish conclusively that the animal has been drugged and what drug or drugs were used.

"Depending on the enforcement rules, the animal, the owner and frequently the trainer can be banned from racing," Oehme said.

When greyhound racing begins, the Kansas Racing Commission will establish drug testing guidelines for track operators. Once these guidelines are set, local veterinarians will probably be hired to collect and submit samples for analysis, he said.

In all probability, drug screening would be paid for by the dogs' owners as part of a track fee. The racing commission will designate the labs and agencies certified to do the screening.

Jury excludes man; conviction reversed

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A Missouri appeals court has overturned the conviction of a black man on assault charges, ruling that a black was improperly excluded from the jury.

The 1986 conviction of William A. Brinkley in Jackson County was reversed on a 2-1 vote of the Missouri State Appeals Court. The ruling was made public Wednesday.

State attorneys and dissenting Appeals Judge Donald L. Manford argued that the ruling conflicts with a December decision of the Missouri Supreme Court and rulings of the state Court of Appeals in St. Louis.

The state courts are attempting to apply a 1986 U.S. Supreme Court decision to several cases similar to the Brinkley case. The U.S. Supreme Court ruled that a prosecutor must have a neutral, clear, reasonably specific and legitimate reason to strike a prospective black juror.

The appeals court questioned the elimination of one black man from the panel of jurors in the Brinkley case. It did not question the striking of three other blacks.

An assistant Jackson County prosecutor had said at the trial that he was striking the man because the man had taken the law into his own hands by apprehending juveniles who had taken some of his property.

The appeals court said it did not believe that was the real reason why the prosecution did not want the man on the jury.

Disease still receives state, local attention

AIDS seminars not in demand

From Staff and Wire Reports

Despite the reports of AIDS cases in Kansas, an official at the Riley County/Manhattan Health Department said few Manhattan businesses have requested awareness seminars for employees.

Kathy Dickey, nursing supervisor at the department, said no requests have been received for seminars. "We would be glad to give some seminars if they did," she said.

However, the center has conducted seminars at some nursing homes in the area.

"They want to know if they are at risk. I recommend they wear gloves if they are handling body fluids of some kind. This way they are protecting the clients as well as themselves," Dickey said.

The McCall Pattern Company has a supply of pamphlets on AIDS available at the nurses station for employees, but the company has not conducted any seminars, said Marcia Francke, supervisor of employment.

"We haven't done anything like that yet," she said, citing a lack of concern about AIDS among employees as the reason.

David Chesher, director of human resources at the Kansas Farm Bureau, said he is unaware if any of the bureau's employees have expressed concern about AIDS in the workplace.

However, he said the bureau is beginning to develop a formal AIDS policy.

Although workers in Manhattan may not be concerned, a recent national survey has shown that a significant number of workers are afraid of catching AIDS from sharing job equipment, restrooms and cafeterias with victims of the deadly disease, despite medical assurances.

This suggests worries about AIDS could conflict with legal decisions that protect victims' rights to keep working, said David Herold, director of the Center for Work Performance at the Georgia Institute of Technology.

The Georgia Tech telephone survey, released last week, contacted 2,000 people who were at least 18 years old, working full-time, and not self-employed; the margin of error is 3 percent.

It found that 66 percent of those who responded said they would be "concerned" about using the same restroom on the job as a person who had acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Forty percent said they would think twice about eating in the same cafeteria as an AIDS patient, while 37 percent said they would not share tools or equipment with such a person.

A third of those polled said they did not believe assurances that AIDS can only be transmitted through sexual contact or through contaminated blood. Herold said indicated companies should do more to educate people about the disease.

"Corporations don't really have a handle on how to deal with the issues of AIDS in the workplace," Herold said. "There's a major need to educate the work force before hysteria or panic sets in."

Other findings of the poll, however, showed that while some workers may fear AIDS victims, an overwhelming majority are sympathetic to sufferers.

Eighty-one percent of respondents said they would "be willing to help the individual perform aspects of the job with which he or she was having difficulty." And 75 percent said they would favor special work arrangements for AIDS patients.

"We need to prepare the coworker for accepting the AIDS victim back into the work force," Herold said. He said that should include counseling and a willingness to accommodate workers who are afraid to work next to a person with the incurable disease.

AIDS is caused by a virus that damages the body's immune system, leaving victims susceptible to infections and cancer.

It is spread most often through sexual contact, needles or syringes shared by drug abusers, infected blood or blood products, and from pregnant women to their offspring.

In 1987, 46 cases of AIDS were reported in Kansas. Of these 46, 26 of the victims are now dead.

Officials will not monitor cases

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A Senate subcommittee Thursday decided it doesn't want the state to collect the names of people who test positive for the AIDS virus, reversing a decision it made the day before.

On Wednesday, the seven members of the Senate Public Health and Welfare Subcommittee on AIDS had voted to draft a bill that would require all clinics in the state to report the names and addresses of people who test positive for the AIDS virus, after two tests. The bill also would have required the state to keep those names confidential. About 43 public clinics in the state test people for the AIDS virus.

The state Department of Health and Environment had asked the committee to draft the bill as a way to help state public health officials deal with the AIDS epidemic.

However, Sen. Alicia Salisbury, R-Topeka, and Sen. Dick Bond, R-Overland Park, the subcommittee chairman, said today that after Missouri approved such a reporting law, the number of people in Missouri who took voluntary AIDS tests decreased significantly.

"If you do away with voluntary testing, we won't get high-risk groups into the system," Jerry Slaughter, lobbyist for the Kansas Medical Society, told the committee.

That's because many people, especially those with a high risk of having AIDS, won't voluntarily get tested at a clinic if they know their name will go to the state if they test positive, Salisbury said.

The state's first priority should be encouraging voluntary testing, not discouraging it, Salisbury said, and on a close voice vote, the subcommittee agreed with her.

But Sen. James Francisco, D-Mulvane, said, "What are we going to do tomorrow — retract what we do today?"

The subcommittee on AIDS was formed this session after several legislators in the Senate introduced bills dealing with mandatory AIDS testing and other legal issues concerning AIDS.

Current law requires hospitals and physicians in the state to report to KDHE the names of people who have AIDS, said Gary Hulett, under secretary of health and environment. Those names are confidential.

The problem occurs with people who have the virus, and thus can infect other people, but have not yet developed the disease, Hulett said.

Bond and Salisbury both said the Legislature will be dealing with AIDS issues for years to come and shouldn't try to do too much this session.

"We may not be doing the world's greatest job right now, but we'll be coming back to this every year, I'm convinced," Bond said.

Some members of the subcomittee also disagreed with a KDHE recommendation that the state consider tracing people who may have been exposed to the AIDS virus. State public health officials now do contact-tracing on people exposed to venereal disease and other communicable diseases, Hulett said, and the national Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta are now suggesting that states do contact-tracing for AIDS, too.

But Salisbury said, "I see us as just beginning to develop a state strategy, and I wouldn't like to see us do that right away this year."

The committee also:

- Voted to draft a bill that would require counties to provide information about AIDS to couples when they apply for a marriage license.
- Voted to draft a bill that would allow some health-care providers to find out whether their patients have the AIDS virus. Subcommittee members said it's not fair to withold that information from health-care workers, but said they're not sure if it should apply to all health-care workers.

The health-care workers would be forbidden by law to give the information to other people.

On Wednesday, subcomittee members agreed they want to draft a bill that would make it a Class E felony to intentionally expose someone to the AIDS virus. Steineger had also proposed such a measure, but his bill included mandatory AIDS testing for several groups.

Young journalists here today

By Becky Ives
Collegian Reporter

Students from 25 high schools will be on campus today to attend the regional journalism contest sponsored by the Kansas Scholastic Press Association. It is one of five regional competitions held in the state.

The high school journalists will compete in several categories, including news, sports, editorial writing, advertising, editing and page layout.

"What is unique is that everything is on the spot. Students are given assignments and are responsible to meet deadlines," said Dave Adams, associate professor of journalism and mass communications and the KSPA regional contest director.

Students will be divided into five divisions: 6A, 5A, 4A, 3A and 2A-1A. More than 500 people are expected to be involved with the contest, and students' work will be judged by faculty members and area media professionals.

K-State journalism students will serve as proctors for the contests. The top three finishers in each category will qualify for the state competition held in March at the University of Kansas.

Prior to beginning the competition, the high school journalists will be addressed by Carol Oukrop, head of the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications. There will also be a special advisers' session dealing with high school press freedom.

This session, which will be led by Adams, is a follow-up to the January Supreme Court decision Hazelwood vs. Kuhlmeier that limits the freedom of high school newspapers.

Schools expected to attend the contest include:

- 6A: Emporia, Manhattan, Topeka West, Highland Park, Topeka Seaman and Junction City.
- 5A: Shawnee Heights, Newton and McPherson.
- 4A: Holton, Wamego, Chapman, Abilene, Council Grove and Smoky Valley-Lindsborg.
- 3A: Nemaha Valley, Wabaunsee, Silver Lake, Chase County, Herington and Rossville.
- 2A-1A: Junction City-St. Xavier, Westmoreland and Solomon.

In addition to K-State's competition, another regional will be underway today at KU. Other regional contests were conducted Thursday at The Wichita State University, Pittsburg State University and Fort Hays State University.

Airliner's fowl collision sends plane back to KCI

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A Northwest Airlines jet returned to Kansas City International Airport safely following a collision with two geese shortly after takeoff, a tower official said.

The DC-9 hit the geese Wednesday after reaching an altitude of about 200 feet following takeoff at 2:30 p.m., said Ivan Hunt, manager of the KCI control tower. The plane suffered damage to its nose cone and windshield, he said.

Feasting, fasting New Orleans style

By Ann Iseman
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Mardi Gras. The ancient custom of New Orleans is a heady mixture of European traditions, religious rites and unabashed revelry.

Translated literally, Mardi Gras is French for fat Tuesday, also commonly referred to as Shrove Tuesday. It is the last day for feasting before the 40-day Lenten season of fasting begins.

And feasting they do. And do. And do.

Twelve days of animated, unmitigated, overindulgent fun. This year the Carnival season of Mardi Gras is being celebrated Feb. 5 to Feb. 16 in New Orleans — often referred to as "The City that Care Forgot."

Like a lot of customs in New Orleans, Mardi Gras has its roots in France. When explorers Iberville and Bienville camped beside a Louisiana bayou in 1699, they remembered it was Shrove Tuesday in France, their homeland. They named the little stream Bayou mardi Gras.

What began as a few costumes, a little merrymaking and some poking fun of royalty has now grown into an annual tradition, attracting in excess of one million revelers and at least 60 parades. It requires months of preparation and thousands of dollars to sponsor the parades.

Although all 12 days are packed full of costumes, masquerade balls, parades, excessive drinking and eating and an all-around good time, the true Mardi Gras is on Tuesday — it will be Feb. 16 this year — the day before Ash Wednesday.

Fat Tuesday is the culmination of the Mardi Gras season, and is generally considered a "let the good times roll" type of day. The tradition of partying uncontrollably, as if the world were about to end, stems partly from the early Christian church's belief that people needed some form of release after the long, hard winter.

The time between Christmas and Lent was a time for entertaining; making fun of the upper class, or royalty; wearing the dress of the opposite sex and adopting all kinds of bizarre costumes.

What began as a few costumes, a little merrymaking and some poking fun of royalty has now grown into an annual tradition, attracting in excess of one million revelers and at least 60 parades. It requires months of preparation and thousands of dollars to sponsor the parades.

This early European tradition is still clearly evident in New Orleans. Although the parades have become modernized, with tractors instead of mules pulling the floats, and brightly colored underpants being thrown to the frenzied crowds along with the traditional beads and doubloons, the male partiers still take the opportunity to dress as females and everyone in New Orleans knows that to arrive unmasked and uncostumed is worse than arriving unclothed.

When suddenly the clock strikes midnight, the streets are cleared of revelers. There is no official ending, it just happens. The somber season of Lent has begun and the people of New Orleans go home and begin planning for next year's Mardi Gras.

GOOD MORNING VIETNAM

"Good Morning Vietnam" is a delightfully funny film that features Robin Williams as Adrian Cronauer, a radio disc jockey in 1965 Saigon. Williams gives a strong performance as an actor as well as a comic, turning a sedate and mundane Army radio station inside out.

Cronauer is transferred to Saigon from Greece to help raise the morale of the men in Vietnam. However, his immediate supervisors do not approve of his brand of humor or the fact he replaces Lawrence Welk and Frank Sinatra with James Brown and The Beach Boys. They set out to put him in his place.

Many segments of "Good Morning Vietnam" were created as Williams improvised completely, without the aid of a script. These segments worked well, with a few exceptions where it became forced and choppy.

"Good Morning Vietnam" is a film that looks at censorship for military purposes, friendship, trust and the difficult task of making American soldiers feel closer to home by dousing them with humor and rock'n'roll. It will keep you laughing while exposing you to a time that is still not completely understood. (A-)

MOONSTRUCK

There are predictable movies. And then there are movies like "Moonstruck."

Cher stars as an Italian-American widow, who causes many problems when she falls in love with Nicholas Cage, the brother of her fiance.

The movie follows the life of her family, whose sex lives are greatly affected by the ever-present full moon, during a few days after her engagement.

"Moonstruck" is a wonderful blend of comedy, romance and suspense.

It leaves one feeling good; first, because it provides many pleasant chuckles, and secondly, because it provides a new perspective on loving. It juxtaposes love and relationships. The two supposedly necessary ingredients of courtship and marriage don't always go together, nor is it always desirable that they do so.

If that isn't a fresh concept, I don't know what is.

"Moonstruck" is definitely worth the price of a matinee, and in my opinion, worth paying full admission also.

Do yourself a favor and see it before everyone else does and tells you how it ends. (A)

COUCH TRIP

In "Couch Trip," Dan Akroyd plays John Burns, a patient in a mental hospital, who is too intelligent for his situation in life. He has more power with the patients and staff than the administrator does.

Therefore, when the hospital receives a phone call from a Beverly Hills lawyer wanting the hospital administrator — a psychiatrist — to temporary replace a radio talk-show doctor, Akroyd is able to con his way into the job and out of the hospital.

Once in California, Akroyd's character is a smashing success. He plays the classic movie clown who knows just enough about everything to wiggle his way out of everything.

Akroyd and the supporting cast of almost-famous actors who play doctors and lawyers do a marvelous job of making the show a worthwhile experience. Chevy Chase's cameo is a highlight. (B+)

Union offers alternatives

Students stay warm, celebrate

By Ann Iseman
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Yes, there is still something to do when it is cold and snowy outside. Today in the Union, students can experience the infamous New Orleans' custom of Mardi Gras, right here in Manhattan.

The fifth annual Late Night at the Union will begin at 11:30 a.m. with the Mardi Gras parade. Masquerading members of the Union Program Council committees will be parading through the Union scattering beads, doubloons and other goodies to anyone who might catch them.

The parade is popular in New Orleans, where the people in the streets shout, "Give me something, mister," and they are not disappointed. By the end of the day everyone is covered with cheap, plastic beads and has more than enough of the other cheap, but coveted trinkets such as cups, visors and doubloons.

The official Mardi Gras celebration began Feb. 5 and lasts until Feb. 16 in New Orleans. The Union's Mardi Gras started Monday and ends today.

"We've tried to expand it, making it into a week of events," said Mike Penner, UPC program adviser. "We have two to three times more stuff this year than last year."

New Orleans Jazz will be performing from noon to 1 p.m. in the Courtyard. The Jazz will play again from 8 to 10 p.m.

The Union food service is also in on the celebration. A special Cajun dinner will be offered from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m. in the Stateroom. Cajun food will also be served from 8:30 to 10:30 p.m. in the Courtyard.

The Mary Wong Comedy Team, which has appeared on "P.M. Magazine," "Night Flight" and "Comedy Tonight" television programs, will be performing at 7 p.m. in the Union Ballroom.

Bon Ton Soul Accordion Band is the featured attraction from 10 p.m. to 12:30 a.m. in the Catskeller. The Accordion Band plays a mixture of 1960s rhythm and blues, reggae, country and soul. The roots of the band go back to old style Louisiana black Cajun music, better known as "zydeco."

Other specials include 25 cent popcorn at the Information desk, 75 cent bowling and $1 per hour billiards.

"The Big Easy" will be shown at 7 and 9:30 p.m. in Forum Hall and "Ziggy Stardust" will be shown at midnight.

The original Late Night at the Union was based loosely on the "Late Night with David Letterman" show. Late Night, which is sponsored by UPC Special Events Committee, changed from the David Letterman theme to the Mardi Gras theme during its third year.

Penner said the change was made because the event was moved to February, causing it to coincide with Mardi Gras.

The Mardi Gras theme is tied in with the various entertainment which was featured throughout the week, leading up to the actual Late Night. It is also evident in the promotional posters, flyers, and banners, as well as the rulers, bookmarks and triangle-shaped pieces of paper resembling fortune cookies being passed out in the Union bookstore.

The handouts are meant to raise interest," Penner said. "People will see them and later on wonder what they are."

Giving the promotional items away in the bookstore is also a way of involving another part of the Union.

Late Night is actually an open house for the Union, Penner said, with all the departments participating in some way.

All of the UPC committees and several of the departments in the Union are participating. Clerks from every department will be wearing Late Night T-shirts today.

Union's 'Ziggy' a 'rock fantasy'

By Judd Annis
Collegian Reviewer

This weekend's midnight movie in Union Forum Hall provides theatrical rock buffs with the musical wonderment of David Bowie in "Ziggy Stardust and the Spiders from Mars."

Movie Review

Released in 1972, the film features Bowie and his band, The Spiders from Mars, in a rock fantasy performance filmed in London. The show was the last on Bowie's highly successful tour that year, a tour that catapulted him to stardom, giving him a new and exciting identity. At the filming date, Bowie and his bandmates had just come from a frenzied 25-city tour of the United States that was only supposed to encompass seven dates. After several concerts, Bowie quickly gained a large underground following.

"Ziggy Stardust" captures "Bowie the entertainer," a magical force in rock 'n' roll that, at that period, was well before his time. Bowie, an avid mime, combines theatrics with his live rock show, providing a vehicle for his audience's imagination and encouraging their participation.

His face painted white, eyes black with mascara and hair a brilliant orange, Bowie dons various costumes throughout the performance to set the scene for each stage of his show.

Don't expect this film to be a behind-the-scenes look at Bowie. There is some backstage and preconcert footage, but for the most part, the film is meant to capture Ziggy, and Ziggy is best when he's on stage.

He is a clown, a spaceman, a rock star and an entertainer of the highest proportions. Bowie is an artisan at one-on-one communication with his fans as he struts back and forth across the stage with a catlike prescence. The film is Bowie in his own "big tent," and he delights his audience with the greatest of ease.

"Ziggy Stardust" captures "Bowie the entertainer," a magical force in rock 'n' roll that, at that period, was well before his time.

This movie was released approximately 16 years ago — well before the age of rock video and cinamatography — so its quality is well below today's standards. The camerawork is poor, and the sound leaves much to be desired, but Bowie's magical performance makes up for most of the movie's inconveniences. Among Bowie's best songs in the film are "Changes," a great performance of "Suffragette City" and a cover of the Rolling Stones classic, "Let's Spend The Night Together." I'll give it a healthy B and encourage you to go experience this milestone in rock theater.

Senators to defend aid in D.C.

By Shelly Tierney
Collegian Reporter

Student Senate passed a bill Thursday allocating $734 to send two members to Washington, D.C. to meet with members of Congress for discussions on the status of federal loans for students.

Troy Lubbers, student body president, and Doug Folk, student senate chairman, were selected to represent K-State at the meetings in Washington.

Lubbers said he and Folk will be working with the National Student Roundtable as well as attending meetings with members of Congress to lobby against changes in student loan requirements and federal land grant funds.

An amendment to send only one representative to Washington was voted down after much debate.

Justin Sanders, graduate school senator, argued for the amendment.

"One person can represent us quite well. I believe sending a second person would be somewhat redundant," Sanders said.

Mark Burns, coordinator of finances, said, "I would like to see us send two people. More work can get done with two than with one."

A second amendment was proposed by the finance committee to allot only $369 instead of the $734 asked for in the bill. The second amendment, if it had been passed, would have allotted only $5 a day for meals for each representative and $5.50 per night for hotel expenses. This would have forced Lubbers and Folk to pay for much of the trip out of their own pocket or to not go at all.

Mary Jo Lampe, senate operations committee chairwoman, spoke against the amendment.

"I don't think we can justify charging them more to do their job. They would be representing all student bodies across campus. They shouldn't have to pay to represent us," she said.

Lubbers agreed with Lampe when he said Student Government Association guidelines "don't apply to a trip such as this."

Lubbers said it will be more an effort of the Associated Students of Kansas than of K-State by itself to lobby for the federal student loans.

"There are a couple of research items we'll be doing that they will not do. Part of it will be as a group and part of it will not," he said.

Lubbers said the trick to getting things done is to get in good not so much with the congressmen, but with their staff.

"There will be official meetings with Kassebaum and Dole. But you get things done through their staff. If you want something pushed through Congress, you get in good with the staff," Lubbers said.

Earthquake shakes southern California

By The Associated Press

WHITTIER, Calif. — A strong earthquake rocked a wide area of Southern California on Thursday, injuring at least 25 people and triggering a fatal heart attack, but apparently causing little damage.

"I felt like Joshua at the battle of Jericho," said Dwight McDonald of the California Highway Patrol in downtown Los Angeles.

The quake, measured at 5.0 on the Richter scale, struck at 7:25 a.m. in the Whittier Narrows area, 15 miles east of downtown Los Angeles, said Jacquelyn Dreher, a spokeswoman for the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena.

She said the location meant it was another aftershock of the powerful Oct. 1 quake that measured 5.9 on the Richter scale and was followed by a 5.2 quake on Oct. 4. The combined temblors caused $358 million in damage in Los Angeles and Orange counties and were blamed for at least seven deaths. Thursday's was the 35th aftershock to measure above 3.0 on the scale.

"I just sat there saying 'Well, here we go again,'" said Renee Wilbur, 31, an office worker at a California Youth Authority school in Whittier. She sprained a knee diving under a desk for cover, a repeat of the injury she suffered in the Oct. 1 quake.

A 57-year-old Hacienda Heights man died at Queen of the Valley Hospital in West Covina after suffering a heart attack at his home during the quake, said spokeswoman Cathleen Rodman. She said paramedics who brought the man in attributed his death to the temblor.

At Presbyterian Intercommunity Hospital in Whittier, at least 20 patients were treated for various injuries, including two elderly women who were admitted, said spokeswoman Maria Adams. She said the minor injuries included cuts, bruises and sprains. One of those admitted suffered chest pains.

Also admitted was Marjorie Simons, 64, who suffered fractured vertebrae.

"I was taking a dish from the dining room to the kitchen and the next thing I knew I was on the floor," Miss Simons said. "I said, 'It's an earthquake.' I was terrified because I'm from Florida and I'm not used to them."

In addition to the heart attack victim, five people were treated for minor injuries at Queen of the Valley Hospital, said spokeswoman Sophia Mercado-Lima.

People reported feeling the quake from points as far apart as Fallbrook in San Diego County in the south to Lancaster in the Mojave Desert in the north, a 100-mile stretch. It also was reported in Redlands, some 70 miles east of Los Angeles, to Malibu, 30 miles west on the coast, and in Barstow, 90 miles northeast of Los Angeles.

Some terrified Central American immigrants fled their homes in Los Angeles and set up camp in parks as they did after the Oct. 1 temblor, because the tremor reminded them of the killer quakes called terremotos in their native countries.

"It was just like last time. You always feel the building crack," said Leticia Melgoza as she sat in a park with her family, cradling a baby boy. "We don't want to go upstairs because we don't want it to shake again."

"I ran outside," said Ajrik Mandal, 35, manager of a Pico Rivera 7-Eleven store, where ketchup bottles shattered on the floor. "But it lasted for just a second and it was over." The October quake strewed merchandise all over the floor of his store.

The quake also set off burglar alarms throughout Los Angeles and Orange counties and caused brief power outages. No telephone equipment was damaged.

Court rules against drug tests

By The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — The government's policy of requiring the nation's 200,000 railroad workers to submit to drug or alcohol tests after accidents or rules violations was struck down as unconstitutional Thursday by a federal appeals court.

In a ruling that runs counter to the Reagan administration drug testing plans, the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said such testing is not justified simply because a worker was on a train crew that got into an accident or drove too fast.

The court said there must be grounds for suspicion that an individual worker was under the influence of drugs or alcohol.

"Accidents, incidents or rule violations, by themselves, do not create reasonable grounds for suspecting that tests will demonstrate alcohol or drug impairment in any one railroad employee, much less an entire train crew," said Judge Thomas Tang in the 2-1 decision.

In Washington, Transportation Secretary Jim Burnley said the Justice Department has been asked to appeal the decision to the U.S. Supreme Court.

"Other appeals courts have upheld mandatory drug testing programs for customs officials, prison guards, bus drivers and jockeys," said Burnley in a statement. "We are convinced of the constitutionality of the FRA drug and alcohol testing program."

The Supreme Court in January 1986 reversed a previous 9th Circuit ruling and allowed the testing program to take effect pending a decision on its constitutionality.

The 9th Circuit ruling came a day after the same court, with three different judges participating, declared unconstitutional the Army's ban on homosexuals.

Thursday's ruling, which would overturn Federal Railroad Administration regulations in effect since February 1986, contrasts with decisions by four other appeals courts upholding mandatory drug tests for prison guards, certain customs officials, race jockeys and bus drivers.

Each of those courts cited safety concerns or particular conditions of the job to justify an exception to the normal requirement that drug testing — considered a search under the Constitution — is unreasonable without grounds to suspect an individual employee of wrongdoing.

"This is the first federal appellate court decision to strike down a drug testing program which is not based upon individualized suspicion," said Edward Chen of the American Civil Liberties Union of Northern California, which joined a union of railroad workers in challenging the tests.

He said the decision, if it stands, has implications for Reagan's plan to require drug tests of hundreds of thousands of federal employees in "sensitive" jobs.

"If you can't test for safety reasons, which I think is probably the government's strongest argument, it would follow that you can't test for simply questions of productivity or other non-safety reasons," Chen said. He also said the railroad testing program is narrower than Reagan's plan.

The regulations require railroads to administer blood or urine tests to anyone in a train crew involved in an accident that caused death, major injury, major damage to railroad property, or a damaging release of a hazardous substance.

They also authorize railroads to test non-supervisory workers who were suspected of causing or contributing to a railroad accident; were directly involved in any of a variety of rule violations, including speeding by more than 10 mph or passing through a stop signal; or were reasonably suspected by a supervisor of being intoxicated.

Those who fail the tests can be fired or suspended, subject to restrictions in union contracts.

Department offers political internship

By The Collegian Staff

Beginning this year the Department of Political Science is offering a legislative internship program for students to gain hands-on experience behind the political scene.

Not only are political science majors encouraged to apply, but students in majors such as journalism and mass communications and business can find the program of interest.

Margery Ambrosius, assistant professor of political science, is the departmental contact for the legislative internship program. She said the program is "good experience for those interested in public service as well as for business students who are interested in governmental relations."

Legislative interns draft correspondance, perform research, and attend hearings for senators and representatives regarding current political issues. The type of research done depends upon the student's field.

Lori Bredow, senior in agricultural journalism, is interning at the statehouse in Topeka for Representative Don Rezac, D-Onega.

"I write newsletters for (Rezac's) district. The letters go out to 100 to 150 constituents," she said.

Bredow responds to letters from constituents answering questions or concerns they may have.

Bredow became involved in the program last year.

Candidates preparing for first primary

GOP, Democratic race tightening

By The Associated Press

Rep. Richard Gephardt turned on Democratic presidential rival Michael Dukakis on Thursday, declaring him ignorant of the "complexities of trade policy." Vice President George Bush pleaded with Republicans to help him stem Bob Dole's tide in New Hampshire.

"I'm working my heart out here. So can you help me?" said the struggling GOP front-runner.

Dole sounded like a man on a roll, delivering a speech on the deficit and declaring, "I want to be nice to everybody this week."

Dukakis, the leader in New Hampshire's tightening Democratic contest, stressed his role as opponent of the unopened Seabrook nuclear power plant as he campaigned in front of a clam bar designated as an evacuation shelter in case of accident.

Jesse Jackson and Sen. Al Gore shunned New Hampshire, Gore touting his chances in southern states that vote next month while Jackson aimed a few barbs at his rivals.

Dukakis has "every advantage," he said. "He lives there. He is at home, he's dripping in money. And of course Dukakis, Gephardt and Simon are using money and commercials. I'm using message, service and experience."

By word and deed, the rest of the would-be presidents emphasized how much next week's first-in-the-nation primary has become a struggle to survive:

■ Democratic Sen. Paul Simon borrowed $110,000, most of it to finance television commercials that began running Thursday criticizing Gephardt's voting record in Congress.

■ Bush, former television evangelist Pat Robertson and former Delaware Gov. Pete du Pont canceled planned trips to a political conference in New Orleans, while Dole scrubbed a trip to Tennessee, all to stay in New Hampshire.

■ GOP Rep. Jack Kemp, his candidacy jeopardized by Robertson's strong showing in Monday's Iowa caucuses, laid plans to attack the former minister in a Washington speech on Friday.

Dole's senior aides decided tentatively not to use a commercial depicting Bush as a man who has held many jobs in government but has left no footprints. That decision reflected a belief that the Kansas senator, a convincing winner in Iowa, has the momentum heading into the final days of the New Hampshire campaign.

Richard Wirthlin, Dole's pollster, said his man is still trailing, but gaining fast enough to overtake the vice president by primary day next Tuesday.

Two public opinion polls conducted since the Iowa caucuses show Dole in a statistical dead heat in New Hampshire with Bush, long the front-runner in the state as well as nationally — with Robertson gaining after his second-place finish ahead of Bush in Iowa.

Robertson appeared on a government-run television station in South Africa and said Americans don't understand the issues involved in that country, in which the black majority is seeking political rights from the white minority government.

"The blacks in this country have made this whole matter into an extension of the United States civil rights movement and I think they don't understand what they're dealing with," he said.

Bush depicted himself as a man who feels deeply about the issues, even if doesn't often express his feelings. "But mostly these days, I think of (Abraham) Lincoln — Here I stand, warts and all," he said.

"There may be better orators out there, but nobody believes more strongly," Bush said.

Dole stressed his role in winning passage of President Reagan's three-year package of tax cuts in 1981 as well as the Social Security bailout bill.

With only a few days remaining until the primary, he said he could feel "distortion time" coming. He said he didn't want to name a candidate who sent out a mailing criticizing his record on Social Security because "I want to be nice to everybody this week."

That was a reference to Kemp, who made Bush and Dole an offer they're probably going to refuse.

At a news conference in Derry, Kemp said he would stop running his anti-Dole, anti-Bush television commercials on Social Security if they would promise not to cap or limit annual increases in benefit payments. "If they don't, then I'll remind them that it was Bob's idea of leadership to freeze Social Security in 1985 and, of course, with George Bush's vote, it occurred," he said.

Polls showed New Hampshire's Democratic race was tightening as well, although Dukakis still held a large lead over Gephardt, who finished first in Iowa, and Simon, who came in second.

Gephardt said Dukakis was "spouting the establishment line on trade."

"And I really don't think it's right ... to be defending trade policies of other countries and failing to defend the rights of American workers and American businesses," he said.

He added that Dukakis was mistaken when he said the Democratic-controlled Senate had killed a Gephardt-sponsored trade bill, and added, "I'm not sure he understands how Congress works, and I know he doesn't understand the complexities of trade policy."

The Senate has rejected a key provision of a trade bill that Gephardt helped push through the House.

Dukakis spent the day reminding New Hampshire's voters how he had blocked the opening of the completed Seabrook power plant. As governor of Massachusetts, Dukakis refused to approve the evacuation plan for towns in nearby Massachusetts.

"Putting a nuclear power plant in a busy beach makes about as much sense as putting a jet airport on top of Mount Washington," he said, referring to the tallest peak in New England.

Mark Dobbins listens to a question from third grade student Arron Jimerson at Woodrow Wilson Elementary School Thursday morning. Dobbins was one of 50 athletes who spoke to elementary students in the Manhattan area about the danger of drugs and alcohol.

'Just say no' message of athletes

By Jenny Chaulk
Sports Editor

In a gymnasium with about 80 children and a chorus of "1-2-3, just say no," K-State basketball player Mark Dobbins and K-State golfer Troy Keller delivered their message of how to stay away from drugs and alcohol.

Their presentation to first- through sixth-graders at Woodrow Wilson elementary school was just one of many delivered by K-State athletes to school children in the Manhattan, Junction City and Fort Riley areas Thursday morning.

"If we can change just one life...that's what we're trying to do," Keller said.

Sending athletes to area schools to deliver K-State's "Say No to Alcohol and Other Drugs" campaign is the culmination of an extensive developmental process which began last summer. Members of K-State's department of intercollegiate athletics worked with Nancy Denning of Denning and Associates, a Manhattan advertising firm, to put the program together.

"Athletes at the Division I level are idolized by a lot of children," said Torrey Head, athletic promotions and marketing intern. "With that in mind, we devised a program which could make a strong and immediate impact. The best way to do that is to take the athletes right into the schools with their messages."

Dobbins and Keller were among some 50 athletes chosen by the head coaches of K-State's 14 intercollegiate sports to participate in the campaign. Dobbins said the athletic department held meetings with the athletes to tell them the importance of the campaign and its goals.

After this, the athletes were paired up and left on their own to develop their presentations. Dobbins' and Keller's included talking about peer pressure, discussing the importance of parents' advice when confronted about using drugs and giving examples of what effects drugs have on a person's body.

"Does anybody here have a favorite car?" Keller asked the students.

Hands shot up all over the gym, and one sixth-grader shouted: "Lamborghini."

"Let's say you let your friend borrow your Lamborghini, and he takes it out and puts mud in your gas tank," Keller said, much to the consternation of the children. "Do you know what that would do to your Lamborghini? It would ruin it. Drugs do the same thing to our bodies. When our friends tell us to do drugs, they're telling us to put mud in our gas tanks."

He also stressed to the children they had to be "big enough and strong enough to say no" when pressured by their friends to use drugs or alcohol, and that these substances aren't needed to "have a good time."

"Do any of you guys know Mitch Richmond?" Dobbins asked, as all hands in the gym flew up simultaneously with voices saying "yeah."

"Mitch is my neighbor and he's the best basketball player I've ever been around. He doesn't do drugs. He dances and listens to music. He has a good time without drugs. All the things he does revolve around becoming a better person and athlete.

"If your friends don't like you because you don't do drugs, then they're not your friends," Dobbins added.

Purple buttons with the slogan "Just Say No" were distributed to the children in their classrooms after the program. Keller and Dobbins also fielded questions from the students and performed an all-group demonstration, which involved the students shouting "just say no."

Questions directed to Dobbins and Keller ranged from, "Have you ever had personal friends do drugs?" to "Do drugs make you run away from home?"

"Using drugs and alcohol is a personal choice that everyone has to make. Hopefully, you'll decide not to use them," Dobbins said. "Drugs sometimes make you do things you wouldn't normally do, and running away's something you wouldn't always think about."

Ray Looper, a substance abuse counselor from Fort Riley, volunteered to accompany Dobbins and Keller to address any technical questions about drug effects students might have. He said an authority on drug effects accompanied all the athletes.

"I think the presentation had an effect on the kids," he said. "If they (the athletes) only touch one, it was more than worth while."

The children had different perceptions of the presentation, but they focused on one central theme — a negative view of abusing drugs and alcohol.

"Drugs are bad, 'cause if you take drugs, you'll live on the streets and you'll get run over by a car," said third-grader Cory Dieball.

"And if you take drugs, you can die," added third-grader Jeremy Sellars.

"I think it's stupid (to do drugs)," said sixth-grader Becca Dikeman. "It just messes you up."

"I think it's stupid, too," said sixth-grader Cynthia Taylor.

K-State's athletic department hopes the campaign will have a positive effect on the area, and that it will serve as a model for similar campaigns.

"You have to try to make a difference in anything you do, and certainly this will be a very positive step for this department and for the entire area," K-State athletic director Larry Travis said.

"This program could very easily serve as a pilot for others in our state," Head said. "We've used ideas that were put forth at some other universities around the country ... I'm sure (the ideas) will be beneficial to ourselves and others in the future."

'Cats to battle league leaders

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

The world didn't end for the University of Oklahoma's basketball team when K-State defeated the Sooners, 69-62, Jan. 16 in Ahearn Field House.

Oklahoma rebounded from that loss with seven straight wins and is now 21-2 overall, 7-1 in Big Eight Conference play, and ranked fourth nationally heading into Saturday's game against the Wildcats.

Tipoff is 1 p.m. at the Lloyd Noble Center in Norman, Okla.

When these two squads last met, OU shot just 31.6 percent from the field, 9.5 percent from three-point range, and was outrebounded by five. K-State coach Lon Kruger said that task will be difficult to match.

"No question," Kruger said. "Oklahoma has an outstanding ball team and we'll have our hands full. Obviously, we'll try to do something to encourage that they shoot that poorly again, but that's tough to do."

When one talks about OU basketball, forward Harvey "The General" Grant's name undoubtedly surfaces. Grant, last year's Big Eight newcomer of the year, leads the squad with an average of 21.8 points per game. In the earlier matchup against the 'Cats, the 6-foot-8 senior forward had 19 points — despite hitting just 5-of-21 from the floor — and 14 rebounds.

Sooner center Stacey King is making some waves as well.

After receiving player of the week honors from Sports Illustrated and ESPN two weeks ago, the 6-10 junior came back with a career-high 40 points against Missouri, and contrbuted 36 points against Iowa State. In the Missouri game, he also blocked seven shots and nabbed 20 rebounds.

"I thought he played well against us the last time," said Kruger of King's 15-point effort in Manhattan, "but here lately, he's putting some impressive numbers on the board and simply doing an outstanding job."

OU is 10-0 at Lloyd Noble Center this season and 74-2 over the last three years. The last team to win there was K-State, when it dumped the Sooners, 90-89, last season.

In its earlier win over Oklahoma, the 'Cats were led by 33 points from Mitch Richmond and 16 from Fred McCoy. K-State, 14-5 and 6-1, hit 44 percent from the floor and hit 23-of-25 free throw attempts (10 more than OU).

In his last two outings, Richmond had 18 against Missouri and 16 against Nebraska. In those two games, McCoy had eight and 10 points, respectively. Kruger said their offensive numbers are deceiving.

"Mitch continues to play very impressively in every way. Fred contributes when we really need him and we can only hope that will continue," Kruger said.

While Richmond and McCoy have somewhat slowed their offensive production, senior foward Charles Bledsoe has stepped in to fill the gap. Bledsoe had 15 points at Missouri and 14 against Nebraska (10-of-14 from the free throw line).

Saturday's game will also have a dramatic impact on the race for the Big Eight title. After Saturday, first-place OU has the advantage with three of its four conference games at home. K-State has six league games after the trip to Norman, with tough road tests at Iowa State University and the University of Nebraska.

NOTES: The game will be televised on the Raycom Sports Network and broadcast on the Wildcats' Radio Network (WIBW-580 AM)...Oklahoma leads the overall series 82-76...K-State is the only Big Eight team OU has not scored 100 points against.

Netters hit the road

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's women's tennis team will travel to Springfield, Mo., this weekend for the Southwest Missouri State Invitational to take on the University of Arkansas-Little Rock and host Southwest Missouri State.

K-State will play two dual matches in the tournament. At 3 p.m. today, the Wildcats will take on UALR, and at 10:00 a.m. Saturday, K-State meets Southwest Missouri State.

Coach Steve Bietau said all three teams are evenly matched, which should provide the Wildcats with some good competition.

"Because all three teams are at the same level of play, these meets will give us an idea of how far we've come this season," Bietau said.

"We've shown good progress on concentration and are improving different aspects of the game. This weekend will be a good test of how well we compete," added Bietau.

Several changes will take place in doubles play for K-State. Val Rive' will team with Annika Emtell for No. 1 doubles. The No. 2 and No. 3 teams will be Sigrid Ivarsson and Marijke Nel, and Miste Bitner and Thresa Burcham.

In singles action, Bietau expects to make several changes due to the condition of the team.

"Right now, the lineup depends on everyone being healthy," Bietau said.

Lady Cats to try for victory Saturday at OU

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

For K-State Lady Cat coach Matilda Mossman, the nights following the Iowa State win Feb. 3 have not been restful. The remedy to this insomnia — a win over the Lady Sooners of Oklahoma in Norman, Okla. Saturday.

Game time for the contest is 7 p.m.

"I slept really good after the Iowa State game," Mossman said. "After the Missouri game, (a 67-65 Lady Cat loss Wednesday) I didn't."

Mossman said that at least the players have gotten their rest after all the losses suffered by K-State, 8-14 overall and 1-8 in Big Eight Conference play, this season.

"Our players have rebounded well from every loss that they have taken," she said. "It doesn't matter whether they've lost by 31 points or two points, they've come back real well.

"Although, this is not the exact route I would take to getting back on track," Mossman added. "Going to (Oklahoma, 11-10 overall and 4-5 in the conference) right after (Missouri) is not the easiest of tasks. Oklahoma is tough on their home court."

The task at hand for Mossman has been to find a consistent five players.

"Right now the line-up of Kristie (Bahner), Diana (Miller), Nadira (Hazim), Amy (Davidson) and Elyse (Funk) have proven that they make the fewer mistakes," she said. "With those five in there, I feel we have a good ball handling club and one that works well together."

The five will have their work cut out for them when they face the Lady Sooners and their run-and-gun style.

"Last time we played (Oklahoma), they scored 16 points on the transission game," Mossman said. "They scored 96 points and hit nearly everything in sight that they put up. And all we did was shoot 38 percent from the floor."

But Mossman sees a difference in this Lady Cat team and the Lady Cat team which lost, 96-65, to the Lady Sooners Jan. 19.

"Right now I'd have to say that we are one of the tougher teams in the Big Eight," she said.

NU to play in classic

By The Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Nebraska and Texas A&M, both with designs on college football's national championship, will open the 1988 season in the sixth annual Kickoff Classic.

The New Jersey Sports & Exposition Authority, which puts on the game at Giants Stadium, announced the matchup Thursday and said the Kickoff Classic will be played on Saturday night, Aug. 27.

"Both teams should be ranked in the Top Ten going into the season, so whichever team loses probably won't drop off the cliff," Texas A&M Coach Jackie Sherrill said.

Nebraska finished sixth in the final 1987 Associated Press poll and Texas A&M was 10th, both with 10-2 records. They have met

Tracksters to face stiffest test

By The Collegian Staff

Even though K-State's track teams have been battling injuries, they have been successful. And they will try to continue winning this weekend at Nebraska.

The teams will be in action today and Saturday in Lincoln, Neb., at the Frank Sevigne Husker Invitational.

The non-scoring meet will feature more than 50 men's and women's teams in the track and field competition. Some of the best teams in the country will be participating at the meet, including the likes of host-school Nebraska, Iowa State, Southern California, Alabama, Utah and Brigham Young.

"Some of the best athletes in the country will be there," said Coach John Capriotti. "There were 49 national qualifying marks put in there last year, so that proves it has a good quality field."

K-State, which will have nearly a full team participating, will be facing its best competition of the indoor season.

Five teams which finished in the top ten at last year's women's NCAA meet will compete. Three teams from the men's top ten will also be there.

"The Husker Invitational is like a mini-nationals," said triple jumper Felicia Curry. "Whoever wins here will most likely be the winner of the (indoor) nationals."

The meet gets underway today at 6 p.m. with the women's long jump, high jump and 5,000-meter run. Six final events will be held today, with the remainder on Saturday. Action on Saturday begins at 11 a.m. with the women's triple jump.

Notice

K-State's Cheerleading squad will appear on ESPN Sunday and again Tuesday at 1 p.m.

The cheerleaders will be appearing on the airing of the Universal Cheerleading Association's National Championship Finals, which here held in San Diego earlier this month.

The University of Kentucky captured the title, with Alabama second and North Carolina State third.

on five occasions, the last time in 1972, with Nebraska winning four of the five.

Nebraska defeated Penn State 44-6 in the first Kickoff Classic in 1983 while Texas A&M, winner of three straight Southwest Conference championships, is making its first appearance. It also is the first time the SWC is represented.

"These teams are genuine candidates for the 1988 national championship and the game will have national impact," Bob Mulcahy, president and chief executive officer of the Sports Authority, said.

"It gives us the highest ranked teams since Miami and Auburn in 1984 and we look for a blockbuster game."

When Miami defeated Auburn 20-18 in Kickoff Classic II, the Hurricanes were coming off the 1983 national championship and Auburn had finished third.

An NCAA rule limiting a team to one Kickoff Classic appearance in five years prevented Miami from being invited this year.

The addition of Nebraska gives Texas A&M another rugged game on a schedule which includes September dates with three 1987 bowl teams — LSU, Alabama and Oklahoma State.

Fee

and the agency directors considered basing fee amounts on a full-costing audit.

A full-costing audit would itemize all the services provided by each of the agencies to the University, while considering all services the University provides to each agency.

However, the urgent need for the funds, disagreement as to who should pay for the audit and questions of its feasibility all but killed the idea.

Although Miller said he thinks a full-costing audit would increase the fee for each agency, at least one director believes an audit would lower it.

Jack Sills, Union director, said he is confident of the value of the services the Union provides the University.

Although the Union only pays 1.5 percent, he said there is the possibility the Union could pay even less if the fee were assessed on an audit basis.

However, Eric Muehleisen, administrative officer at Lafene, was less confident.

"I'm not sure I like that idea (the full-costing audit)," he said. "The University provides us many services."

Student Publications actually benefited from the fee without the audit, Miller said.

"The administration had not recognized some effort in the journalism department that had been previously supported by Student Publications," he said.

Because the University now pays for the effort, Miller said that area of the fee could be counted as a loss for the University in terms of the pluses and minuses of the fee.

Charles Beckom, K-State Police chief, said although the University has a right to assess the fee, it does cut into his already small budget.

Citing a low campus crime rate and "security for more VIPs and dignitaries" than at other universities, Beckom said his department provides quality service — especially considering the size of its budget.

"When talking with (members of) other university police departments, I've had them ask how we operate on what we get," he said.

Beckom said he would like to be able to keep the fee money in the police budget, or at least have it funneled back into it.

At the time of the request for the fee, some directors questioned its fairness. The administration countered that although the fee was new to K-State, six other Big Eight institutions had a similar fee.

However, Adams disputed the number of Big Eight institutions with this type of fee.

Another question — the life of the fee — has been answered by neither the adminstration nor the agencies, but by time.

While Sills said it was never made clear whether the fee was to be permanent, Adams maintains that when the administration requested the fee, agency directors were told it would be temporary.

"However, now it looks like it may turnout to be permanent," he said.

Because the fee has been in existence for a year, Miller said it is unlikely the University will stop collecting it.

"I don't believe there is any discussion now in terms of eliminating the fee," he said.

However, if the University receives most of the money it requested from the state under the Margin of Excellence plan, Miller said it is possible the administration would consider eliminating the fee.

"I don't think (the administration) would be so inflexible that they wouldn't consider anything, if there were multiple funding," he said.

Spring enrollment highest in history

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

Twentieth-day enrollment figures released by the University Saturday indicate this semester's students make up the largest spring enrollment in K-State's history.

"The total enrollment of 18,698, including intersession figures, exceeds our earlier estimates for on- and off-campus enrollments," said President Jon Wefald.

Wefald attributes the increase to improvements in University retention programs.

"Better retention is a major goal of everybody at K-State," he said. "The faculty and staff are doing a better job of (retaining students)."

Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, who earlier said he anticipated a final spring enrollment of more than 18,400 students, also voiced support of retention increases.

"While efforts to attract students have played a significant role in this change, our data indicate the efforts at improving retention of currently enrolled students is really paying off," Krause said. "This is directly attributable to the faculty and staff who have made a concerted effort to improve the student experience within and outside the classroom."

On-campus enrollment was up by 555 students to 15,624, said K-State Registrar Don Foster, who added that this marks the third time in the last four semesters that K-State has seen an enrollment increase.

The spring enrollment figure reported to the Kansas Board of Regents will be slightly lower because of University revisions in enrollment procedures, Foster said.

The elimination of intersession enrollment and late-starting fall courses deflates the figure to 17,306. A separate report to the regents will highlight figures from intersession and other areas, he said.

All seven of K-State's undergraduate colleges showed increases, Foster said, adding that the College of Human Ecology reported a gain of nearly 14 percent.

Virginia Moxley, associate dean for academic affairs, said the majority of the 14 percent gain occurred last fall, and improvements in retention have enabled the college to maintain that increase this spring.

"The faculty are aware of their role in retaining students," she said. The Department of Hotel, Restaurant, Institution Management and Dietetics continues to grow, although Moxley added that enrollment is up in all of the college's departments.

"The growth has not been isolated to one area," she said.

Enrollment increased in the colleges of Education and Architecture and Design by more than 10 percent, Foster said.

K-State's total enrollment reached its zenith in the fall of 1981, when a figure of 19,982 was reported, he said. Declines followed through the spring of 1986 until enrollment began to climb again the following fall. Enrollment held steady in the spring of 1987 and increased last fall and this spring.

Politics, economics contributing factors to enrollment history

Enrollment: The Final Factor

By Jeffrey J. Bielser
News Editor

Editor's note: This is the first installment of a five-part series on enrollment at K-State and what it means to the University.

A paradox exists in the enrollment and recruitment game — when economic times get tough, enrollment in the state's colleges and universities goes up.

People who might have lost their jobs are looking for more training to make them more qualified for jobs that are available, said Don Hoyt, director of planning and evaluation services. If they are laid off from a job it is seen as a way to enhance their skills.

"Higher education is seen as a way out of economic difficulties," he said.

This trend of higher enrollment in low economic times is seen more in the urban areas than the rural areas, Hoyt said.

For example, if big layoffs occur in Wichita, people are more likely to go back to school for more education to ensure job security, either in their current field or a different one, he said.

However, it does not really show up until enrollment and recruitment goals are formulated.

"The economy is a glitch to recruitment goals," Hoyt said, adding that projections hinge on economic conditions.

Location is one of the key factors in recruitment, overriding economic concerns in some cases, he said.

But, the main determinant in the size of future enrollment numbers is the size of high school classes, Hoyt said, adding that even this factor is different in Kansas.

"Kansas is quite unique in the percentage of students going on to higher education," he said.

Nationwide, the number of high school seniors going on to higher education would level out at about 55 percent, but in Kansas, the average is more than 60 percent, Hoyt said. Other area states average about 5 percent to 10 percent fewer students than Kansas.

The chance of receiving a better job attracts many people to higher education, he said.

Another incentive for higher education is the financial assistance programs available at K-State and other universities, Hoyt said.

Loans and other forms of financial aid make it more feasible for students in hard economic times to attend college.

"Today you can seemingly get a free ride," Hoyt said. "Loan programs are pretty attractive, even though they may be short-sighted."

N.H. primary bitter campaign

By The Associated Press

CONCORD, N.H. — Republican candidate Pat Robertson called Sunday for phasing out Social Security, as Democratic front-runner Michael Dukakis became the focus of attacks from his rivals in the closing hours of the increasingly bitter campaign for the New Hampshire primary.

With Republicans George Bush and Bob Dole running neck-and-neck, the five GOP candidates gathered for an hour-long League of Women Voters debate in which Bush and Dole both came under attack from the rest of the field.

Dole, the Republican winner in Iowa last week, indicated he hoped to deliver a knockout blow to Bush in New Hampshire.

"Some of us would like to see it end Tuesday here with someone winning," said the Kansas senator.

Bush, for his part, made an impassioned appeal for support. "My work isn't done yet," he said.

Rep. Jack Kemp attacked the two front-runners, saying they "think like Washington ... whereas I fought the establishment."

And former Delaware Gov. du Pont, locked in a second-tier battle with Kemp, also attacked the first tier, saying the next president must be a man of clear vision and strong principles. "That's not George Bush's style and that's not Bob Dole's history," he said.

Earlier, Kemp charged that Robertson says "off-the-wall things" and that Dole is behind a national economic commission that will suggest increasing taxes.

"I am convinced that Senator Dole has a secret plan to raise taxes on the American people," Kemp said in Bedford, N.H. "That would totally frustrate the Republican message that we are the low-tax party."

Dole denied Kemp's charge and also took shots at the vice president's leadership as the first-in-the-nation primary loomed Tuesday.

"I don't think he has made any decisions in the last seven years," the Kansas senator said of Bush in a CBS News interview broadcast Sunday.

Dole said he is pleased with his progress in New Hampshire — where Bush once had a big lead: "I have come a long way in the last 30 days."

For his part, Bush defended his campaign's ads that say Dole has "straddled" making decisions on several major issues.

"The man is running on leadership," Bush told reporters in Nashua.

GOP rivals attack Bush during debate

By The Associated Press

GOFFSTOWN, N.H. — Vice President George Bush, struggling to regain his footing in the GOP presidential race, depicted himself as President Reagan's loyal second-in-command Sunday in a high-stakes debate two days before the New Hampshire primary.

Iowa caucus winner Bob Dole was challenged forcefully by his rivals during the nationally televised debate.

Former Delaware Gov. Pete du Pont thrust a piece of paper in Dole's face and asked him to sign the traditional New Hampshire pledge not to raise taxes.

The Senate Republican leader looked the material over and shot a barb in Bush's direction. "I'd have to read it first," he said. "Maybe George would sign it."

Austria's leader may step down

By The Associated Press

VIENNA, Austria — Socialist Chancellor Franz Vranitzky said Sunday he would consider resigning if the controversy over President Kurt Waldheim's World War II conduct continues to hamper Vranitzky's leadership.

About 5,000 people, including actor Klaus Maria Brandauer, gathered in central Vienna outside the landmark St. Stephen's Cathedral to call for Waldheim's ouster.

About half of them marched to the Hofburg Palace, site of the president's office, and chanted, "Waldheim must go!"

In an hourlong television interview, Vranitzky, who heads a coalition government, launched a sharp attack on Waldheim, whose duties as head of state are mostly ceremonial.

The president "did not deal exactly with the truth" during the investigation into his activities as a soldier in the Nazi army, Vranitzky said. He stopped short, however, of urging Waldheim to step down.

Veteran political observers did not recall a similar public confrontation between a chancellor and a president since the second Austrian republic was established after World War II.

The Vienna government appointed a historians' commission to investigate Waldheim's wartime record last year after the U.S. government put the former U.N. secretary general on a "watchlist" of undesirable aliens. U.S. officials said Waldheim was a lieutenant in a German unit that sent thousands of Jews to Nazi death camps.

The historians released their report last Monday.

Jet drops 200 feet, injures 10

COPENHAGEN, Denmark — Ten passengers on a DC-10 jet flying to Copenhagen from Tokyo were slightly injured Sunday when the plane suddenly dropped nearly 200 feet, a spokesman for Scandinavian Airlines System said.

Airline information officer Troels Rasmussen said the drop in altitude lasted only a few seconds. He said 10 of the 217 passengers on board were treated in a hospital for cuts and bruises and released after the plane landed in Copenhagen.

"The DC-10 jet was two hours out of Anchorage, Alaska, where it made a short stopover, when it suddenly dropped 60 meters (198 feet) from a cruising altitude of 9,300 meters (30,690 feet)," Rasmussen said.

There were no injuries among passengers who had their seat belts on at the time the plane lost height, he said. The airline was investigating the incident.

Next president to battle deficit

WASHINGTON — The recent spate of skittish economic indicators is raising concerns that the next president will take office without the tools to combat a recession, even if an election-year downturn can be avoided.

That's because the federal budget deficit has grown so huge that the historical remedies for jolting an economy out of a recession — lower taxes and more federal spending — simply will not be available to the next president, a growing number of analysts suggest.

In fact, if anything, the next occupant of the Oval Office will be under extreme pressure to press for higher taxes to reduce the budget deficit — a tactic that would become all but impossible during an actual recession.

In 1981, when the last recession began, the federal budget deficit stood at $78 billion. By 1987, with the recovery from that recession entering its sixth year, the shortfall was $148 billion after soaring to a record $221 billion in 1986.

The bloated budget deficits of the 1980s will make it that much harder for President Reagan's successor to cope with a recession, say analysts troubled by recent reports showing a faltering economy and by last week's Congressional Budget Office report that the deficit may hit $176 billion next year.

"The ability of the new president to use the discretionary parts of the budget, particularly large tax cuts, just aren't there," said David Jones, senior economist for Aubrey G. Lanston and Co.

Customers knock at wrong door

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — Opportunity came knocking for undercover police officers who raided a house looking for drug dealers and ended up arresting their customers as they came to the door.

The police street-crime unit had arrested four suspected drug dealers Friday and were searching their house when the first customer knocked on the door, said Lt. Rafael Garcia.

Over the next few hours, the impromptu sting operation resulted in 18 unexpected drug arrests, police said.

Garcia said the undercover cops intended only to arrest the dealers, but when the first would-be buyers knocked "we decided to do a reverse sting operation."

Seized from the house were about 80 bags of heroin, an unspecified amount of cocaine, $2,900 in cash, a loaded .38-caliber revolver and assorted drug paraphernalia, police said.

Landlord confined to building

NEW YORK — Angry tenants and a banner reading "Welcome You Reptile" greeted a landlord Friday when he reported to one of his buildings to serve a 15-day sentence of house arrest for failing to correct housing violations.

Morris Gross, 77, who lives in a luxury high-rise, will be confined to a fifth-floor apartment in a building where tenants complain of bugs and rodents, lack of heat and hot water, and leaky ceilings.

His movements will be monitored by an electronic ankle bracelet to make sure he serves his sentence.

A judge convicted Gross of criminal and civil contempt in December after the city Department of Housing Preservation and Development brought action against him for failing to comply with a court order to correct housing violations.

The judge gave him the choice of either paying $169,000 in fines for 420 violations or serving 15 days of house arrest and spending part of the fines, $137,900, to repair the 113-unit building in Brooklyn.

Cronkite to help Union Station

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Veteran CBS newsman Walter Cronkite, who once worked as a radio and wire service reporter in Kansas City, has joined a fund-raising effort to save a crumbling local landmark.

Cronkite narrates an emotional 16-minute film, "Union Station Is Us," promoting renovation of the historic rail depot, which was built in 1914 and once accommodated 200 passenger trains a day.

In the film, finished Friday, Cronkite recalls meeting dignitaries, including the queen of Romania, at the grand old station.

The Committee for Union Station plans to distribute the film to schools, television stations and at various events before a March 8 vote. Officials are asking voters for $35 million to start renovating the building.

Kansas could lose congressional seat

By Alison Neely
Staff Writer

Kansas is facing the possibility of losing a congressional seat in the reapportionment of congressional districts after the 1990 census.

In an effort to prevent the potential loss, the five Kansas representatives in Congress and Kansas Attorney General Bob Stephan have joined in a lawsuit to prevent illegal aliens from being counted in the 1990 census.

There has been no count for the number of illegal aliens living in Kansas, but there are so few in Kansas that it would not significantly affect the number of representatives in Kansas, Stephan said.

The states to benefit by possibly getting more representation after the census are the border and coastal states: Texas, California, Florida and New York.

Stephan was asked by the five Kansas Representatives to join the lawsuit. It was brought to their attention in late 1987 by the Immigration Reform Law Institute, a public interest law firm in the District of Columbia, said Jonathon Fellows, legal assistant to 3rd District Rep. Jan Meyers.

The case is to be filed Feb. 18 in U.S. District Court for Western Pennsylvania, Fellows said, because (Pennsylvania) is also in danger of losing a seat, as is West Virginia. There are over 40 co-plaintiffs in the case, he said.

Besides the lawsuit, "the only way to prevent Kansas from losing a seat is by statute, to expand the number of Congressmen from 435 to 460," Fellows said. "We wouldn't really gain that much since everyone else would be allowed more representation."

Congress has authority over the Census Bureau, which determines who will be counted in the census. For 1990, the interpretation has been made that all people living in an area, legally or illegally, are to be counted, said Al Powers, special assistant to 4th District Rep. Dan Glickman.

It will take an act of Congress telling the census not to include the aliens, or an amendment to the Constitution to prevent them from being counted, he said.

Another possibility to prevent Kansas from losing a seat is to include military and students in the census, but even this inclusion will not ensure the seat will not be lost.

"It's not really a certainty we'd be able to keep the seat. There is an influx in the Southwest of illegal aliens who will be getting representation, but our own boys in the military aren't being counted. It seriously alters the state's representation," Powers said.

Even if students and military were to be counted, there is no assurance their numbers would balance the number of illegal aliens in other states, Stephan said.

"If Congress passed a law, it would definitely settle this thing one way or another," he added.

State petitions withdrawal

Nebraskans want out of compact

By The Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — A petition drive to withdraw Nebraska from a five-state low-level nuclear waste compact has sparked the interest of opposition groups in Kansas and Arkansas and rekindled speculation about breaking up the compact.

A petition drive in Arkansas has gained momentum because of efforts in Nebraska, Bob Bland of Little Rock, Ark., told the Sunday Lincoln Journal-Star.

The Arkansas Alliance citizens group wants Arkansas to withdraw from the compact and handle low-level radioactive waste generated within its own borders, Bland said. Arkansas has one nuclear power plant.

Arkansas would get a five-state waste site under a rotation policy approved by the compact, Bland said. Nebraska would operate its site for 30 years, then another state would build a facility, he said.

"By remaining in the compact, it virtually guarantees that you will eventually end up with a dump," Bland said.

Nebraska has been chosen to build the first waste site but the group in Arkansas doubts it will, Bland said. Conditions set down by Gov. Kay Orr, including one that would allow Nebraska to refuse some waste, could jeopardize the agreement, he said.

Bland said his group has about 10,000 of the 55,400 signatures it needs to put the measure to a vote.

Owen DeLong of Frankfort, Kan., co-chairman of Citizens Against the Interstate Dump, said that if voters approve Nebraska's petition drive, some Kansas lawmakers have indicated they will introduce legislation to withdraw Kansas from the compact.

Kansas has no initiative petition law, so it must enact legislation to withdraw from the compact.

Last year, Kansas lawmakers introduced two bills that dealt with withdrawing the state from the compact, but neither bill made it to the Senate floor for debate, Deputy Attorney General John Campbell said. Kansas officials are watching Nebraska's petition drive closely, he said.

DeLong said his group considers Nebraska the worst location for a low-level nuclear waste site, mainly because of its vast underground water supplies. Other states in the compact are Louisiana and Oklahoma.

A Nebraska site is potentially hazardous to Kansas because waste from all five compact states would be shipped across the state, DeLong said. Kansas, which has one nuclear power plant, also is directly downwind and downstream from any facility built in Nebraska, DeLong said.

If Nebraska pulls out of the compact, a chain reaction could kill the Central Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Compact, DeLong said.

Strike grounds Alitalia

By The Associated Press

ROME — A strike by ground crew workers at Leonardo da Vinci International Airport on Sunday forced cancellation of some of Alitalia's domestic and international flights.

Employees walked off the job at 7 a.m. and said they would stay out until midnight to protest the unexpected suspension of negotiations on a new contract.

Labor leaders representing ground crews and pilots told Italian newspapers they will stage periodic strikes at Italian airports until Feb. 29.

Campus police deny access to real records

It's time for the K-State Police department to come down off its high horse.

For years, it has denied students access to files that, at any other police department, are open to public viewing. A federal law called the Buckley Amendment, the department argues, prohibits students from looking at police reports.

This is ludicrous. What the law does is deny government funding to institutions that fail to restrict access to educational records to students and their parents. While the original intent of the law was to prevent professors from posting students' grades, it is now being used by the police as an excuse not to have to bother with dispersing reports to students.

The campus police department keeps two separate logs each day. To appease the students, it offers a Public Information Log for viewing. This log, however, contains information so vague as to be practically useless. The more detailed log — the Criminal Activities Log — is inaccessible to the public and may be viewed only by the police.

Last week, a woman wrote a letter to the Collegian questioning its coverage of crime on campus and mentioning that a rape had allegedly occurred on campus and had gone unreported in the paper. The next day, a police department official confronted her about it, denied that the incident had occurred and demanded to know her source for the information.

The department should stop to think that if it would provide the information in the first place, people wouldn't have to question whether an event occurred or why it wasn't reported.

Any other police department would be committing an unlawful act if it denied the public access to its reports. Why should a campus police department have special privileges?

Hiding behind the Buckley Amendment has continued long enough. To date, no university has ever had federal funding removed as a result of disclosing campus police reports to the public. Many universities willingly make detailed campus police reports accessible to the public.

It's time K-State's policy is challenged.

For sake of Austria, Waldheim should go

While Arizona is still suffering from the problems connected to Gov. Evan Mecham's scandal and his subsequent impeachment, Austria's President Kurt Waldheim is creating his own share of turmoil. However, judging by what has happened to the two men, at least it is evident that justice and democracy are still revered in America.

A study released Feb. 10 by six historians — who were appointed to the task by the Austrian government — has accused Waldheim of concealing his past and lying about his role as a Nazi during World War II. While the study does not accuse him of committing any war crimes, it does say that he was informed of the actions the Nazi party was taking in Greece and Yugoslavia and yet he did nothing to stop them.

The conflict surrounding Waldheim is not a new one, but the time has come to end it. Since his election, his position and past have been a source of conflict for not only Austrian citizens but for other political leaders in the world.

These leaders have declined Waldheim's invitations to visit Austria and have not reciprocated his offers with invitations of their own. Most leaders have severed their political ties with Austria, reducing both Austria and Waldheim to virtual hermits.

Although the atrocities that Waldheim has been accused of overshadow Mecham's political blunders, Waldheim is the one who remains in power. And it appears he will remain that way until he resigns.

Rumors are surfacing that he might resign, but at a United Nations meeting the day the study was released, he again stated his refusal to resign.

Like Mecham, Waldheim has become a leader with few supporters and few ties to other leaders. His actions have been the subject of scrutiny and public outcry. Both of the leaders hid behind their roles, but Mecham has been stripped of his cover.

Austrians can only hope the same will happen to Waldheim.

It shouldn't take childish tokens to recruit volunteers for Telefund

Commentary

CHRIS KIPPES
Collegian Columnist

It is usually touted as a wonderful way to meet people with common interests who are out in the world working, succeeding and living. They try to tell us that the University's Telefund is not a painful and shameful institution that uses its volunteers to beg for alumni support. We are told it is quite the opposite, that it has something to offer for both the callers and the alumni.

In the words of the slick, fast-talking coordinators of the Telefund: It gives all involved "a chance to participate in something that is bigger than themselves...." A history professor finds it somewhat amusing that the Alumni Association has found such a benevolent use for one of Adolf Hitler's favorite phrases.

But before I continue on with what a carnival the Telefund is, I had better explain clearly what the Telefund should be. And, make no mistake, the Telefund does indeed have a raison d'etre.

I am well aware the Telefund was the source for two of the scholarships that I was so proud to accept last year. And I am only one of the many students walking around on campus supported, in part, by K-State alumni. The Telefund provides an invaluable service to the University and to its alumni, many of whom — believe it or not — welcome the opportunity to support an institution in which they take pride and to which they feel indebted.

The organizers of the Telefund make it clear that the money earned during their February fund-raising campaign is earmarked exclusively for students. The concept of the fund is admirable and helpful, and its existence has much to do with making K-State's alumni the very supportive contributors that they are.

It is not the concept of "a telefund" that worries and offends me; instead, it is the methods of the Telefund. And the worst part of the situation is that the hyped-up, slicked-down, mindless, cowbell-ringing foolishness of the fund drive is forced upon it. The coordinators and organizers of the Telefund have no choice; they must somehow make the fund drive attractive, and therefore they feel they are forced to commercialize the process. It is ironic and upsetting that the support the Telefund needs so badly is withheld by the very people for whom the fund tries to provide: the students of K-State.

It should be a clear embarrassment to the student population that it is as apathetic about this institution as the alumni are supportive of it. Any scholarship student who passes up, begs off or bows out of the Telefund should feel nothing but shame.

With their support, K-State alumni are showing that they believe they owe their alma mater a little bit of monetary assistance in return for the tremendous amount of support the University has given them.

With their indifference, the students — especially scholarship students — are showing that they think their University owes them a tremendous amount of support and assistance simply in return for their presence. Those students who feel they embody the "brains" of the University expect payment for their presence and frequently feel little obligation to reciprocate in any way. Only the most selfish of ingrates would consider a thoughtful note of thanks on the University's standardized acceptance form as being enough.

It is infuriating to see mostly seniors, non-scholarship students and professors donating their time to the expansion of a fund that affects them only indirectly. It is an outrage to hear a scholarship student say, "Four hours of calling and asking for money is a pain in the butt" or "I just can't ask someone I don't know for money." Anyone who can spend scholarship money provided by nameless people they do not know should not find it offensive to semipersonally ask alumni to donate to the support of the university that broadened their lives.

As the overenergetic coordinators of the Telefund often say, many of the alumni welcome the chance to participate in something bigger than themselves. This is frequently true, but if it isn't and the alum really gets ticked by your solicitation, you are always free to curse that person under your breath after he or she hangs up the phone.

What got me started on all of this was the stupid carnival atmosphere of the Telefund, where the caller who earns the most pledges wins a prize and where some lucky caller can win a lottery ticket and where the caller who gets a $100 pledge gets acknowledged by the ring of a cowbell.

But these childish antics are forced upon the fund drive. Organizers have to find some way to make the project attractive in order to get enough volunteers. Relying upon people's sense of civic duty is never enough. In the selfish soup of Yuppie America, we all have to be cajoled to do good, and the organizers of the Telefund understand that all too clearly. I just wish there was something better than cowbells.

Sex tells us a lot about ourselves

Commentary

MARK SCHREINER
Collegian Columnist

Sex is the meaning of life.

At least it is if you accept the theory of evolution. Evolution says that animals lucky enough to have useful adaptations will live longer and reproduce more than animals without useful adaptations.

Genes carry adaptations, and animals with good genes must have offspring or the good genes will be lost. Suppose a deer was born with a mutated gene that made it twice as fast as normal deer. Wolves and other predators could not catch this superfast deer. But suppose the superfast gene also made the deer sterile. The gene would die with the deer. The species as a whole would not get faster.

Now suppose a deer got a gene that made it mate twice as much. The deer would have twice as many young as normal deer. Its many young would then mate twice as much. Soon all deer would be running around in a mating frenzy.

Since evolutionary success depends on passing on genes, nature promotes sexual desire. The more desire, the more offspring, the more evolutionary success. This is why people like sex. The people sex hurt abstained from it. Soon no children were born with the genes for painful sex.

Sex made our brains big. A caveman who could spear a deer could attract mates. But throwing a spear takes a lot of thinking. Soon the cavemen with the biggest brains had the most mates. We do not have spears today. We have footballs. In evolutionary terms, sex is the only benefit of a big salary or thinness.

If thin people have more sex, soon more children will have the genes for thinness. The human species will become thinner. Sex is the strongest desire humans have because the people with strong sexual desire had more children than the people with strong hut-building desire. This has several results.

It explains why people supposedly think of sex every seven seconds. It explains why sex jokes outnumber food jokes. It explains why I am writing this and why you are reading it.

It means nature has little reason to keep sterile people alive.

I may be wrong. Sex could explain grandparents. The evolutionary function of grandma is to help mom with the baby. Grandma indirectly helps her genes live. Look at the black widow. The female spider eats her mate. It makes evolutionary sense; he has passed on his genes and the best thing left is to give himself as food for the female's 200 growing eggs.

Evolution says women should enjoy childbirth. This would encourage them to have kids. But from what I know, giving birth is not fun. Maybe there is something to masochism.

Then there is the tribe somewhere whose men jam 4-foot sticks down their throats after sex to induce vomiting. This cleanses them from the touch of the woman. I could be wrong, but this seems to discourage sex.

Also, inheriting a gene for homosexuality is like inheriting a gene for suicide. The nature of the gene stops it from being passed on. This makes for few genetic homosexuals. I could be wrong, but random mutations are rare.

The big question is: Why isn't everyone running around having sex all the time? The brain that figured out how to throw a spear also figured out that it could make sure its genes lived on by giving a few children intense care instead of having many kids and trusting to luck.

Sexual desire, the strongest desire, must be repressed or civilization falls. The job of civilization is to repress sexual urges. The toughest laws and the biggest taboos are for sex because the biggest desire needs the biggest punishments to hold it back.

Evolution helps explain why our rules and our desires conflict. It fits in nicely. After all, people were told to go forth "so that they may reproduce and spread over all the world."

Talks help improve U.S.-Mexican relations

By The Associated Press

MAZATLAN, Mexico — The meeting between President Reagan and President Miguel de la Madrid showed that despite differences on foreign policy, trade and narcotics trafficking, U.S.-Mexican relations are improving.

The new atmosphere is due in large part to what one U.S. official called the "excellent personal working relationship" between the two leaders, who have met six times over the past five years.

"On the basis of personal friendship ... we have reviewed matters of interest ... overcoming delicate matters," de la Madrid said in welcoming Reagan to this Pacific coastal resort Saturday.

The two chief executives, accompanied by high-ranking officials of their administrations, met for four hours Saturday to discuss issues of common concern, including trade, narcotics trafficking and Central American policy.

It was the last officially scheduled meeting between the two presidents. De la Madrid ends his six-year term on Nov. 30, and Reagan leaves his post in January.

Unlike some of his predecessors, de la Madrid has avoided open confrontations with the U.S. government over foreign policy. Instead, he tends to stress the positive.

De la Madrid has been a tempering influence among Latin American leaders under domestic pressure to declare moratoriums on their enormous foreign debts, much of which is owed to American banks.

In turn, the U.S. government has been instrumental in getting U.S. banks to agree to refinance portions of Mexico's enormous foreign debt of $105 billion, and to lend this country the money it badly needs for development.

Mexico has drawn praise from the United States for drastically lowering its trade barriers and the United States has responded by opening up the U.S. market to Mexican textiles, leather goods and other products.

De la Madrid has strongly pushed the market-opening moves as a way to help modernize the sickly Mexican economy and pull it out of its lengthy economic crisis.

A perennial source of irritation had been the U.S. attitude that Mexico was not doing its best in the fight against illegal drug trafficking because of official corruption.

But the Mexicans now have practically forced the United States to admit that there is corruption on both sides of the Rio Grande and that the drug fight must be a joint effort.

Mexico is a large producer of marijuana and heroin for the U.S. market and a relay point for South American cocaine.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz stressed the importance of the anti-narcotics campaign, saying Colombia was an example of a situation where drug traffickers can become a powerful and disruptive factor in a society.

Colombia's attorney general was assassinated recently by drug dealers, responsible for the deaths of numerous judges and other government officials.

High-ranking Mexican officials have privately expressed the fear that Mexico could become another Colombia.

But Shultz and Attorney General Edwin Meese III avoided any references to official Mexican corruption, a charge often made in the past by U.S. officials at lower levels.

Mexico is waiting for the U.S. Congress to ratify the new Mutual Legal Assistance Pact, which would enable police agencies in both countries to exchange information to track down drug criminals.

Problems remain between the countries, but it is an indication of the new relationship that the two neighbors can talk about them without sounding like a debate.

Reagan pressures abortion clinics

New rules subject of suit

By Mary Strafuss
Collegian Reporter

The right of a woman to obtain an abortion is once again being targeted by the Reagan administration in new anti-abortion regulations.

These regulations would forbid clinics financed by the government to inform women of their options, including abortion, when dealing with an unintended pregnancy.

"It's very important for women to know their choices," said Karen C. Carlson, executive director of Planned Parenthood of the greater Kansas City area.

Ten percent of the Kansas City Planned Parenthood program is financed under Title X, said Carlson.

If the new regulations go into effect, Planned Parenthood organization will refuse the money and continue counseling its clients, Carlson said.

As of now, three lawsuits have been filed by various organizations contesting the constitutionality of the new regulations. It is expected that an injunction will be granted against the regulations.

Carlson said the organization has fought continuous battles with the Reagan administration on abortion. In 1983, the Reagan administration proposed the "squeal rule," which made it mandatory to notify parents of minors if the minor intended to have an abortion. Planned Parenthood sought and received an injunction on that regulation.

"(Reagan's) whole stance has been people with money have the options available and poor people haven't," said Jo Stevens, member of the national board for the National Organization for Women.

Either the laws or the president make our choices as if we are children, she said.

"If women don't have a choice when to have a baby, they have no choice at all," Stevens said.

She said the issue is no longer a moral issue, but an economic one. Not everyone can afford to stay at home and have babies, she said.

The National Right to Life Committee strongly favors the new regulations.

"The new rules mean that government funded clinics must stick to preventative measures, such as contraception, and stop promoting abortion as a method of birth control," said Douglas Johnson, legislative director of the committee.

Clinics financed by Title X would also be barred from referring women directly to an abortion facility. It is feared that if the regulations are enforced, it would deprive lower-class women of information about abortion.

Service provides dates for farmers

By The Associated Press

WAUSAU, Wis. — As a 52-year-old divorced farmer, Frank Cook said he had little time left after caring for his cows, hogs, crops and children to find a date.

So he has become one of more than 600 farmers, agribusiness workers or other people with rural backgrounds who look for friends and lovers through Singles in Agriculture, a nearly 2-year-old nonprofit group based in Wisconsin.

"Farm people are special people. They're busy and they don't have time to go to things," Cook said in a telephone interview Friday. "It's hard to find someone when you're on the farm."

Cook, who runs a 1,000-acre dairy, hog, corn and soybean farm in Baraboo, is vice president of Singles in Agriculture.

The group, which has members in just about every state and Canada, schedules outings such as a campout in Missouri or a boat trip in the Wisconsin Dells and keeps a list of singles with rural backgrounds.

It does not emphasize making matches or pushing people to the altar, but some of its members have married each other, said Marcella Gahm, 49, the group's president.

She met Marlyn Gahm, a 53-year-old beef cattle and grain farmer from Pearl City, Ill., through the group, and they were married last June.

After the death of her first husband on the couple's Staceyville, Iowa, farm in 1979, Gahm said she was like many farm widows who find themselves in a small, rural town without many single people their age.

26 states operate lottery games

By The Associated Press

Twenty-six states are now wheedling extra dollars from their taxpayers with lottery games, helping senior citizens in Pennsylvania, schools in Ohio and economic development in Iowa and Oregon.

Total sales exceeded $12 billion last year. Eight states sell $1 billion or more in lottery tickets a year, keeping a third or more of that amount to support state programs.

Within the last year, Florida, Kansas, Montana and South Dakota have joined the club, and Wisconsin and Virginia will begin games this year.

Though most states report rising income from wagering, some have to hustle to keep bettors interested.

Last week, Pennsylvania scrapped a lotto game that had sold $2.2 billion worth of tickets since 1982 and launched a "Wild Card Lotto" game. Players in the old game picked six numbers out of 40, but the new game has 48 choices.

That changes the odds of winning from one in 1.9 million to one in 6.1 million. That, in turn, increases the chances of creating one of those humongous $30 million or $40 million jackpots that inspire frantic ticket sales.

"We've had so many people who've won a million or more, it now takes a pot of $10 million to generate the interest that $5 million did once," says Laurie Kipp-Klecha, a spokeswoman for the lottery in Michigan, where on Sunday officials said someone was holding a $17 million ticket after the latest drawing.

That's the theory behind the new six-state "Lotto America" game.

OU defensive pressure too much for Wildcats

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

NORMAN, Okla. — The game of basketball is looked at from a different perspective at the University of Oklahoma.

First, there's the pregame introductions. The players' nicknames are included: Harvey "The General" Grant, Ricky "Amazing" Grace and Stacey "Sky" King, for example. Then there's Sooners coach Billy Tubbs cracking one-liners in the postgame conference room.

Basketball in Norman isn't just a pastime until football season rolls around anymore. Oklahoma's cage teams are winning by big margins and, most importantly, having fun.

"I'm having more fun than I did last season. We're winning more, we're playing good defense and we're scoring more. Everything is fun when you are winning," Grace said.

One could even go so far as to say a game played at OU could be compared to a theater production, or even making a movie. If that's the case, K-State would probably call it "A Nightmare at the Lloyd Noble Center."

Fourth-ranked Oklahoma had six scorers in double figures, and its defensive pressure forced 20 K-State turnovers, as it rolled to a 112-95 win Saturday against the Wildcats. The Sooners, 21-3 overall and 8-1 in Big Eight Conference play, led by as many as 30 points in the second half before a late K-State charge made the score respectable.

Unlike last year in Norman when K-State climbed back from 13 points down late in the contest to win by one, the 'Cats could get no closer than 13 with 2:12 left in the game.

"I want to state the obvious first: Oklahoma entirely controlled things from start to finish," K-State coach Lon Kruger said. "(The score) crept down there a little bit at the end, but we weren't in a position where the outcome was in doubt."

OU coach Billy Tubbs and his squad weren't so sure.

"I thought Kansas State dominated the last eight to 10 minutes of the game. I was concerned when K-State pulled to within 15 or so. You saw what Kansas State was capable of doing. They started letting the bombs fly and the three-pointer can get you in trouble quickly," Tubbs said.

"We expected a big win today, and we got the big lead. But in the second half, momentum started to change. But a win is a win in the conference," added King, who had 19 points.

K-State's late charge was fueled by the offensive production of Mitch Richmond, who led all scorers with 41 points, and the defensive play of Ron Meyer.

Meyer, who played 20 minutes because starting center Fred McCoy was in foul trouble, had two steals and shut down the inside tandem of Grant and King late in the second half. Grant and King combined for 37 points, but when the inside shot wasn't there, they were able to kick it outside to Grace, Mookie Blaylock and Dave Sieger.

Blaylock, who set an NCAA season record for steals by a junior, led OU with 21 points. Grace added 20 and Sieger hit 18 — all from three-point range. In the earlier game at Manhattan, Blaylock and Grace had 10 points apiece; Sieger failed to score.

"We tried to make them take the long shots and they hit them. If they wouldn't have, it would have been a different game," Richmond said.

In the first half, K-State pulled to within one when McCoy's tip-in made it 18-17 with 10:54 remaining. But OU soon built its advantage into double digits when Blaylock went on a 15-point tear. The Sooners led by 18 at the intermission, and Grace and Grant built Oklahoma's lead to 20-plus early in the second half.

Still, Tubbs had many kind words for 14th-ranked K-State, which dropped to 14-6 and 6-2.

"I don't think they deserve to be 14th. I think they probably deserve to be higher," Tubbs said.

"It would be a shame that anybody that has to play at Missouri and at Oklahoma in one week drop in the rankings. I would challenge anybody in the world to come in and play Missouri and Oklahoma back-to-back...and see if they come out alive."

NOTES...Saturday's game was the first time any team has scored 100 points against the Wildcats...Tuesday's conference games feature Colorado at K-State and Nebraska at Kansas...K-State's game Thursday with Kansas in Ahearn Field house will have an unusual starting time — 6:05 p.m. — to accommodate television coverage by ESPN.

Postseason tournament ticket allocations unfair

"Damn, that makes me mad!"

How many times have you heard those words exclaimed down through the years by someone you know who's upset at someone or about something? Chances are you've heard the phrase several times, and you're about to hear it again from me.

The Big Eight Conference, in its infinite wisdom, has decided to allocate only 525 tickets per school for the conference's postseason basketball tournament in March at Kansas City's Kemper Arena.

To add insult to injury, K-State's powers-that-be have decided the school's allotment of tickets will be distributed to those alumni requesting tickets who have given the most money to the Mike Ahearn Scholarship fund.

Where does that leave you and me, the students who have supported this team so well this season? Outside the Kemper, that's where.

We'll be stuck on the outside looking in while some folks who haven't even attended a game this season are inside watching our team play in a tournament we deserve the right to be inside watching.

Damn, that makes me mad!

This is not intended to be a solo crucifixion of the K-State athletic department and the policy the department has formulated in determining who will get tickets. Let's nail the idiots at the conference office up on a cross right next to those in the athletic department.

Does this sound at all like the ravings of a man who missed out on getting tickets for the tourney because of these decisions? It should, because I did.

Svoboda on Sports

DAVID SVOBODA
Sports Columnist

Let's let cooler heads prevail now, however, and attempt to get to the reasons behind the decisions made by the conference and the athletic department.

Phillips 66, those wonderful folks who have given us great gasoline, new forms of pavement that have lasted forever in Oklahoma (or so they tell us in their commercials) and have been all-around fine members of the community has upped its corporate sponsorship of the Big Eight this basketball season.

Phillips, to its credit, has sponsored the "Classroom Champion" program that recognizes scholar-athletes for their work in the classroom. Also to the credit of Phillips, the conference, with the support of companies like Phillips, appears to be stronger than ever.

But before we start driving down to our local Phillips station in droves to buy gas and call our service station attendants great guys, let's learn yet another interesting fact.

The reason only 525 tickets were allocated to each school for the tournament was because of the increased corporate sponsorship by Phillips. Phillips is not the only corporate sponsor, by any means, to be gobbling up tickets to the event, only the most visible.

But while those Phillips officials, members of their families, and others whose companies have doled out the big bucks to help the conference are sitting in Kemper munching on hot dogs and watching games they have no more than a passing interest in, they are hurting the student fans at those schools their large financial endowments are supposed to be helping.

"Svoboda needs a lesson on what life's like in the real world," many of you are no doubt saying right about now.

No, I don't need a lesson about what corporate sponsorship means in the days in which almost everything is tied to the almighty power of the dollar. This "everyone and everything has a price" mentality that pervades our society today may be a fact of life, but it's not one I have to like — especially when I'm getting the shaft while others are lined up outside the gold mine.

If only 525 tickets are being allocated to individual schools, that would mean only 4,200 tickets are being allocated to the eight member schools in the conference. Kemper Arena seats over 16,000 people. Are you telling me that almost 12,000 tickets are being gobbled up by corporate sponsors and those lucky enough to know someone who can get them tickets?

Damn, that makes me mad!

What makes me every bit as mad is the policy the K-State athletic department has decided upon in determining who gets the 525 tickets allocated to K-State.

Sooners' play inspired

Henson's comments 'fire up' OU

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

NORMAN, Okla. — K-State point guard Steve Henson praised the reserves after K-State had little trouble with the University of Oklahoma's full-court press Jan. 16 in Ahearn Field House.

"The trap we practiced against was a lot tougher than Oklahoma's. The guys (we practice) against every day made it a lot easier for us (against OU's)," Henson said following the Wildcats' 69-62 win.

As if the Sooners needed further inspiration following that loss, Henson's statement was the subject of postgame interviews with OU players.

"I think the quote Steve Henson made fired the guys up," senior guard Ricky Grace said. "The coaches put a letter of what he said on everyone's locker."

"We had something to prove today because of Henson's comments about our press," added senior forward Harvey Grant.

To put it bluntly, Oklahoma's full-court press this time around was murderous. It was the difference in the game, as the 'Cats had 20 turnovers in the contest — 13 in the first half — as compared to 14 total in the earlier clash.

K-State coach Lon Kruger said teams can't give Oklahoma additional chances to score if they expect to defeat the No. 4 team in the nation.

"When you don't handle (the press) well early, it gives (Oklahoma) a shot in the arm. They picked up their intensity. It was more than we could handle," Kruger said.

Even when K-State broke the press, OU's man-to-man proved difficult to penetrate. Mitch Richmond, who had 41 points, had eight turnovers — including two five-second violations. Henson had four turnovers and failed to make a field goal. It was K-State's third-highest turnover rate of the season.

"We didn't handle the press like we did in Manhattan. I wasn't ready for some plays (and it hurt)," Richmond said.

Sooners' coach Billy Tubbs said playing in front of the friendly Lloyd Noble Center crowd was the big difference in Saturday's 112-95 win. Grace said when the crowd is loud, the referees can't hear some things — such as a slap on the arm — which might be called fouls in a quieter arena.

Tubbs also said it helps when a team shoots 55.6 percent from the field, as compared to 31 percent in the first meeting this season between the 'Cats and Sooners.

"If you are a pressing team, you know your press is more effective at home because there is a little more enthusiasm," Tubbs said. "The thing is it's tough to play us when we're making shots. When we make the shots, it gives us a lot more opportunities (to set up the press).

"I'd have to agree with Steve (Henson); we didn't do a good job of trapping (in Manhattan)," he added.

Even though Henson's words inspired the Sooners, Grace said OU didn't look at Saturday's game as a chance to gain revenge.

"This really wasn't a payback," he said. "Our goal is to win the Big Eight Conference championship and we have to go through Kansas State to do it."

Same old story as Lady Cats fall to Oklahoma

By Chase Clark
Sports Writer

Once again, K-State's women's basketball team found itself with a narrow halftime lead, but was unable to hold on to claim a victory in the second half.

The Lady Cats went to the Lloyd Noble Center in Norman, Okla., Saturday to play the University of Oklahoma Lady Sooners. And, a few hours later, they left after Oklahoma beat them, 79-61, for the second time this season.

"I think we held on and played with them as long as we could," K-State coach Matilda Mossman said. "In the second half, we didn't come out with a lot of intensity and Oklahoma did. But, give Oklahoma credit. They've got a very good basketball team and they've got some great athletes."

K-State held the lead for most of the first half by controlling the ball on both ends of the floor. But Oklahoma outscored the Lady Cats 52-28 in the second half to turn it into an Oklahoma rout.

"When the second half started, they just turned on the burners a little bit," Mossman said. "We lost our intensity and didn't shoot the ball very well. They managed to get ahead of us by a bunch just because we didn't shoot very well."

With the loss, K-State dropped to 8-15 overall and 1-9 in the Big Eight Conference. Oklahoma raised its record to 12-10 overall and 5-5 in the Big Eight.

Oklahoma struck first with a 3-point shot on its opening possession, but saw K-State run up a 10-3 lead in the next five minutes before the Lady Sooners scored again.

Oklahoma fought back steadily with a couple of small offensive runs and pressured the Lady Cats full court. A basket by Oklahoma's Lee Brock with 7:21 left in the half gave Oklahoma a 19-18 lead.

The lead bounced back and forth for the next 4½ minutes, as neither team was able to pull out in front. But K-State had a six-point run to end the half and went into the locker-room with a 33-27 halftime edge.

After shooting 52 percent from the field in the first half, the Lady Cats connected on only 36 percent of their shots in the second stanza.

"Oklahoma did the same thing Nebraska did to us a week ago," Mossman said. "They came back out in the second half in a zone and we didn't do the things execution wise to beat the zone defense."

Oklahoma, after shooting a cold 28 percent in the first half, set the floor on fire in the second half, shooting 57 percent from the field.

The Lady Sooners outscored K-State 11-1 in the opening minutes of the second half to take a 38-34 lead, as K-State didn't net a field goal until the 14:15 mark in the second stanza.

From then on, the game belonged to Oklahoma and Lady Sooner Jo Mosley, who scored 18 points in the second half. K-State steadily fell further and further behind. The Lady Sooners continued to increase their lead right up to the final basket, winning by 18 points, 79-61.

"They really took the ball to (Jo Mosley) more in the second half," Mossman said. "We weren't getting around her well enough and when she catches the ball it's all over. You've got to keep Jo from catching the ball or she can make a difference."

The Lady Cats were led by Nadira Hazim with 17 points. Diana Miller followed with 13 points, Janet Madsen had nine points and Rita Matteucci netted eight points.

K-State kept Oklahoma off the boards in the first half, but was unable to grab many caroms in the second half, as Oklahoma outrebounded the Lady Cats, 45-37, in the game.

K-State's Miller had eight boards, Kristie Bahner grabbed seven caroms and Elyse Funk and Hazim had four each.

The majority of Oklahoma's scoring came from Mosley and Erika Notzke. The pair combined for 41 of the Lady Sooner's 79 points. Mosley led all scorers with 22 points and Notzke netted 19 points. Margaret McKeon collected eight points and Tina Ogden scored seven points.

Mosley also led Oklahoma in rebounding with nine caroms. Terry Willis, Notzke and Odgen grabbed five boards each during the contest.

Track teams' weekend tough

Struckhoff only victor

By The Collegian Staff

K-State men's and women's indoor track teams claimed one first place and one national-qualifying mark at the Husker Invitational track meet which concluded in Lincoln, Neb., Saturday.

K-State track coach John Capriotti admitted having mixed emotions about his team's performance at the meet.

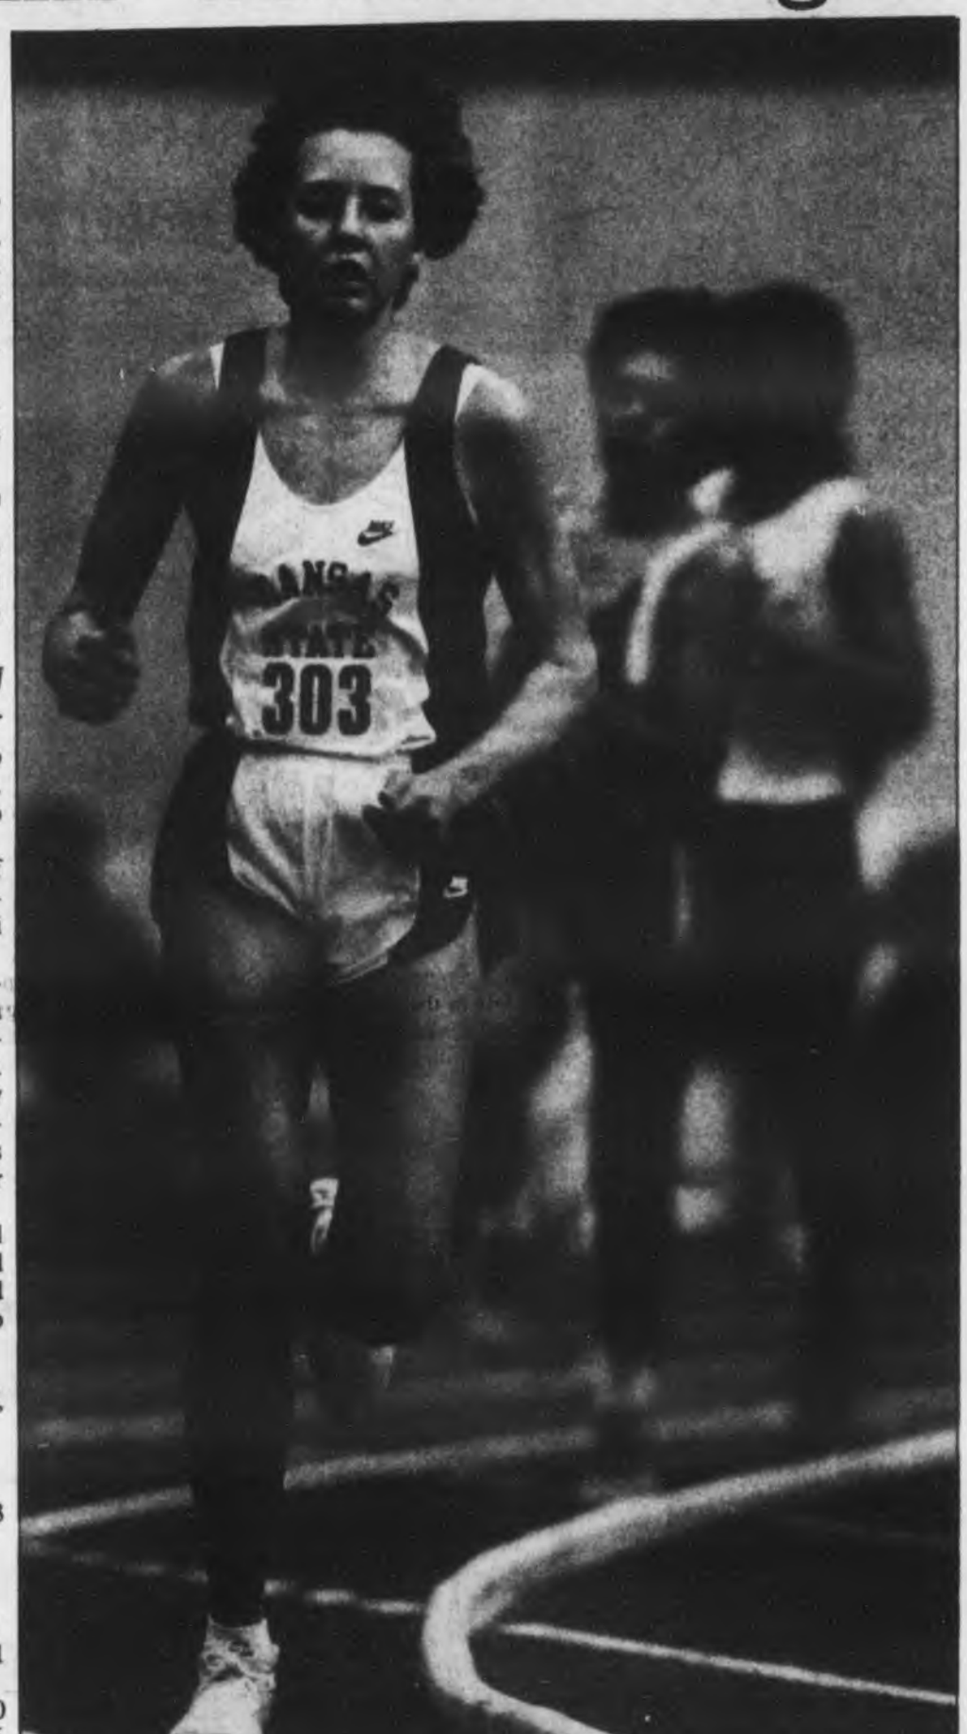
"I think we're going to have to get better if we expect to finish in the top half of the conference for both men and women."
—John Capriotti

"We had some athletes who did a good job and others who didn't run as well," he said. "We still have a lot of people who need to do a lot of work.

"I think we're going to have to get better if we expect to finish in the top half of the conference for both men and women," Capriotti added.

Jacque Struckhoff gained first place honors in the women's 5,000-meter run with a time of 16:52.4. The win was the only individual title the Wildcats saw at the invitational.

Failing to garner a first place finish, Joy Jones nevertheless earned a national-qualifying mark in the women's 200 meters with a time of 24.35. The clocking placed her second in the event.



On the men's side, the top individual finisher was Dan O'Mara, who placed second in the shot put with a toss of 57'¼ ". Brad Speer leaped 6'-11¼ " in the high jump to finish third in that event.

Tickets in short supply for Big Eight tournament

By Brian Hummell
Collegian Reporter

Persons who ordered tickets for the Big Eight Conference men's postseason basketball tournament March 11-13 through K-State have a slim chance of receiving them.

Carol Adolph, K-State ticket manager, said the Big Eight allotted 525 tickets to each school, and she received more than 1,000 requests for tickets to the tournament.

"Every school in the conference had requests over their allotment," Adolph said. "Everybody's crying for more tickets."

Adolph said she tried to no avail to get extra tickets for K-State.

"They didn't even have enough tickets to fill the corporate sponsors' requests," she said.

Adolph said last year she was able to fill all of the requests for tickets, but last year's requests were fewer and the number of tickets allotted each school was greater. The increased corporate sponsorship by Phillips 66 is the reason the number of tickets available to each school was reduced.

Adolph said she received the tickets last week, and information will be in the mail by today to tell the applicants the fate of their request. She said distribution of the tickets will be on a priority basis.

"The top priority is for contributors to the Mike Ahearn Scholarship Fund, and they are ranked based on the level of their contribution," Adolph said.

Craig Renfro, director of the fund, said many of the Wildcat Club members ($150 contributors) will not receive tickets to the tournament. This also means members of the I Contributed A Twenty (ICAT) group will not receive tickets, although it was one of the listed benefits of being an ICAT member.

"We didn't foresee the demand or anticipate the cut in tickets," Renfro said. "We're trying to do everything we can to help (ICAT) get tickets."

Renfro said the possibility of getting tickets still exists, but stressed there are no guarantees. One option would be to try to buy tickets from the schools who lose in the first round of the tournament March 11.

"In the past, many of the fans whose school loses in the first round have sold their tickets at face value."

Another option is to trade tickets with fans from a school in an opposite session. This option is still in the formulation stage, and, once again, there is no guarantee.

"We're contacting the other schools, but, of course, the brackets aren't even out yet," Renfro said.

Basketball crowd capacity for the site of the tournament, Kansas City, Mo.'s Kemper Arena, is about 16,800, Renfro said.

Tennis team gets win

By The Collegian Staff

Nasty weather almost ruined the K-State women's tennis team's weekend. But the nasty weather didn't get the squad down, as it beat Southwest Missouri State Saturday, 8-1, in Springfield, Mo.

The netters were scheduled to play Arkansas-Little Rock Friday, but inclement weather prevented that team from traveling to Springfield. Consequently, K-State played a practice match against Kansas, who was also scheduled to participate in the meet.

"The KU match was very worthwhile," Coach Steve Bietau said. "We weren't so intimidated by them.

"Against SMS, we showed a lot of improvement with things we had worked on during the week," Bietau said.

Speed skater's day finishes in disaster

By The Associated Press

CALGARY, Alberta — The day began in tragedy and ended in disaster for Dan Jansen, a U.S. speed skater who carried the Winter Olympic hopes of America and the inspiration of his dying sister.

Jansen's sister, Jane, died of leukemia Sunday morning, and several hours later, the world sprint champion fell in the 500-meter race.

"Maybe it just wasn't meant to be," he said. "My family doesn't want me to go home now and I know Jane wouldn't want that."

After one false start, Jansen slid out of the inside lane and crashed into Yasushi Kuroiwa. Jansen got up and slapped his knees. He jerked his hood off and hid his head in his hands. Frustration and sorrow were etched on his face.

Kuroiwa was given another chance in the 500 meters. Jansen, who was not allowed a reskate, will have to wait until Thursday's 1,000 meters to go for the gold medal.

Jansen said the fall came so fast. "I can't remember much. My first 100 wasn't normal for me. It felt like it slipped out from under me, and the next thing I knew I was in the mats."

The speed skating gold went to Jens-Uwe Mey of East Germany in a world-record time of 36.45 seconds. Jan Ykema of the Netherlands won the silver, and Akira Kuroiwa of Japan got the bronze. Thometz finished eighth.

"It's been a real tough time for the people on the team," U.S. Coach Mike Crowe said. "We pulled together a little tonight for Dan. It was difficult for people to get up and skate the way they would have liked."

Earlier in the day, a barroom brawler from Finland, Matti Nykanen, easily won the 70-meter event. He can become the first jumper in the Olympics to win two gold medals if he defends his Olympic title on the 90-meter hill.

Parity evident in conference

MU beats UNLV, Buffs win again

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The uncharacteristic, unwelcome cold stretch that dropped Missouri out of the Top Twenty seems finished.

And so does Missouri's Top Twenty absence, Coach Norm Stewart hopes.

"When we're playing real well I don't see why we're not ranked as high as any other team with five losses," Stewart said Saturday after his Tigers beat No. 7 Nevada-Las Vegas 81-79. Missouri beat the homestanding Rebels before a frenzied crowd of 19,000 in one of the country's toughest arenas. What's more, a national television audience saw the Big Eight's defending champions raise their overall record to 16-5.

"I see a lot of ballclubs in the top six or seven that are traditional teams," Stewart said. "They just put them there because of their names."

K-State's one-week excursion into the Top Twenty proved bumpy. After losing by four points at Missouri earlier in the week, the 14th-ranked Wildcats found themselves at No. 4 Oklahoma. The Sooners, avenging a 69-62 loss at Kansas State, crunched the 'Cats 112-95 to widen their lead in the conference race.

Also Saturday, Colorado nipped Oklahoma State 73-71 and Kansas extracted some vengenace of its own by whipping the slumping Iowa State Cyclones 82-72.

The Sooners, 22-2 overall, sport an 8-1 conference mark while K-State fades to 6-2.

Missouri's Derrick Chievous scored 26 points and Byron Irvin had 17 in a victory that Stewart ranks among his all-time best.

"We told our guys we've had some great wins and this goes with the best of them," Stewart said. "We played some great basketball in the first half."

Missouri mounted a big lead, dropped behind and then recovered to become only the fourth visitor in five years to win in Las Vegas.

"They are a really good ballclub," said Las Vegas Coach Jerry Tarkanian. "They played a great game against us."

Oklahoma got double-figure scoring from five players and shot 55 percent from the floor, a big contrast to the 31 percent they shot in January at K-State.

"You see what 55 percent will produce for you instead of 31 percent," Oklahoma Coach Billy Tubbs said. "It's no secret."

K-State fell to 14-6 despite a career-high 41 points from Mitch Richmond.

Mookie Blaylock scored 21 points for the Sooners and had five steals to raise his season total to 102 and eclipse the NCAA record for juniors of 100 by Leroy Allen of Hofstra.

"I don't think we took care of things like we did against them before," Richmond said. "Before, we were more involved and more alert."

Scott Wilkie scored 19 points and Steve Wise had 14 as Colorado raised its overall record to 6-15 and its Big Eight mark to 2-6 with its second straight victory. Wise hit two free throws with one second to play to lock up the victory. Freshman Richard Dumas scored 27 points for the Cowboys, 12-10, 3-5.

Kansas' Danny Manning, who always seems to be on top of his game against Iowa State, punished the Cyclones for a season-high 39 points. Kansas, 4-4 and 15-8, led 44-34 at halftime and ran off 10 straight points midway through the second half.

In Iowa State's victory over Kansas earlier this year, Manning had 32 points.

"They come out and play us man-to-man, and my teammates did a wonderful job of getting me the ball in scoring position," said Manning, the Big Eight's player of the year the past two seasons. "Coach (Larry) Brown wants us to play unselfish, and that's the way I had to be."

Iowa State, 2-7, 16-9, has lost seven straight. The Cyclones were led by Jeff Grayer's 30 points.

"We stayed together well and played together well, but Danny Manning was just too much," said Iowa State Coach Johnny Orr. "I thought our kids played good defense against him, but you can't do much when they call fouls against you every time you touch him. But again, Manning was terrific."

Jazz bands rock McCain

Students receive ratings

By Angela Hale
Collegian Reporter

The music of screaming trumpets, sultry saxophones and all that jazz reverberated throughout McCain Auditorium Friday.

The 19th Annual Central States Jazz Festival consisted of 20 bands on the junior high, high school and college level which performed for ratings and individual evaluations.

Each band was given three written critiques, one oral critique and a rating. The ratings were based on a I to V system, with a I being superior.

The judges for the all-day festival were members of the U.S. Air Force Falconaires jazz band from the academy in Colorado Springs, Colo. This was the Falconaire's second year at the festival.

The bands were judged on their ensemble playing, musicality and techniques, said Rich Inouye, judge and baritone saxophone player for the Falconaires.

The bands were also judged on the ablilities and techniques of individual musicians, Inouye said.

In addition, each band was judged on sight reading ability. Each band and director was given a new and unfamiliar piece of music. Then the director was given a short time to study and explain the music to the students, who then performed the piece.

"This (sight reading) can tell a lot about a band," said Alfred Cochran, assistant professor of music and organizer of the festival.

"It gives the students and the director a chance to be put on the spot," he said.

The festival was a chance for the bands to get some new input on their music, said Brian Eckman, freshman at Salina Central High School.

"They (the Falconaires) showed us how to interpret the music differently," he said.

Vocalist Ron Hopkins, sophomore in music, performs Friday with the K-State Jazz Lab Number One at the 19th Annual Central States Jazz Festival in McCain Auditorium.

Tim Pottorff, piano player for the Tulsa Combo and graduate student at Tulsa University, said the festival was a "top-notch" event.

"The Midwest lacks in jazz festivals. It's worth it to travel to Manhattan," he said.

Dave Hardin, director of the Falconaires jazz band, also said he thought it was a worthy trip.

"We like to come back to Manhattan. There's always a high quality here," Hardin said.

The highlights of the day were the two performances given by the Falconaires — one in the afternoon and one evening concert.

The Falconaires' selections included "Easy to Love," which featured fancy-fingering by the saxophone section, and "Crossroads," which featured a female vocalist.

During the afternoon judging, one band was chosen to precede the Falconaires for the evening concert. This honor was given to the Tulsa University band.

The K-State Concert Jazz Ensemble also performed in the evening and Cochran said he was happy with the performance.

"I was proud of our band. They really sizzled," he said.

There were also several awards given at the evening concert. A full tuition scholarship to a summer jazz camp was given to a tenor saxophone player from Topeka Seaman High School and a director's award was given to Ben Rohrer, director of the Cloud County Community College jazz band. Rohrer received paid tuition to a director's summer camp.

Uncle Sam requires Civil Service exams

By The Collegian Staff

At this time of year, the words money and government usually add up to possible tax returns. These two words can, however, mean income opportunities in the form of government jobs.

Seniors graduating this spring or those looking for a summer job may find Uncle Sam a possible employer. The Civil Service offers jobs that reflect almost all areas of private employment.

Most Civil Service jobs require that the applicant take a Civil Service test.

Bruce Laughlin, director of Career Planning and Placement, said that there are two types of tests.

One type is the assembled test. For this type of test, applicants are notified to meet at a specific place and time to take a written examination or some form of performance test.

The other type is called an unassembled test. It consists of sending documentation on past experience and education to the Civil Service Commission.

After the examination process is complete, the applicants are rated on their performance. When an agency needs a position filled, information on the top three applicants is sent to the agency.

These applicants are then contacted, and asked to fill the position. Once the position is filled the names of the other applicants are returned to the Civil Service for future reference.

Laughlin said that students wishing to increase their chances of landing a government job should make several applications.

"Just because you apply to one agency doesn't mean that the application will be sent to any other agencies," he said.

Those who are about to take a Civil Service test can find tutorial materials at both Farrell Library and the Manhattan Public Library.

These materials give information on the different occupations available and give sample questions for the applicant to study.

Biden undergoes aneurysm surgery

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr. of Delaware was listed in satisfactory condition Sunday after undergoing surgery to correct a burst aneurysm in an artery supplying blood to his brain, a hospital spokesman said.

The 45-year-old senator, who remained in intensive care at Walter Reed Army Medical Center, was "alert and talking to his family and resting comfortably," said Michael McGinnis, a spokesman for the hospital.

"Senator Biden, following surgery, continues to progress toward recovery," McGinnis said. "His condition has been updated to satisfactory and his physicians are very pleased with his progress so far."

Biden, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee and a former Democratic presidential contender, had been listed as "seriously ill" following eight hours of surgery Friday.

The aneurysm, which is a sac formed at a weak spot on the artery wall, burst, forcing doctors to proceed with the surgery, McGinnis said. A burst aneurysm, left untreated, could shut off the flow of blood to the brain.

Hospital spokesman Pete Esker said Saturday the aneurysm was within Biden's cranium, but underneath the brain. The surgery did not involve removal of any brain tissue, the spokesman said.

Pete Smith, an aide to Biden, said the senator was expected to suffer no significant after effects from the surgery.

Biden was admitted to the hospital early Friday after being transferred from St. Francis Hospital in Wilmington, Del., where he lives.

Pilot tricks hijackers, lands plane safely

By The Associated Press

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania — A Tanzania Airways pilot tricked four hijackers into believing he had flown them to Kenya, then landed his plane at a Tanzanian airport where troops overpowered and arrested the young men Sunday.

Capt. Dominic Ngandile also managed to send a secret distress signal to the Dar es Salaam airport, which turned off its terminal and runway lights, making it look like a small Kenyan airport, authorities said.

After landing, the pilot stalled the assailants, telling them they would have to wait until daylight to refuel the plane. Just before dawn army troops stormed the plane and arrested the hijackers.

The hijackers stabbed Ngandile in the neck and hands after they realized they had been tricked. His co-pilot, Christopher Mnika, suffered cuts on his hands. The injuries were not serious, said airline and security sources who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Among the 70 passengers on the Saturday night flight were two senior government officials — Home Affairs Minister Muhidin Kimario and Hamad Rashid Mohamed, deputy minister for finance, economic affairs and planning. None of the passengers were hurt.

Officials said the four hijackers arrested Sunday made no political statements or claimed any affiliations and that their only demand was to be flown to London.

The Boeing 737 carried a crew of six on the internal flight between Dar es Salaam, the capital, and Kilimanjaro, a northern town near the Kenya border and the site of Mount Kilimanjaro, Africa's highest mountain.

Shihata, the government-owned news agency, said the four hijackers were from Zanzibar, the semi-autonomous Indian Ocean island nation that with the mainland forms the Republic of Tanzania. It said they were aged between 17 and 20.

"The hijackers carried two toy guns, a knife and a fake grenade," Shihata reported.

The hijacking occurred at 9:17 p.m. Saturday, midway in the 50-minute flight.

"After takeoff, three youths stormed into the cockpit and announced that the flight had been hijacked and that they were going to London via Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, and Egypt," government-owned Radio Tanzania reported.

Ngandile told the hijackers that the plane did not have enough fuel to reach Addis Ababa and suggested he refuel instead at a small airport at Ludwar, Kenya, the sources said.

The hijackers agreed.

Instead of heading for Kenya, Ngandile flew the plane in a wide arc and headed back to Dar es Salaam. After he sent the secret distress signal, airport officials turned off some airport lights.

The Boeing 737 landed about 10:30 p.m. and taxied to the old Dar es Salaam terminal.

Deadly force rarely used

Practice constant for police

By The Collegian Staff

Although K-State's police officers have only fired a gun once in the past 17 years, they are continually updating their skills.

"In the last 17 years, only once has a University police officer discharged a weapon in the line of duty," said Charles Beckom, K-State Police chief.

The shot was fired in an incident with a fleeing suspect and a number of officers, he said.

Officers are only allowed to use their firearms:

- in defense of another officer's or person's life;
- as a defense from attack or serious injury from another person;
- to capture or prevent the escape of a person who the officer believes is a felon;
- to kill a dangerous animal;
- for practice at an approved range;
- and to stop a moving vehicle when there is a fleeing felon involved or there is a threat to a person's life.

"The firearm policy used by the University police department is a lot more stringent than what Kansas law requires," Beckom said. "We like to keep our policy well within the text of the law."

Kansas law allows enforcement officers to use deadly force with a firearm in any instance where a felony has been committed in order to apprehend the suspect.

The department's firearm policy states there is no justification for warning shots and that none will be fired. This reduces the chance of injuries from a warning shot, Beckom said.

"University police officers are as well qualified with as much training in appropriate use of force as any law enforcement agency in the state and even better than some," Beckom said.

The department has 14 noncommissioned officers and 21 commissioned officers. Only commissioned officers are allowed to carry a firearm.

Commissioned officers are required to go through four stages of training, Beckom said. The stages include the care and handling of the weapon, how to fire the weapon, when to use the weapon and retraining to maintain the officer's level of proficiency.

Despite the intense firearm training, Beckom said, firearms are used as a last resort.

"We still try to teach our people that the weapon is the last resort and that there are other means that should be used before a weapon should be considered," he said. "You should use your head and plan things out before you jump in. But in many cases, your actions are dictated by the individual you are dealing with."

K-State police officers are initially trained at the Kansas Law Enforcement Training Center in Hutchinson. They must also requalify with their weapon four times a year.

The department also trains and attends presentations with the Riley County Police Department. Training jointly saves both departments money, Beckom said.

Alumni Board helps recruit prospective college students

By The Collegian Staff

The Student Alumni Board knows it is hard for high school seniors to choose a university. That's why the members travel almost 2,310 miles each year to discuss K-State and its programs.

The 24-member board conducts about nine Career Counselor nights each year in Kansas communities to discuss different aspects of college life.

"The object of Career Counselor nights is to increase high school students' awareness of the opportunities open to students at K-State," said Becky Klingler, field director of alumni programs.

The board discusses the activities and housing options available at K-State, and gives the students tips on how to adjust to college life.

A representative of the administration also discusses K-State's programs and opportunities available to students.

Following the group discussion, prospective students discuss career opportunities with the board members who are majoring in their interest area and alumni who graduated within the major.

Parents of the prospective students meet with personnel from the financial aid office to discuss options a college career.

The board also conducts a Student Life Seminar during the All University Open House. About 700 students and their parents attended the seminar last year, which is similar to Career Counselor nights.

This year, the board is expecting about 1,100 people to attend the seminar, Klingler said.

Board members are also responsible for maintaining positive relations with alumni.

The members attend class reunions each April and some alumni events in their region.

Southern primaries may decide race

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — What happens in New Hampshire may decide who among the Democratic presidential candidates get to go South with Jesse Jackson and Albert Gore Jr., while Pat Robertson is looking forward to the first Republican contest in the South no matter what happens Tuesday.

Analysts say that Robertson, who in Iowa pushed up between frontrunners Bob Dole and George Bush, will be on his friendliest turf when the presidential season moves into its Southern phase. In New Hampshire, polls put him in a dead heat for third place with Rep. Jack Kemp of New York and former Delaware Gov. Pete du Pont.

Contests are scheduled in Wyoming, South Dakota and a handful of other states in the three weeks after Tuesday's New Hampshire primary.

The next main event is the Super Tuesday primary across most of the South and in several other states on March 8, but the South Carolina primary three days before that could emerge as a crucial GOP test.

"There's tremendous potential for Robertson to be a spoiler here," said Earl Black, political scientist at the University of South Carolina. "He's putting a lot of money and organizational effort into South Carolina. He's thrown down the gauntlet, and I think he's in position to back that up."

On the Democratic side, the presidential race in the South will be shaped by New Hampshire's results.

Iowa winner Richard Gephardt hopes that a second-place finish behind local favorite Michael Dukakis, governor of neighboring Massachusetts, will propel the Missouri congressman into a strong position to face the South's native son, Gore of Tennessee.

A Gephardt finish behind Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois and Dukakis, however, could leave the field still muddled as it turns South — a page right out of Gore's script.

Former Colorado Sen. Gary Hart and former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt have been polling at the bottom of the Democratic pack in New Hampshire, and are hoping Tuesday for surprising finishes to keep their faltering campaigns alive long enough for Super Tuesday.

Already, there are signs of bad blood between the rival campaigns of Gephardt and Gore, who is competing in New Hampshire but has reserved most of his money for the Southern campaign. Both Democrats have designs on the white, moderate-to-conservative Democratic vote in the South.

South Carolina Republicans, dominated by loyalists to Bush, set up their primary on Saturday March 5 in hopes it would give the vice president a boost in case he needed it before the Super Tuesday primaries in the rest of the South.

But now Robertson, a former TV evangelist who lives in West Virginia, has targeted South Carolina as his next best chance and predicted he will win it outright.

Robertson's strong Iowa second-place finish behind Dole, handing Bush a humiliating third place, was explained in part by Robertson's strong organization among fundamentalist and charismatic Christian voters and the traditionally low turnout of caucus contests.

Bush is credited with a Southern organization far superior to that of Dole, and polls show him far and away the Southern leader. But a loss in New Hampshire to the Senate minority leader from Kansas could leave Bush struggling to hang on to both his organization and his poll lead.

Dole has had his wife, Elizabeth, a native of North Carolina, working the region for him. Her home state is considered a key strength for Dole in the South.

Party election reform considered by Soviets

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Communist Party activists proposed in an article on the front page of Pravda on Sunday that more than one candidate be put forward for top party posts and that all party members be allowed to vote.

The suggestions, appearing in the party's main newspaper, came from party activists in the Ukraine.

Although the proposals do not have the party's formal approval, their appearance on Pravda's front page indicated the leadership is seriously considering them.

The article said the issue would be formally taken up at the 19th All-Union Party Conference, a rare gathering of the nation's Communists to be held June 28 in Moscow.

Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev has said electoral reform will be a key topic at the conference. He has talked about many of the same suggestions printed in Pravda, beginning at a plenary meeting of the party's Central Committee in January 1986.

At that session, he raised the issue of secret ballots and discussed the possibilities of giving party members a choice in voting for top party officials.

He also criticized the system that allows bureaucrats to remain in party posts for life while performing little work. He talked about broadening the nomination procedure for government elections.

Some of the suggestions have been adopted experimentally. Last June, "multiple-candidate elections" for local party posts were held in several areas. The government called the system democratization, although all candidates must be approved by the Communist Party, and no other parties can be created.

In the June experiments, party members in one of every 25 voting districts chose among more than one candidate for local governing councils. Runoff elections had to be held in 59 of the Soviet Union's 52,000 districts because candidates tied.

Although there has been no firm indication whether the experiment will be expanded, continuing articles in the press indicate the idea is still very much alive. The party conference in June could set the stage for making the system permanent and nationwide.

Gorbachev has also brought a little democracy to the working place. The Soviet parliament, known as the Supreme Soviet, last June approved competitive elections for managers of state enterprises to make them more accountable.

In its report on a meeting of Kiev University Communists, Pravda said there would be a diversity of views if more than one candidate ran for party first secretary.

"What will remain is a struggle of opinions, a debate, a search for alternatives, variations and a choice of the best among them," Pravda said.

Currently, only top party bodies elect the first secretary, and any debate about whom to choose is held behind closed doors. The first secretary is the top party official. The post exists at the city, regional and republic level.

Pravda also carried a suggestion that all Communists take part in the voting, not just the members of party committees, and that the balloting be conducted secretly.

These electoral changes, the newspaper said, would help make top party officials more accountable to the people, and eliminate the "cult of personality" that surrounds them.

Ouster

The 202-page document established Waldheim's "close proximity" to wartime atrocities in the Balkans and seriously questioned his integrity as a German army officer.

The tabloid Kurier published on Sunday an interview in which Waldheim said he has no plans to resign because he enjoys the support of a "great" and "silent" majority.

"I feel the group who makes the demand that I should resign is relatively small compared to those who want me to stay in office," the president was quoted as saying.

In a comment published in early Monday editions of the Kurier, Waldheim was quoted as saying he continued to be "interested in a constructive relationship with the federal chancellor."

But Vranitzky, when asked how Austria could emerge from a situation in which the country faced a bad image abroad and division at home, said: "We must try to get out of this situation by not satisfying ourselves with allowing the president not to face up to these things."

Vranitzky said it was not enough for the president to give newspaper interviews because "interviews don't replace the question-and-answer game in a democracy."

He warned that if his expectations about the president's conduct are not fulfilled and if a high percentage of his time continues to be absorbed by the Waldheim affair, "then the question arises if I can ... carry on this (government post)."

The Socialists are the senior partner in the coalition with the conservative Austrian People's Party, which backed Waldheim when he won his six-year term in 1986.

Heinrich Keller, a chief Socialist secretary, reported Saturday that for the first time a majority of party members now want Waldheim to resign.

On Sunday Vranitzky said he questioned Waldheim's ability to perform his duties.

"The federal president must be an integration figure, not a disintegration figure," he said.

Vranitzky also criticized Waldheim and his advisers for trying to portray the attacks on the president as something orchestrated by Jews.

Exercise could prevent cancer

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — Girls should be encouraged to exercise vigorously enough to delay their puberty, because this may help protect them from breast cancer and other diseases later in life, a researcher said Sunday.

Grade school girls who play strenuous sports often have their first menstrual period, or menarche, later than usual. Even after adolescence starts, they may miss periods if they exercise regularly.

Although delayed or missing menstruation is often thought to be abnormal, some experts now say that it is natural and even desirable, because it may protect the body from the damaging effects of sex hormones.

American girls have been going through puberty at increasingly early ages throughout this century.

Dr. Rose E. Frisch of the Harvard School of Public Health said that typically American girls now have their first period at age 12½ . But if they exercise in such vigorous sports as tennis, running, basketball or soccer, their average age at menarche is 15½ , the same as it was 100 years ago.

And Frisch said a simple rule seems to apply: The more menstrual cycles a woman has over her lifetime, the greater her chance of breast cancer, the biggest cancer killer among U.S. women. So anything that delays the start of menstruation should lower the cancer risk.

"I suggest that regular exercise starting early in elementary school would have a long-term spin-off in reduced risk of breast cancer and, from our data, a reduced risk of diabetes and cancer of the reproductive system," Frisch said.

She and other experts who study the effects of exercise on reproduction presented their work at a meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Recent federal statistics suggest that the risk of dying from breast cancer may actually be increasing.

Dr. Jack Fishman of Rockefeller University said breast cancer may take 40 years to develop. "What you do in puberty can be very relevant to what happens in breast cancer after menopause," he said.

Frisch based her recommendation, in part, on a study she conducted on 5,398 women who graduated from 10 U.S. colleges. She found that those who had been athletic in college and high school had only about half as much cancer of the breast and reproductive system later in life as those who didn't get regular exercise.

Those who have delayed or irregular periods during their teen-age years seem to suffer no long-term problems. Frisch's study found that athletic women had just as many children as those who were less active.

Dr. Tenley E. Albright, a Boston surgeon who was an Olympic skating champion, said coaches and parents often consider delayed or missing periods to be a disorder, while young athletes often do not.

She said the condition should be thought of as an "appropriate adaptive response" by the body, not a defect.

When Bush said he expected the Soviets to go forward with a promised troop withdrawal from Afghanistan, Rep. Jack Kemp of New York said heatedly, "We have a State Department that has run amok on this issue."

"Wait and see," said Bush. "Don't fight progress when you see it. Don't be afraid."

Bush tried to close out the argument, saying, "I don't jump away from the president when the going gets tough" and then added, "Give peace a chance" which brought another outburst from Kemp.

"You're using the same language as Jim Wright," he said in a reference to the Democratic speaker of the House and arch-villain in current GOP mythology.

"You should be embarrassed to use give peace a chance," he said. "We're the party of peace."

Dole has eliminated Bush's once formidable lead in the New Hampshire polls since he scored a convincing victory in Iowa caucuses last Monday and the vice president wound up third.

He and Bush are locked in a battle for first, although the polls all indicate the tide is flowing in Dole's direction.

they will have to pay back the money they borrow from loan programs, he said. This places an added burden on those students who enroll in college already with debts, such as non-traditional students.

However some new programs could benefit non-traditional students, said Larry Viterna, director of the office of student financial assistance. These would allow students to treat their assets differently, such as allowing them to estimate their income in the coming year rather than reporting the previous year's income.

Also, deferment programs exist for students who find themselves unemployed when their loan payments begin to come due. Students are now allowed to consolidate all of their student loans and the student financial aid office provides some budget planning services, he said.

Difficult economic times can, however, benefit the students by making their need for financial assistance more justified, Hoyt said.

Financial aid and scholarships are a big priority for prospective college students, said Dana Jaax, K-State admissions representative. She is responsible for recruitment in Geary, Dickinson, Marion, Butler and Sedgwick counties.

"A lot of students I face want to come to K-State but can't," she said, explaining that economic troubles sometimes force them to stay closer to home.

"Students tend to stay close to home and live with their parents and work" while going to school, Jaax said.

She said this is especially true around Wichita where students will attend The Wichita State University if they are unable to attend K-State, or students in rural parts of Kansas might attend a junior college for a year or two before moving on to a four-year university.

Forecasts for Kansas' economy show only a modest increase in the next year, with short- to medium-term outlooks showing fairly flat economic activity, said M. Jarvin Emerson, head of the Department of Economics and professor of economics.

Employment growth will slow in 1988 to about 1.5 percent while personal income will increase 4.9 percent and farm income will rise about 4.2 percent, according to a new Kansas economic forecast provided by Emerson's office.

The farm economy in Kansas experienced two rather extreme swings in that the 1970s were better than normal and the 1980s have been worse than normal, he said.

It appears the farm economy will get neither significantly better nor significantly worse any time soon, Emerson said.

"I think it is fair to look at the results."

With less than 48 hours to go before the first votes are cast, Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois switched to attacking Dukakis, the clear front-runner in the Democratic field. Simon dropped his controversial focus on Missouri Rep. Richard Gephardt, with whom he is battling for the No. 2 spot.

"In endorsing Paul Simon for president, the Lawrence Eagle-Tribune of Massachusetts said 'President Dukakis would head a bureaucracy. President Simon would head a nation of people,"' the ad said.

Simon denied that the ad change had anything to do with Gephardt's harsh criticism of the commercials.

For his part, Gephardt has a television ad calling Dukakis "one of the biggest tax raisers in Massachusetts history." The Missouri congressman rejected suggestions he embraced Reaganomics in 1981 as "balderdash," saying the question was "were we for the tax cut for the middle class or we were not?"

ager, told the Collegian last week that allocation of tickets would be on a priority basis.

"The top priority is for contributors to the Mike Ahearn Scholarship Fund, and they are ranked based on the level of their contribution," Adolph said.

What that means, in simple English, is that those rich alumni who helped K-State raise money for athletic scholarships are going to be in the Kemper while those of us currently attending K-State are going to be watching at home on TV.

I don't have anything against our alumni. I love them. I'm one of them now, for gosh sakes. I just think it's unfortunate that Fred Bramlage is going to be on the front row in KC while those of us who helped him make the new coliseum a reality — the students of K-State — are nowhere near the arena.

I'm a member of ICAT (K-State's student based organization that contributes money to the Ahearn fund), and as a member I thought one of my benefits was getting tickets to the tournament. Guess the folks upstairs in Ahearn spoke too soon. You should never, ever promise what you don't know for sure you can deliver.

This is not intended to be an indictment of ICAT or those running the organization. I love K-State athletics and will do everything I can to support our programs from now until the end of time.

There are several questions surrounding the process that I think we need some answers to, however. Can corporate sponsors really be using almost 12,000 tickets? Will we as students of conference institutions ever get tickets to a tournament designed for the fan? Will the conference and our athletic department learn from their mistakes?

Only time and a few phone calls can or will give us answers to any of these questions. But for now, all I know is that you and I — as students at K-State — aren't likely to get to watch our Top Twenty team play in its conference tourney, despite assurances that our athletic department is out there trying to find us tickets.

Damn, that makes me mad!

Candidates sprint toward finish line in New Hampshire

By The Associated Press

CONCORD, N.H. — Vice President George Bush forecast a win but Sen. Bob Dole showed confidence Monday as the GOP presidential field sprinted for the finish line in a tight New Hampshire primary race. Democrat Michael Dukakis said his expected win might be smaller than predicted.

Bush campaigned side by side with former Sen. Barry Goldwater, patron saint of conservatives, as he threw all his campaign could muster into a bid to arrest Dole's week-long surge and regain his own political footing.

One candidate after another posted hopeful predictions of a surprise when New Hampshire voters render their verdict in the nation's lead-off primary today.

"I don't know where all those political pundits are today but they ran for cover four years ago and they're likely to run for cover tomorrow," said former Delaware Gov. Pete du Pont, back in the pack in the GOP race.

Rep. Jack Kemp, his GOP candidacy on the line, held out the hope of a second-place finish that would confound the pollsters. "I'm going to finish in a good competitive third or higher," he said.

Democratic Sen. Paul Simon, also facing tough times if he falters, said he was sure he'd defeat Rep. Richard Gephardt for second place. Referring to Dukakis' commanding lead in the polls, he said, "I think there is a possibility of a real surprise coming tomorrow."

Fellow Democrat Bruce Babbitt, far off the pace in the polls, said, "I'm anticipating a strong showing and a surprise but I can't put a number on it."

Former television evangelist Pat Robertson bid to deal with a tempest that arose over his claim that the Soviet Union has offensive nulcear missiles in Cuba. The Reagan administration denied the claim but the GOP hopeful said, "The least we can do is remove those nuclear missiles."

Democrat Dukakis' lead seemed secure, to judge by the polls, but he and his aides worried that they would be held to an impossible standard

Associate Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor arrives with her husband, John, at the Manhattan Airport Monday afternoon. O'Connor will deliver the first Landon Lecture today to kick off K-State's year-long celebration of its 125th anniversary.

O'Connor arrives for lecture

By Judy Lundstrom
Editor

At 3:10 p.m. Monday, a twin-engine plane landed quietly at the Manhattan Municipal Airport.

The door opened, and U.S. Supreme Court Associate Justice Sandra Day O'Connor got her first look at the town that has tried for several years to persuade her to participate in the Landon Lecture Series on Public Issues.

O'Connor made national headlines when she was appointed on Sept. 21, 1981, as the first woman justice in the 191-year history of the Supreme Court.

The 57-year-old former Arizona senator gave Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum credit for bringing her to Manhattan.

"Senator Kassebaum had spoken to me about it a number of times since I came to Washington," she said. "I've had a chance to get to know her, and she encouraged me very much to do this."

O'Connor, who was accompanied by her husband, John, said her only regret was that she didn't come to Kansas in time to meet Kassebaum's father, former Kansas Gov. Alf Landon, for whom the lecture series is named. Landon died Oct. 12, 1987, one month after his 100th birthday.

Being the first woman in history to serve on the Supreme Court has not been a major concern to O'Connor.

"I don't think it is an issue in terms of working relationships at all," she said. "I have been warmly received, and we seem to carry on in the same way as in the past."

O'Connor had little to say about a highly publicized Jan. 13 Supreme Court ruling that gave public school officials broad, new authority to censor student publications.

In a 5-3 vote, the Court ruled that a Hazelwood, Mo., high school principal did not infringe on students' rights when he censored two pages from the school-sponsored newspaper. The newspaper contained articles dealing with teenage pregnancy and the effects of divorce on children.

O'Connor was one of the justices ruling in favor of Hazelwood.

When asked if the case could have an effect on college newspapers as well, she declined comment.

"That was not an issue," she said.

O'Connor said it was "hard for me to say" whether similar cases may be filed at the college level or whether college publications could be threatened by the ruling.

Supreme Court Justice to give 10:30 address

By The Collegian Staff

K-State will begin a year-long celebration of its 125th anniversary today when U.S. Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor delivers 1988's first address in the Landon Lecture Series on Public Issues.

O'Connor's lecture, which will be at 10:30 a.m. in McCain Auditorium, is titled "Establishing Justice."

Donald Slawson, chairman of the Board of Regents, will deliver anniversary greetings before O'Connor's lecture.

Also today, which has been designated Founders Day, University President Jon Wefald and O'Connor will unveil a display of historic photos from the University Archives at 10 a.m. This display will be located on the second floor of the K-State Union.

The 32-foot, eight panel exhibit depicts historic events, buildings and people connected to K-State throughout its 125 years of existence. A chronological time line explaining historic developments at the University will be included in the display.

The photos will be displayed

Pell Grant funds in need of boost

By The Collegian Staff

Some K-State students who receive Pell Grants may be in for a big disappointment if Congress doesn't allocate more money for the program.

About $4.3 billion was approved for the 1988-89 academic year by Congress for Pell Grants, and that falls $259 million short of what is needed. As a result, there will not be enough money to give students who receive the maximum grants of $2,200 their full amount.

Department of Education officials had hoped to meet the deficiency with undistributed Pell Grant money from previous years, but even with that surplus they would still be $99 million short for next year.

Legislators originally thought they had budgeted enough to meet all the Pell Grant needs, said Larry Viterna, director of student financial assistance. After the budget was completed and passed, it was discovered there would be a lack of funds.

"If money is not allocated to meet the lack of funds, there will most likely be a linear reduction," he said.

This would mean that students who only receive grants of $200 or less would lose their grants in order to give those who receive $2,200 their full amount. The linear reduction would be enacted for the 1988-89 school year.

"It could affect maybe 300 of our students and it would be those who receive $100 to $200 in Pell Grants," Viterna said.

If Congress doesn't allocate new funds by April 1, the linear reduction will take place, he said.

Financial aid office officials are not planning to warn students that the loss of the smaller Pell Grants may take place, because the students will still be eligible for other forms of financial assistance, Viterna said. Some of the other types of aid that will still be available to them include supplemental grants and guaranteed student loans.

Economy, recruiting affect enrollment

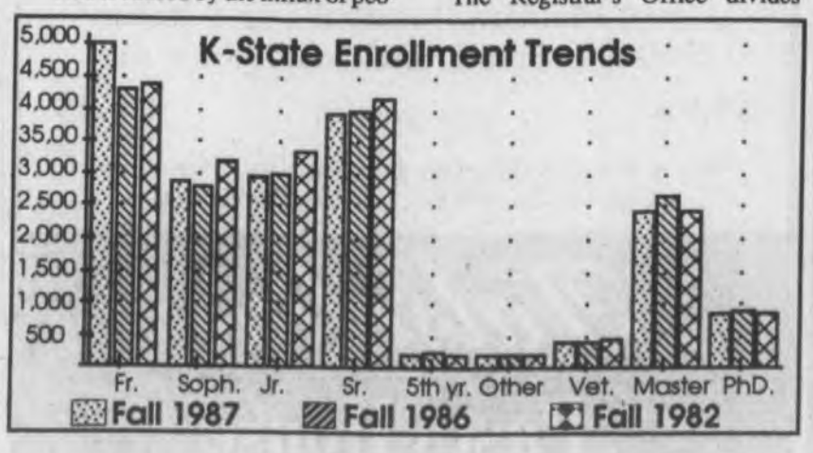
By Jackie Brazzle
Staff Writer

Editor's note: This is the second installment of a five-day series on enrollment at K-State and what it means to the University.

The economy, recruiting efforts and graduate programs are all factors that affect enrollment figures.

Ron Downey, an official of the Planning and Evaluation Services office, said the enrollment process is dependent upon the number of students in the graduating high school classes.

"When we see an increase in high school graduates, we see an increase in the number of college students," he said. "Conversely, if we see a decrease in high school graduates, we see a decrease in the number of college students."



The size of the entering class affects enrollment for the next five years, Downey said. Enrollment figures are calculated on a five-year system that runs in cycles.

"When you have a large number of entering students, the freshman class will increase, and it will increase the size of overall enrollment for the (next) five years," he said.

Historically, Downey said, enrollment figures increase during poor economic times.

"When the economic situation would get bad in the past, enrollment increased, not decreased," he said.

This is caused by the influx of people turning to education as a way to gain skills and a more competitive job, Downey said.

Collegian graph

The Registrar's Office divides enrollment figures into nine categories: freshman, sophomore, junior, senior, fifth year undergraduate, undergraduate specials, veterinary medicine, masters and doctoral students.

Two unofficial categories are urban and rural.

About one-half of the student body comes from towns smaller than Manhattan, Downey said.

"Our largest draw is from the northern tier of counties. Also, a larger percent of the high school graduating classes comes from this area," he said.

The number of students enrolling from rural areas is remaining fairly stable, Downey said.

"The more rural areas have had more stable growth or show a decline," he said. "The decline is more dramatic in the northern tier of counties."

A larger emphasis was put upon the admissions process last year than in previous years, Downey said.

"We put a significantly larger emphasis on the admissions process last year. It was those efforts that made a difference in the jump in admission applications," he said.

The admissions representatives met with prospective students and graduating high school seniors throughout the state, Downey said. They also attended college fairs and days at various high schools.

"We did an all around better job of informing students this time," Downey said.

Jerusalem reports bloodshed

JERUSALEM — Police fought Palestinians in the holy city Monday, and hospital officials said an Arab was wounded by gunfire. It was the first bloodshed reported in Jerusalem since riots in the occupied lands began Dec. 8

In the West Bank town of Kfar Salem, 40 miles north of Jerusalem, military investigators questioned four young Arabs who say Israeli soldiers using a bulldozer buried them alive after a protest Feb. 5.

"I am afraid. I thought I was going to die," Abdel Latif Mahmoud Ishtiah, 19, said soon after he was questioned in a white police van. "I dream about it all the time."

Maj. Gen. Amram Mitzna, military commander in the West Bank, said a sergeant-major from the military government and two or three other soldiers were involved and would be tried.

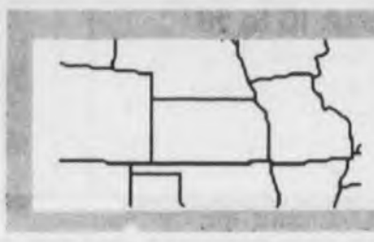
New superconductor found

BOSTON — A new superconductor that operates at higher temperatures and may be easier to adapt to practical applications has been discovered by a research team in Japan, scientists said Monday.

The superconductor is not merely a refinement of either of the two known high-temperature superconductors, but an entirely new compound that in some respects may exceed the performance of the others, said a panel of scientists at the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.



The new material — a mixture of bismuth, strontium, calcium, copper and oxygen — raises the temperature at which superconductivity occurs to about 243 degrees below zero Fahrenheit, a jump of more than 50 degrees above levels attained with previous superconductors.

Man 'pops question' on TV ad

KINGSPORT, Tenn. — Watching a rerun of a television sitcom may not sound like the most romantic activity, but Jeff Smith decided he couldn't think of a better time to pop the question.

Smith, 25, bought 30 seconds of air time during a local station's broadcast of "It's A Living" to propose to Rhonda Munn.

Smith made sure Munn was at home watching station WETO with him Sunday night when his advertisement appeared midway through the show. The commercial showed Smith sitting in a chair listening to the Beach Boys' song "Help Me Rhonda" as he proposed marriage.

Baby brother accidentally killed

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — An 8-month-old boy died after his 3-year-old sister, intending to bathe him after he soiled his diaper, placed him in a tub of scalding water, police said.

Police were investigating the death as accidental, pending an autopsy. The boy's identity was not released, and no cause of death had been determined.

The baby's mother told police she left the children unattended for about 10 minutes Monday to run an errand at her mother's house nearby, police Detective Ron Russell said.

While she was away, the 3-year-old girl apparently carried the infant into the bathroom. The girl told detectives that her brother had soiled his diaper and that she intended to bathe him as her mother did.

The mother found the baby shortly after 11 a.m., police said. She rushed the infant to Children's Mercy Hospital, where he pronounced dead at 11:25 a.m.

Sgt. Troy Cole said the girl was not tall enough to reach the cold water spigot, only the hot.

The boy suffered second- and third-degree burns over much of his body, police said.

Abortion measure debated

TOPEKA — Anti-abortion spokesmen urged a legislative committee Monday to endorse a bill requiring consent of one parent or a judge before girls under 18 could get abortions in Kansas, but opponents said the measure is misguided and called a similar law in Minnesota a failure.

Those supporting the bill said they are baffled that anyone would oppose it, but foes said it would only create another hurdle for girls from poor family situations to get a legal abortion because judges will overwhelmingly approve consent.

The debate before the House Federal and State Affairs Committee was over a bill the House passed last session, but the Senate amended to permit judges to give the consent. The House rejected the Senate amendments, sending the measure back to the House committee where it rested until this session.

Blood tests may be required

TOPEKA — The Senate gave tentative approval Monday to a bill that would mandate blood tests for victims of fatal accidents involving motor vehicles, boats and airplanes.

Sen. Ross Doyen, R-Concordia, who introduced the bill in the Senate Committee on Transportation and Utilities, said the blood would be drawn from the body to determine if the operator who was killed in the accident was under the influence of alcohol. He said the information would be used for statistical purposes only to determine how many accidents in the state are alcohol-related.

If a passenger is killed, however, the blood test would not be performed under the bill. If a pedestrian is killed in an accident, the blood test would be given.

The tests must be done within eight hours of the accident.

Ethnic studies awards given

Seven K-State faculty members have received grants to support their work in American ethnic studies. The grants are typically awarded for the development of new courses for the program, for integrating scholarship on America into existing courses, and for research, scholarship and creative work in areas of importance to the field of American ethnic studies, said Harriet Ottenheimer, interim coordinator of American Ethnic Studies.

Recipients of the awards are: James Armagost, associate professor of speech, $100 for research on Comanche documents; Janet Benson, associate professor of sociology, anthropology and social work, $171 for Vietnamese language-learning materials; Rene De la Pedraja, assistant professor of history, $900 for research on Hispanic entrepreneurs in the United States; Lillian Kremer, instructor of English, $1,000 for a book on ethnic women's perspectives on the Holocaust; Patricia O'Brien, professor of sociology, anthropology and social work, $753 for analysis of archaeological data from Cahokia; Ottenheimer, professor of sociology, anthropology and social work, $314 for a book on early black neighborhoods in New Orleans; and Michael Suleiman, professor of political science,

Waldheim solicits support

By The Associated Press

VIENNA, Austria — President Kurt Waldheim rejected the "slanders, hateful demonstrations and wholesale condemnations" of those who want him to resign and urged the nation Monday to unite behind him.

His televised speech appeared certain to deepen divisions caused by the report of an international panel of historians last week. It questioned the president's moral integrity and said he was "in close proximity" to Nazi atrocities during World War II and did nothing to stop them.

On Monday, he claimed without giving specifics that "parts of the report do not correspond to the facts but are built on presumptions and hypotheses. For that reason, the conclusions drawn cannot be upheld."

Waldheim, 69, used highly emotional language in appeals both to World War II compatriots and those too young to know "the horrors of this war."

He said he might have erred in not discussing his wartime past but said he never tried to conceal it. "I have a clear conscience," the former U.N. secretary-general told Austria's 7.5 million citizens.

In their 202-page report, the historians concluded that Waldheim tried to cover up his service as a German army lieutenant in the Balkans in 1943-45. The government appointed the panel at Waldheim's request in September, after the United States put him on a "watch list" of undesirable aliens.

In an interview broadcast Monday on ABC's World News Tonight, Waldheim appealed to the American public for understanding.

"If I have misled my friends in the United States because I didn't say anything as far as my military career is concerned, I am sorry. ... It was not done purposely. Believe me. And I hope this will be understood because I have so many friends in the United States. And I hope they will believe me that I haven't done anything wrong."

Waldheim also said that resigning would be against the wishes of those who elected him.

"Do you really think that a clear decision by the Austrian people on the presidency — who should be president — should be corrected? Accusations which are completely wrong, which have no foundation. Why should then the president resign, leaving the country in disaster?," he said.

Chancellor Franz Vranitzky said in a televised interview Sunday, which was praised even by conservative critics, that Waldheim "did not deal exactly with the truth" and must restore his credibility.

Vranitzky said he would consider resigning if the conflict over Waldheim continued occupying time the government should devote to other matters. The Socialist chancellor leads a coalition with the conservative People's Party, which supported Waldheim's election campaign in 1986.

Socialist Party secretary Heinrich Keller said after the 14-minute speech Monday that it was "a great disappointment" and meant Waldheim would "continue to be an unbelievable burden for our country."

A petition drive for Waldheim's resignation has obtained more than 2,000 signatures, including those of most leading intellectuals, according to an employee of the news magazine Profil. It printed the first 1,496 signatures on three pages Monday.

About 5,000 opponents of Waldheim demonstrated in downtown Vienna on Sunday, and about half marched to his office in the Hofburg palace, calling out for his resignation.

The president has consistently denied wrongdoing since Austrian and U.S. media first disclosed his Balkans service in March 1986, during the election campaign. As the controversy continued, he has refused all demands that he resign.

Waldheim reiterated his stand on Monday, arguing that resignation would undo a decision fundamental to Austria's democracy.

"In the course of the renewed discussion, the question was also put about my premature departure from the office of federal president," he said. "I want to take a stand in all clarity: You, my dear Austrians, have elected me federal president with a convincing majority in a secret and direct election for six years."

Relations intact for Soviets, U.S.

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration's policy of keeping military and espionage blow-ups with the Soviet Union from slowing a drive for better overall relations is back in operation following the collision of U.S. and Soviet warships in the Black Sea.

The United States complained about Soviet actions in last Friday's incident by summoning Soviet ambassador Yuri Dubinin to a 20-minute protest meeting with the State Department's third-ranking officer.

The department issued a public condemnation.

Yet Secretary of State George P. Shultz has no plan to dwell on the incident when he goes to Moscow next week to discuss arms control, regional issues like Afghanistan and the superpower summit envisioned for the spring, according to an aide who spoke on condition of anonymity.

How much damage will the Black Sea incident do to the broad range of U.S.-Soviet relations?

"Not much," the aide said.

Indeed, the State Department's on-the-record reaction to what Navy officers called the deliberate and dangerous Soviet bumping of American warships operating innocently in the Black Sea included comments that conveyed more exasperation than outrage.

"As Secretary of State Shultz said just a week ago, we are prepared to deal with the best and worst of Soviet behavior," said spokesman Rudolph Boone.

It is, after all, "a competitive relationship," Boone said.

The statement reflected the administration policy, since the rise of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in 1985, of keeping distasteful and bitter bilateral disputes from poisoning efforts.

Grad School names new assistant dean

By The Collegian Staff

Leniel Harbers, professor of animal sciences and industry, assumed the duties of assistant dean of the Graduate School on Monday.

The position is part time, and Harbers will continue many of his teaching and advising duties.

An animal sciences faculty member since 1964, Harbers will take over some of the responsibilities of John Noonan, associate dean/professor and dean of the Graduate School, who retired in 1987.

Harbers will be specifically involved in the review of admissions, programs of study probation, international enrollments and dismissal actions.

"I have no dreams or desires to change the entire Graduate School. My goal is to make this as smooth an operation as possible," he said.

Harbers has extensive background in international agriculture, which he plans to emphasize in his job.

"I will try to enhance (the Graduates School's) image not only in the state, but nationally and internationally," he said.

He spent two years in Africa and is a member of Partners of America, a group somewhat like the Peace Corp. K-State's partner is Paraguay, and Harbers has worked in that nation as part of K-State's international agriculture program.

A native of La Grange, Texas, Harbers received his bachelor's degree in animal science in 1957 and his master's degree in biochemistry and nutrition in 1958 from Texas A&M University. He received a doctorate in animal nutrition from Oklahoma State University in 1961.

KANSAS STATE UNIVERSITY

CONFERENCE
principal-counselor-student

The office of Admissions cordially invites former students of these high schools to attend the 1988 Principal-Counselor-Student Conference. High school principals and counselors will be on campus to visit with you about your preparation for and experiences in KSU academic programs. Your participation will help the University build a stronger relationship with your former high school faculty.

Your are welcome to drop by between 10:15 a.m. and 12:15 p.m. on wednesday, Feb. 17. This is an excellent opportunity for you to renew old friendships with former classmates. The Provost has asked that your instructors excuse you from these class periods.

On critical thinking

O'Connor's speech to give insights

U.S. Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor is making decisions that will change your life. If you want to understand those decisions, you should attend her Landon Lecture and listen carefully. Amid the usual Landon Lecture hoopla, you might just catch a glimpse of her judicial philosophy.

O'Connor is labeled a court conservative. University of Minnesota law professor Suzanna Sherry wrote in the Virginia Law Review: "The current trend on the court, with O'Connor's enthusiastic participation, is away from the liberal results of the Warren court. In particular, the court seems to be adopting an approach of 'aggressive majoritarianism,' fostering community and consensus at the expense of individual rights."

What does "aggressive majoritarianism" mean to you? A few examples may clarify it.

O'Connor voted to uphold a Georgia law criminalizing sodomy. Homosexuals challenged the law, claiming it abridged their right of privacy by regulating private conduct between consenting adults. In the name of "judicial restraint," the court refused to recognize such a right. As pointed out in Justice Steven's dissent, the majority's rationale also upholds laws forbidding oral sex between married heterosexuals.

O'Connor voted to allow high school newspapers and other forms of student expression to be censored. The case involved the censorship of articles dealing with teenage pregnancy and the effects of divorce on children. Despite the obvious importance of such issues to high school students, O'Connor joined in a ruling claiming the students' free speech rights were not violated.

Commentary

Guest Columnist

O'Connor seems ready to strike down Roe vs. Wade, the court's 1973 decision limiting the government's power to outlaw abortions. Rejecting Roe's trimester approach, O'Connor has consistently voted with other court conservatives to uphold state regulation of abortion. She has written that the government has "compelling interests" in protecting the "potentiality" of human life "throughout pregnancy."

O'Connor has a narrow view on matters pertaining to constitutional protections against self-incrimination and unreasonable search and seizure. It is a good bet that O'Connor will vote to uphold random drug-testing programs now imposed on many federal employees.

University of Southern California law professor Erwin Chemerinsky describes O'Connor as a "clone" of the court's far-right Chief Justice Rehnquist, noting the two agree in nearly nine of every 10 cases. O'Connor "rarely votes in favor of individual rights and liberties," notes Chemerinsky, "while almost always voting on the side of the government."

While describing O'Connor as a "consistently very conservative vote," Chemerinsky praised O'Connor for her opinion in a 5-4 decision declaring that a nursing school which would not admit male students was practicing "impermissible sex discrimination."

Whether one approves or disapproves of O'Connor's jurisprudence, today's Landon Lecture provides a rare and valuable opportunity for direct interaction with a Supreme Court justice. What O'Connor and her brethren do directly affects each and every one of us. You owe it to yourself to attend the lecture and decide whether "aggressive majoritarianism" is good news or bad.

Campaign nastiness sours voters on process

They're off.

And oh are they nasty.

Campaign '88 is in full swing and already the mud is flying at unprecedented speeds. One presidential candidate has called another an "embarrassment" to his party. Another has asked whether voters can trust a man who has supported nuclear power and the B-1 bomber.

And these are the attacks occurring within party boundaries.

Campaign mudslinging is certain nothing new. But evidence this season suggests that is may be even worse than ever.

The worst case of character assault so far has come from the holier-than-thou camp of — who else? — evangelist Pat Robertson. Material distributed by Robertson supporters suggested a member of Rep. Jack Kemp's family had an abortion.

Now isn't that essential to the campaign? What Robertson apparently doesn't realize is that such an attack makes him look bad, not Kemp.

Fortunately, however, most candidates have yet to sink to Robertson's low. Most of the attacks conveniently stay within a limit that enables the attacker to claim he's using comparative — not negative — advertising.

But when truly negative advertising is distributed, it affects everyone. Primarily, it makes the attacker look defensive and desperate. Rarely will it result in a quantum leap in the polls.

That is important especially considering that most nasty ads are distributed by those trailing other candidates. Leaders, as reason would bear out, have no need to attack the other candidates.

More significantly, however, mudslinging sours voters on the entire political process. The issues are supposed to be the important element of the campaign, not who can knock other candidates down the farthest.

Such mudslinging should be discouraged certainly within party boundaries and by candidates in general. And for those candidates who continue with the insults, voters should ensure they get their just deserts at the polls.

Other perspectives

Reinforcing the 'all style' image

The recently released movie "Broadcast News" shows some unsavory elements of television news, and a decision made by KU's School of Journalism has further tarnished the business's reputation. Beginning in the fall, broadcast news majors will no longer be required to take Reporting 1, the most fundamental class for any journalist. This decision was a mistake, and many journalism professors were opposed to it.

The first contact with reporting that broadcast news majors will have will be in a class called Broadcast News 1. Although the description of this course mentions "reporting," it goes on to say that the emphasis is on audio tape recording, video camera shooting in the field and video editing. Reporting is clearly a secondary concern.

By dropping the Reporting 1 requirement, the radio-TV sequence of the School of Journalism has reinforced the notion that broadcast news is mostly hairspray and makeup.

Entire support

Editor,

Wow! What a basketball team we have: first in the Big Eight, Top Twenty in certain polls and excellent fan support ... most of the time. The Richmonds, Bledsoes, McCoys, etc., receive total fan support, but five members does not a team make.

However, when substitute players step onto their HOME court to relieve our beloved starters, they receive a less-than-warm welcome. Instead, they are subject to outcries of disgust and even boos.

Our substitutes allow our star players to get a much-needed rest so that they can hit the clutch three-pointers and free throws in the final minutes of the game. Besides the rest our starters receive, the subs also play hard and maintain our advantage for the short time they are in. So at the remaining home games, let's give our entire support to the whole Wildcat basketball team and save the moans and groans for the opposing teams.

Call of duty

Editor,

K-State's women's basketball player Janet Madsen scored 12 points in the game last Wednesday night against the Missouri Tigers in Columbia. It was well after 3 a.m. by the time the team bus returned to Manhattan. By 9 a.m. Thursday, she and K-State trackster Rob Hayes were leading first- through sixth-graders at Seven Dolars grade school in chants of "Just say no" as a part of the Athletic Department's "Say No to Alcohol and Other Drugs" campaign.

Yes, it was another "thing" that athletes are often asked to do beyond being students who represent K-State on athletic fields. Yes, it did include being away from class time, additional meetings and time working on their presentations.

Janet, Rob and 48 other concerned K-State athletes participated in the "Just say no" activities. Athletic Director Larry Travis should be very proud of his athletes — I know the children of Manhattan, Ogden, Fort Riley and Junction City are. Three cheers to the athletes who have gone the extra mile to make a difference in our community.

Correction

Due to a columnist's error, information in a column that appeared on Monday's editorial page was incorrect. Sponsoring K-State's Telefund was the KSU Foundation, not the Alumni Association as was reported.

Among campaign issues, poverty certainly one of most important

With presidential primaries and caucuses under way and actual elections just around the corner, many sensible Americans are beginning to ask themselves exactly what qualities they would like to see reflected in their next president. A wide variety of criteria is used to evaluate the presidential hopefuls — religious inclination, sexual practices, party affiliation, administrative experience and scandalous histories are apparently equally important in judging a candidate's character.

And this year's menu is again, unsurprisingly enough, very diverse.

Can a televangelist who claims to be able to stop hurricanes through prayer possibly be serious about running for president? Or what of a candidate who flaunts his sex life to the public and, after being caught in a scandal, cannot seem to sufficiently appease his ego by remaining out of the race? There is also the less-than-assertive vice president, whose lack of knowledge of crucial administrative decisions makes us wonder if he could ever be qualified to run the White House.

Then we have an Orville Redenbacher look-alike, a handful of the ever-present Kennedy clones, an excitable reverend and Kansas' own homegrown senator, whose jokes of invading Central American countries certainly qualify him, by today's standards, for nothing less than the presidency.

While we playfully characterize the candidates and chastise them for looks or behavior, we sometimes fail to notice some crucial issues that most of them fail to address.

Commentary

MICHAEL NICHOLS
Collegian Columnist

Take, for example, the myth of the American dream.

Closely associated with the Protestant work ethic, the American dream represents the notion that if one works hard, one will feel virtuous — with prosperity and self-sufficiency resulting naturally. According to the American dream, poverty is never an insurmountable condition; if one is intelligent and hardworking, success is inevitable.

Why is it then that — according to the most recent Census Bureau reports — two million Americans worked year-round at full-time jobs in 1986 and still lived below the poverty line? At the risk of offending any reader with more statistics, the same reports also showed that a family of three supported by a person working full time at minimum wages fell $2,000 short of the official poverty line.

The situation only gets worse.

According to the book "Who Are the Poor?" prepared by Michael Harrington for the project Justice For All, 20 percent of all American children — about 11 million — lived in poverty as of 1986. The Physicians' Task Force on Hunger reported that in 1985 about 20 million people in the United States, including 12 million children, went hungry at some point each month. In 1986, the number of poverty-stricken people in the United States was about 33 million, and unfortunately, it is still growing.

Is this the American dream in full-fledged glory, re-invigorated by Ronald Reagan's economic recovery and a fruit of our pride in America? Is this so-called "progress" doomed to continue, furthering poverty rates that have been steadily increasing over the years?

This is a good time to stop and ask ourselves how there can be such poverty in perhaps the most affluent society ever to exist. The problem is not an easy one to solve. Economic recovery does not always translate into financial stability for all. What is needed is serious federal action in restraining the growth of America's new underclass: the destitute.

It is election time in America, and people are picking candidates like fruits, discarding those that appear to be blemished without always taking full notice of their contents before making a rational decision. Poverty isn't the only important issue that deserves more attention than it has been getting, but perhaps it is a good start when choosing who will sit in the Oval Office.

Manhattan gasoline prices highest in area

No competition to lower cost; easy access part of problem

By Audra Dietz
Collegian Reporter

If you're looking for a bargain in gasoline, Manhattan isn't the place to shop. The average gas price at local stations is currently 87 cents a gallon for unleaded gas and 83 cents a gallon for regular, and the stations aren't in any haste to undersell each other.

"We just take the average price around town to set our prices," said Tom White of Phillips 66 in Manhattan. White said his station doesn't try to undersell other stations, but it does try to stay competitive.

Going west for spring break? Don't ride off into the sunset with a full tank — coast down the interstate and fill up along the way. Gas prices start dropping outside Manhattan's city limits.

Ogden's average price is 82 cents a gallon for both regular and unleaded.

Hutchinson's average price is between 79 cents and 83 cents a gallon.

The cheapest gallon of gas is found at Inman for 73 cents a gallon.

Going east of Manhattan, Topeka's average price is 83 cents a gallon.

Relatively, Manhattan's gas prices aren't outrageous. There's just no competition to make the price lower.

Jim Welty, of Great Plains Oil, said there is a price deadlock in Manhattan because there aren't any traffic barriers.

"With no built-in barriers like a major highway or a railroad that split the town, stations lock in at one price," Welty said.

When traffic barriers divide a city, stations are forced to lower gas prices so customers will drive across town for cheaper fuel. Most Manhattan gas stations are easily accessible and don't need to undersell each other, Welty said.

Retail gas prices are influenced by local competition and transport costs as well, and these factors are different statewide, contributing to the lower price of gas in areas other than Manhattan.

Stations currently buy gas from distributors at 69 cents a gallon and tack on at least a 10-cent mark-up to pay for their overhead, Welty said.

Cleta Schneider of Triplett Distributors, said the wholesale price in Salina is 66 cents a gallon, setting the average retail price for gas there at 82 cents.

Independent stations aren't tied to one distributor and are able to strike the first blow in price wars. Therefore, big oil companies are more than likely to end up following price trends, not setting them.

"Independent stations lower their prices, then Amoco gets mad and drops their price," Welty said.

"The lower price brings in more customers," said Linda Keen of 61 Truck Plaza in Hutchinson. Keen said because the station is independently owned they can undersell other stations.

Amoco's central office dictates gas prices for its individual stations through a toll-free number, said Steve Abernethy of Jarrett's Standard in Pratt. Station operators call and enter a password and a code number with a touch-tone phone. A recording then tells the station what price to set.

This system lets stations adjust to allow for local competition, making some areas cheaper than others. Hutchinson Kwik Shop and Amoco gas stations average 82 cents a gallon, underselling Manhattan stations by 5 cents.

Greg Fagan, senior in accounting and finance, fills up his car at a Manhattan gas station. While prices in Manhattan are relatively uniform across town, other towns around Kansas often sell gas at lower prices.

Drivers find no bargains with the average price of gasoline in Manhattan set at 87 cents a gallon for unleaded and 83 cents for regular.

Legislator urges elimination of malpractice insurance law

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A Johnson County legislator urged the House Judiciary Committee Monday to endorse bills eliminating the state requirement that physicians and other health care providers carry malpractice insurance.

The state law mandating that doctors carry primary insurance coverage with private companies and pay into the Health Care Stabilization Fund to cover large damage awards against them "has simply created an ever-increasing pool of money from which to pay out judgments and settlements," said Rep. Kerry Patrick, R-Leawood, who is an attorney.

"It's acted as a floor and not as a ceiling" on awards and produced a change in peoples' attitude that they aren't suing the doctor but the insurance company, he added.

Patrick, a co-sponsor of the legislation, which would eliminate the requirement that doctors carry malpractice insurance and abolish the Health Care Stabilization Fund, testified as the Judiciary Committee neared the conclusion of three weeks of hearings on the medical malpractice crisis.

Chairman Robert Wunsch, R-Kingman, said he would take testimony Tuesday from the state Department of Insurance, then have his committee begin making decisions on the bills.

Wunsch predicted the committee would amend and send to the House floor bills relating to collateral source, caps on damage awards and punitive damages. These are the three key elements in the Kansas Medical Society's legislative package aimed at curbing soaring insurance premiums. The bills should be ready for debate by Wednesday.

Patrick said Kansas requires its physicians to carry more insurance than any state in the nation.

"We've just created a 'deep pocket'" of money for people to collect after they sue, he argued. "We don't require those in the other professions to carry insurance. They do it to protect themselves. Doctors should be allowed to do the same thing."

Eliminating the mandate on malpractice insurance coverage, Patrick said, will lead to more self-insurance by doctors at lower cost than they are now paying out in premiums. He said he knows of a group of obstetricians in Johnson County that wants set up its own insurance but can't do it under the present law.

Economics will dictate whether a doctor carries malpractice insurance and how much, he said.

Chamber of Commerce salutes anniversaries, sets priorities

By Janelle Larson
Collegian Reporter

Cooperation was the theme as the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce saluted two anniversaries at its annual meeting Monday night. This year marks the 125th anniversary of K-State and the chamber's 70th year.

Bill Edison, master of ceremonies, said the regional partnership between the chamber, K-State and the surrounding communities and counties is essential for the development of the region.

Approximately 400 people attended the formal installation of 1988 Chamber Chairman Gary Boomer, partner of Varney and Associates, and honored outgoing chairman Terry Ray, owner of Ray Enterprises.

Boomer said making Manhattan's airport a regional airport was the first priority for 1988.

Other priorities for the year include developing new industry and waste management, promoting University advancement through the Margin of Excellence, and maintaining open admissions at K-State. The chamber is also lobbying to have a four-lane highway built from Interstate 70 to Manhattan.

The chamber is working with the other institutions in the partnership to develop a regional convention and visitors' bureau.

Ray announced the opening of two new businesses in Manhattan. Idelman Telemarketing will be hiring 110 people when it opens its doors in a few months. Idelman works with several corporations including Sears, Roebuck & Co.; McDonald's; Amoco Oil Co.; and American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

Bayer Stone, a stone quarrying plant, will be opening a plant on Tuttle Creek Boulevard.

"1987 was a year of raising our sights and upgrading our expectations," Ray said.

Other accomplishments in 1987 included: Fort Riley Boulevard was expanded from west to east Manhattan, membership in the chamber increased by 46 firms, investment in the chamber increased by $30,000, and K-State's enrollment increased.

Dick Dodderidge, a member of the Kansas Board of Regents and a K-State alumnus, toasted K-State for "125 years of dedicated service to the state, region and country."

He commended the teachers and staff who "motivated thousands of students" and the leadership of the 12 University presidents, especially President Jon Wefald.

Business college flourishing after 66 years

By Nancy Chartrand
Staff Writer

K-State has a tremendous impact on the business leadership in Kansas, according to the business college dean.

"The quality of business leadership in Kansas depends heavily on K-State," said Randolph Pohlman, Dean of the College of Business Administration, in the recent Kansas State Business Review.

"With 70 percent of our graduates living within the state, we make a tremendous economic impact upon the future business leaders of the state," Pohlman said.

In 1922 the College of Business Administration started out as a degree program in rural commerce in the Department of Agricultural Economics.

In 1954 the Department of Business was established in the School of Arts and Sciences.

Calvin Hall became home to the department in 1960 and in 1962 the School of Commerce was established. The name was then changed in 1963 to the College of Commerce by the Kansas Board of Regents.

In 1969, it was changed to the College of Business Administration, and one year later, undergraduate enrollment passed the 1,000 mark. In 10 years the enrollment figure doubled to 2,000.

That same year, 1979, the college was organized into departments — accounting, finance, management and marketing.

Sixty-six years after its obscure beginnings, the College of Business Administration is an accredited college with 2,666 undergraduates and 164 graduate students in the masters program. Throughout those years the College of Business Administration has expanded to become the second largest college on the K-State campus, behind the College of Arts and Sciences.

Throughout the years the college has been recognized for excellence in education.

Since 1973, the college has been accredited by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business, which recognizes programs for academic excellence in their specialized area, which means their programs maintain a high level of excellence.

In February of 1987, the International Institute of K-State's College of Business Administration was a co-recipient of the President's "E" Certificate for Export Service, given for excellence in U.S. export trade expansion.

"It's the nation's highest honor given to companies and business organizations for their noteworthy efforts to ensure exports," said Donald Loso, regional director of the U.S. Department of Commerce.

With this background the College of Business Administration is looking to expand.

The University's central administration has approved a $7.7 million renovation and addition to Calvin Hall, which the Kansas Board of Regents and the Legislature must yet approve and allocate the funding.

If approved on time, the construction would begin in fiscal year 1990 and be completed in fiscal year 1991.

Retiree sees 40-year change

By Bryan Hissong
Collegian Reporter

Floyd Smith, teacher, researcher and director of the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station (KAES), and most recently, director of the Kansas Water Resources Institute will retire on Wednesday after more than 40 years at K-State.

As a teacher over the years, Smith has seen many changes take place at K-State.

"The biggest changes I have seen are the amount of students and automobiles," Smith said.

In 1940 there were only 4,000 students, Smith said. Beside the change in population Smith has seen the move from a not-so-modern university to a more broadened campus.

"A lot of changes toward a more modern school were because of (former president) Milton Eisenhower," Smith said.

During Smith's 15 years of leadership in the research efforts of K-State Agriculture, he emphasized the development of new crop varieties, promoted the increased production of soybeans, improved water use efficiency and pushed efforts to breed disease and insect resistance into crops.

Along with Smith's research he has been active in introducing new agricultural products to countries of the western world, Latin America and Southeast Asia.

In 1978 Smith was a member of the U.S. Grain Sorghum and Corn Silage Team that toured the Soviet Union at the request of the U.S. Secretary of Agriculture. In 1985 he was the leader of the United Nation's Agricultural Research Review Mission to Egypt.

In addition to achieving full professor status in 1950, Smith has held different positions at K-State and elsewhere. Acting vice president for agriculture and acting head of the agronomy department, Smith was also a visiting professor at the University of Arkansas.

As well as being a professor, Smith is a member of several professional societies: the Soil Science Society of America, the American Association for the Advancement of Science and the American Institute of Chemists. Smith also holds the title of fellow with the American Society of Agronomy, its highest honor.

Following Smith's retirement, he and his wife, June, plan to stay in Manhattan.

As far as staying in contact with agricultural department Smith said, "I hope to stay with the department and work outdoors."

Candidate emphasizes revisions

By Susan L'Ecuyer
Agri/Business Editor

The fourth of five candidates for the position of dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine spoke Monday on the problems of the veterinary medical profession and the changes he believes must take place.

"At the present time, the (veterinary medical) profession is overwhelmingly concerned with manpower — or peoplepower, if you will — and the problem of an oversupply of veterinary graduates," William Wagner said. Wagner is professor and head of the Department of Veterinary Biosciences, University of Illinois-Urbana.

Wagner said the solution is not cutting back the number of graduates or closing veterinary medical colleges, as had been suggested in some states, but rather emphasizing employment available to students in areas other than clinical practice.

"Looking at the traditional practice setting will not be enough," he said. "Graduates today are stuck in what some authors have referred to as the James Herriot syndrome."

Students' attention and philosophies have been rigidly aimed toward clinical practice, and it is somewhat of a difficult task to re-educate them to other possibilities in academics and industry, Wagner said.

He said another strong concern to the profession is the rate at which new information is being published.

"We need to keep abreast of the information that is being published," Wagner said. "There should be more instruction in the use of computers."

Because of the avalanche of new information, Wagner believes the method of education must change as well.

"Students should spend less time learning the specifics and more time developing methods by which they learn after graduating," Wagner said.

Wagner stressed strategic planning as an important part of the future if the veterinary medical profession was going to "survive and flourish" and provide the service to society that is expected.

"We have, in my view, all too infrequently neglected to ask our clientele — our customer — about what they expect of our graduates and what they expect us to do," Wagner said.

Wagner noted the emphasis on farm animals has shifted away from the single animal to the health of the population and away from disease treatment to health maintenance and upkeep.

"(The goal) now is to maintain the health of the group rather than treating the individual disease later."

And other majors that don't guarantee jobs after graduation

Getting the job you want isn't easy. Especially for recent college grads. Very few majors will prepare you for a specific career, and guarantee you get hired right out of college. For the rest of you, finding something you like won't be simple. You could contemplate grad school. Or law school. Two or three more years of school, and student loans comparable to the national debt. There are very few jobs out there that require little or no experience. Jobs that you would enjoy, where the only requirement is a college degree.

The Federal Aviation Administration is now hiring Air Traffic Control Specialists. Over 3,000 of them. All you need to qualify for testing is a college degree. Any major is welcome. You don't even need any aviation experience. Consider the benefits: •Salaries to $50,000 plus •Up to 26 days vacation a year •Special retirement plan •Locations nationwide •Equal Opportunity Employer.

Graduation will be here soon enough. Consider a civil service career with the Federal Aviation Administration. For more information about a career as an Air Traffic Control Specialist, including an application, send your name and address on a postcard to:

Buffs riding high after two wins

'Cats looking to get back on track tonight

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

It's no surprise to K-State coach Lon Kruger that tonight's opponent, the University of Colorado, won its last two Big Eight Conference outings against Iowa State University and Oklahoma State University.

"Colorado has been right there all along. It's just one of those cases where you don't win, and things don't go your way," Kruger said.

Wildcat fans may remember K-State's earlier meeting with Colorado at Boulder, when the 'Cats struggled before claiming a 68-60 win. Now after a 87-75 win Wednesday over the Cyclones, and slipping past OSU 73-71 Saturday, the Buffaloes are 2-6 in the Big Eight and 6-15 overall.

On top of that, Colorado moved past Iowa State and climbed out of the conference cellar.

"They've played very well," Kruger said. "I think that will improve their confidence and they'll come in here, I'm sure, feeling like they can win and certainly we have to be very well prepared."

Tip-off for the game with Colorado is 7:35 p.m. at Ahearn Field House.

For K-State, 6-2 and 14-6, tonight's game marks the end of a hectic week in which it lost to the University of Oklahoma and the University of Missouri on the road. The Wildcats are now second in the Big Eight and fell from 14th to 21st in the Associated Press rankings.

Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs challenged "anyone in the world" to attempt K-State's slate of games last week "to try and come out alive." And the losses haven't diminished the optimism of the Wildcat players, who were picked to finish no higher than fourth in the Big Eight race.

"We will do what we always do — take each game one game at a time," sophomore point guard Steve Henson said.

"(The end of) the Big Eight (season) is still a long way away and we will try to do some things we are not doing now," added senior forward Mitch Richmond.

The key to defeating Colorado is stopping center Scott Wilke. The 6-foot-10 senior leads the team with an average of 21 points per game. In the earlier K-State-CU matchup, Wilke had just 14 points. Foul difficulties limited the Buffaloes' center to just 27 minutes of playing time.

In the Buffaloes' win over OSU, Wilke had 19 points. Wilke lost the Big Eight's player-of-the-week honors in a spilt vote to Missouri's Derrick Chievous.

Freshman guard Steve Wise, who averages 5.3 ppg, had 14 in the game against the Cowboys and hit the winning free throws with one second left to play.

NOTES: About 400 tickets remain unsold for tonight's contest ... Richmond had one of his poorest shooting games of the season (5 of 15) against Colorado, but scored seven of K-State's last 12 points .

Wildcats lose spot in Top 20 rankings

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The Loyola Marymount Lions may not even notice they've broken into the national rankings for the first time in the school's history, or if they quickly disappear from the Top Twenty.

A seven-second attention span makes it difficult to absorb information.

"There's nothing very mysterious about me and my coaching," said Coach Paul Westhead, whose high-scoring Lions have won 17 in a row and are ranked 20th in this week's poll. "I teach a non-stop running game, shoot the ball within seven seconds.

"We play so hard, play a full-court press every play and then shoot so fast, our guys have trouble knowing what their names are, to say nothing about national rankings...," he said.

"If there are 20 or teams that get better than us, we'll be playing so hard we may not even notice we're out of the rankings."

Temple held on to the No. 1 ranking in The Associated Press poll, with the Owls, 20-1, receiving 28 first-place votes and 1,141 points from the nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters. The next three teams — Purdue, Arizona and Oklahoma — remained the same from last week.

Oklahoma has climbed steadily in the polls, thanks largely to an entity which often goes overlooked — its defense.

"I don't think anybody's saying we don't play defense this year," Coach Billy Tubbs said Monday during the weekly teleconference with Big Eight coaches. "People have been pretty complimentary on our defense, and we've worked awfully hard at it."

The improved defense, Tubbs says, has helped the Sooners lead the nation in scoring.

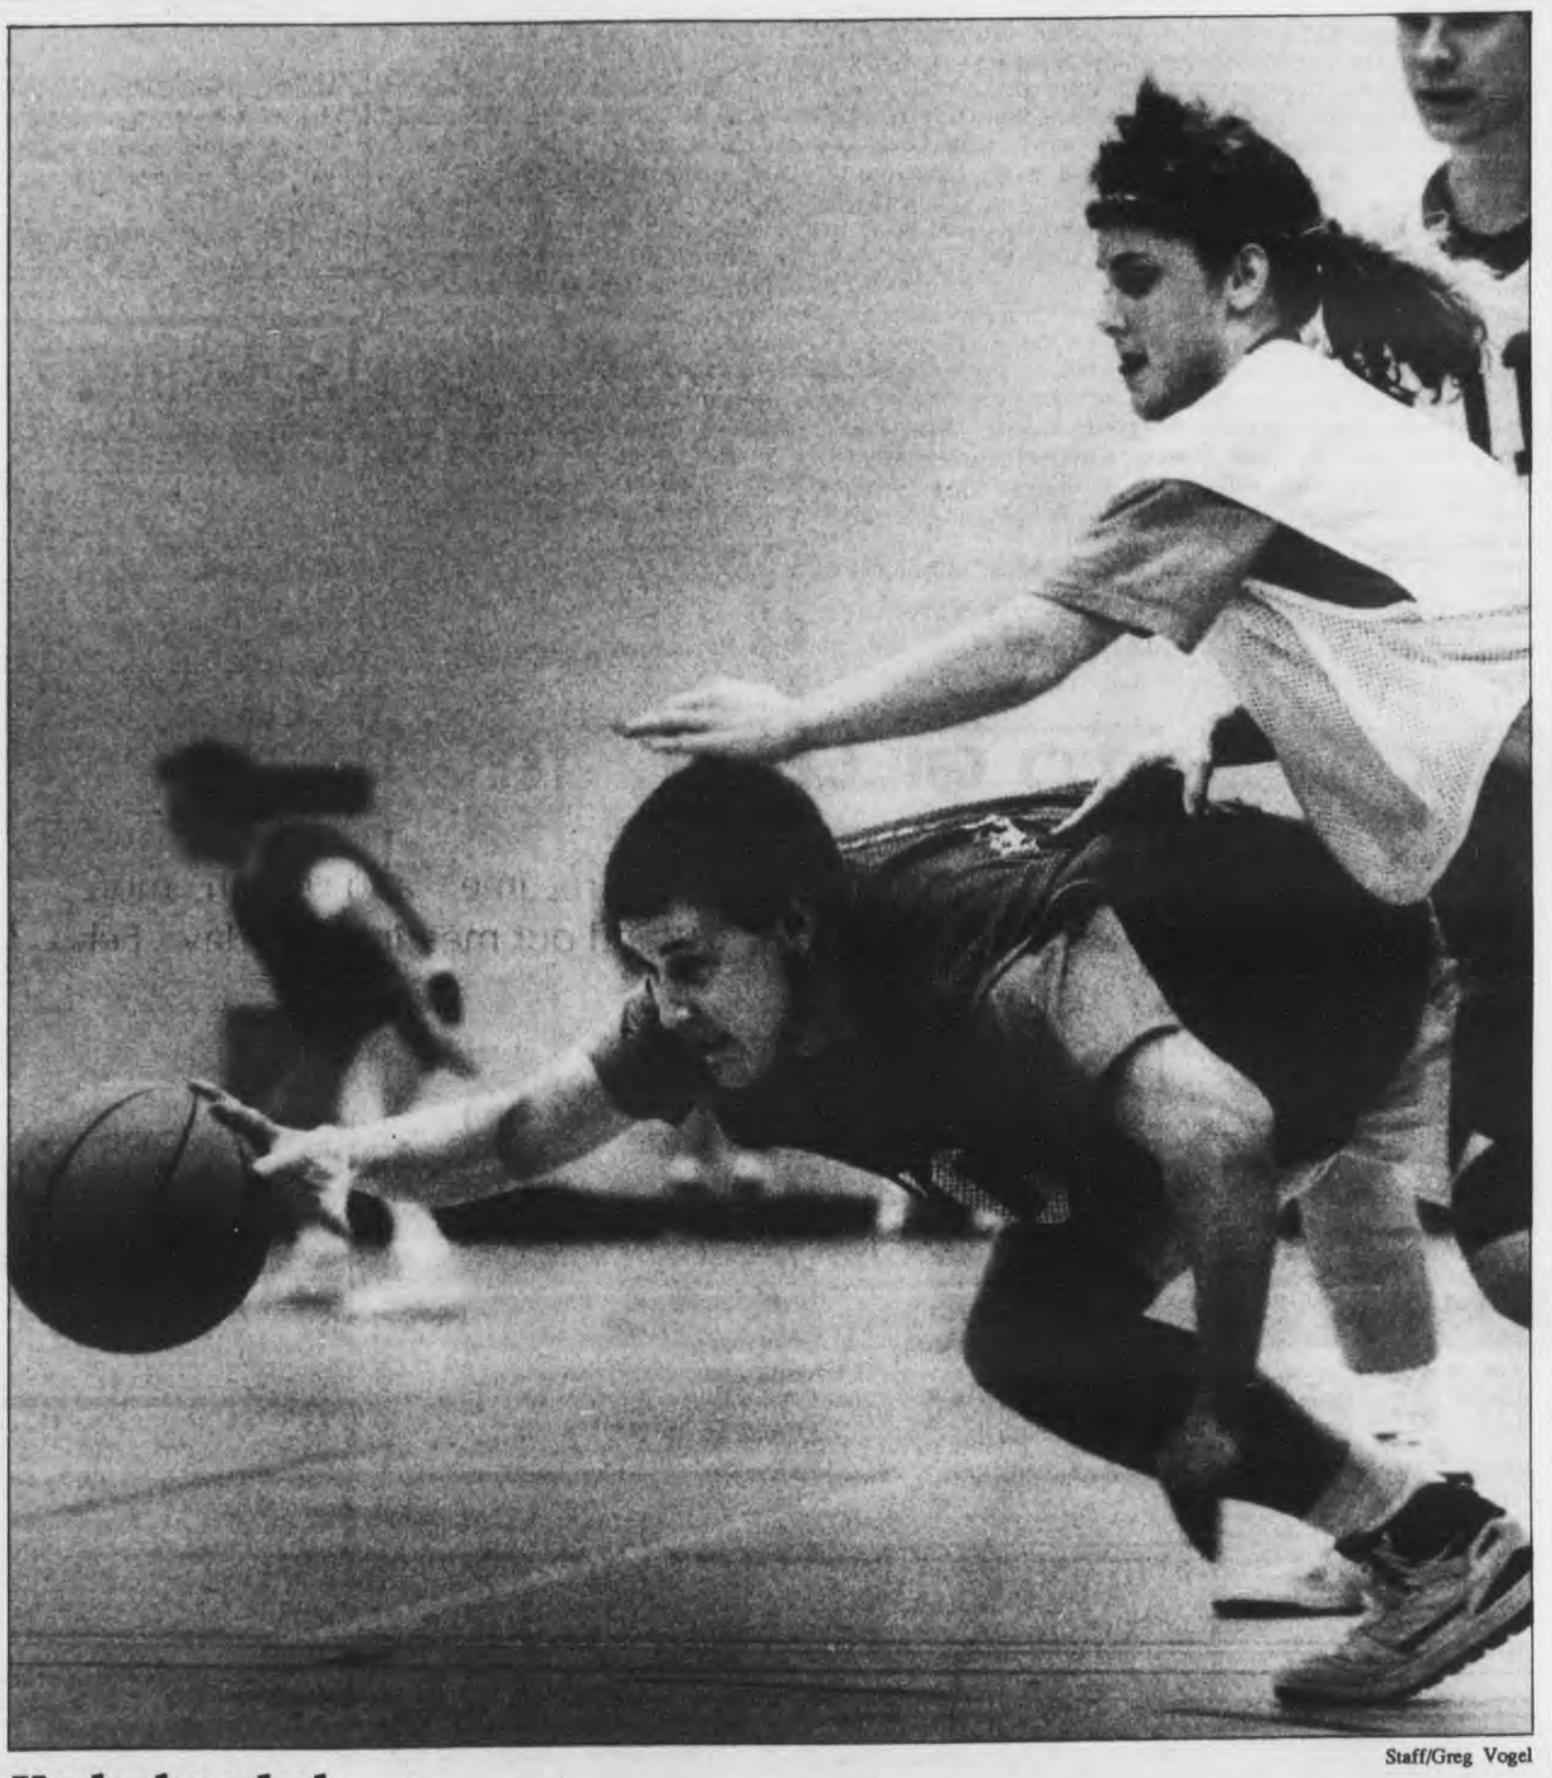
"I think people are beginning to realize our defense creates our offense," Tubbs said. "People have had a lot of nice things to say about our defense this year. I appreciate that. We've always put more time and effort into defense than people realize. But this particular team has the best overall ability to play the kind of defense we want at Oklahoma than any team we've had."

Westhead, who guided the Los Angeles Lakers to the NBA title in 1980, admitted that he likes the sudden fuss over Loyola, which ran its record to 20-3 — the university's first 20-win season since in 27 years.

"Over the weekend, when we won our 20th, I said we were probably only one loss away from obscurity," Westhead said with a chuckle.

Testimony to the team's success is the fact that, for the first time ever, people are actually scalping tickets outside the Lions' arena, the 4,156-seat Gersten Pavilion.

"It's amazing," Westhead said, laughing again. "We couldn't give tickets away a month ago. All that really helps the team, too."



Westhead was a Lakers assistant in 1979, but took over the head coaching job when Coach Jack McKinney was injured in a bicycle accident 13 games into the season. Westhead took the Lakers to the league championship that year, then had a 54-28 record in 1980-81 before the flareup and firing after Los Angeles began the following season 7-4.

He is in his third season at Loyola.

Rounding out the top 10 teams in this week's poll were No. 5 North Carolina, Duke, Brigham Young, Pittsburgh, Kentucky and Michigan.

Gardner reflects on coaching days

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

Editor's Note ... This is the first of a five-part series chronicling the memories of the five K-State men's basketball head coaches who have coached in Ahearn Field House.

The date was Dec. 9, 1950.

On this night, Ahearn Field House opened its doors to the public and to the beginning of an era — an era which will end on March 5, 1988.

The coach that night was Jack Gardner, K-State's basketball coach from 1940-42 and 1947-53.

"That was a special night," Gardner said at the K-State Alumni Basketball reunion Nov. 20, 1987. "I remember having to bus the kids back over to Nichols Gymnasium after the game, because they didn't (have) the showers installed (in Ahearn)."

Gardner may be remembered as "the man who opened Ahearn Field House." But that first night, from a coaching standpoint, is one he would like to forget.

"I'm glad we moved into (Ahearn)," he said. "But there were so many distractions that we nearly lost the game. They had all sorts of things going on and if I had known that, I would have made sure my players got there in time for the tip-off and nothing else."

K-State did win, though, defeating Utah State, 66-56, in front of 10,500 spectators.

Gardner's career record of 649-278 is second only to that of former K-State mentor Jack Hartman. His 70 percent career winning mark is also second only to Hartman's.

But all this would not have been possible if it were not for

U.S. still searching for first medal

Soviet Union dominates medal standings with 5

By The Associated Press

CALGARY, Alberta — Pirmin Zurbriggen won the first Alpine medal of the Winter Olympics on Monday, using the men's downhill as a first step in his quest for an unprecedented five gold medals in skiing.

Zurbriggen won the race by a half-second over Swiss teammate Peter Mueller in a battle of past and present on the slopes, while preventing an Eastern European sweep of medals during the third day of the Games.

"It was my biggest goal, and I'm so happy," Zurbriggen said. "It was a great feeling."

Alexei Prokourorov of the Soviet Union won the men's 30-kilometer cross-country skiing race, and Jens Mueller of East Germany won the men's luge in the day's two other medal events.

The Soviet Union leads the medal standings with five — two gold, two silver and one bronze. East Germany, Czechoslovakia, Finland and Switzerland are tied with two apiece. Both of East Germany's medals are gold.

The United States has yet to win a medal, but that could change today in pairs figure skating, where American couples stood third and fourth after the short program.

"We're gonna go out and kill them," said Todd Waggoner, who teamed with Gillian Wachsman to finish fourth after the short program.

Mueller, 30, the best downhiller in the world in 1979 and '80 and a silver medalist at the 1984 Sarajevo Games, started first on Mount Allan, where the downhill was postponed from Sunday because of winds that reached 98 mph.

Skiing in calmer winds with a little fresh snow on the course, Mueller finished in 2:00.14. Judging by practice times, it didn't look like it would hold up, but it did — until Zurbriggen came down, 15th in the starting order.

Zurbriggen had better times at every interval — combining his giant slalom genius on the twisting upper section of the course with his deftness in downhill on the flat lower section — to finish in 1:59.63.

With the slalom, giant slalom and two new Alpine disciplines — combined and super-giant slalom — still remaining on the schedule, the versatile Zurbriggen has a shot at the Olympic accomplishments of Austrian Toni Sailer and Frenchman Jean-Claude Killy.

In the days of only three Alpine medals, Sailer and Killy each scored a clean sweep — Sailer at the 1956 Cortina Games, Killy in 1968 at Grenoble. It's possible for Zurbriggen. In winning the World Cup overall title last season, Zurbriggen captured the individual titles in downhill, super-G and giant slalom.

Franck Piccard, who skied right behind Zurbriggen, won the bronze medal in 2:01.24, becoming France's first Alpine medal-winner since Killy. The best the United States could do was 26th by 19-year-old A.J. Kitt of Rochester, N.Y., who finished in 2:04.94. Jeff Olson of Bozeman, Mont., was 28th in 2:05.09.

Four years ago at Sarajevo, the Soviets went 1-2 in the 30-kilometer cross-country race with Nikolai Zimyatov and Aleksandr Zavialov, the famed "Z Boys." In a postscript to '84, the Soviets did it in 1988 with the "P.S. Boys," Prokourorov and Smirnov.

Prokourorov won in 1:24:26.3, followed by teammate Vladimir Smirnov, the early leader who finished finished 8.8 seconds back. Vegard Ulvang of Norway won the bronze in 1:25:11.6.

Gunde Svan of Sweden, winner of two gold, a silver and a bronze in 1984, finished 10th, more than three minutes behind Prokourorov.

Robertson maintains Cuban missiles exist

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Pat Robertson said Monday he wouldn't "back off" his assertion that there are Soviet missiles in Cuba, drawing an emphatic denial from the White House and skepticism from a man identified as his source. Campaign rivals blasted the assertion as "outrageous" and "rash."

But pressed by reporters, Robertson did modify his statements a bit, saying he has no first-hand evidence that there are such weapons in Cuba.

"My contention is there might be missiles in the caves; they may have brought in missiles on some other transport vessel or possibly a submarine. I don't know the exact sizing of it, but nobody can say for certain that those missiles aren't there," he told a reporter in Dover, N.H.

Robertson told a GOP candidate's forum in Dover, N.H., on Monday that "the least we can do in this is get those nuclear weapons out of Cuba," a reiteration of statements he had made Sunday during a debate.

But later in the day, the former television evangelist said he had been asking a question, not making an assertion, when he made the controversial comment.

"I was asking in the debate 'Is this true?'" he said. "I have no sources other than what I've said, so there was no categorical statement per se."

Later, interviewed on Cable News Network's "Larry King Live," Robertson said it was possible there are Soviet missiles in Cuba.

"I don't think, frankly, there's anybody in the United States right now that I'm aware of who can say categorically that they are or they are not there," he said.

On Monday in California, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said SS-4 and SS-5 missile sites established in Cuba in 1962 "were confirmed as having been destroyed in that year. We also are confident that the missiles were removed from Cuba at that time."

"We have had extensive intelligence collection directed at Cuba since 1962 and have no evidence that SS-4, SS-5 or other strategic missiles have been deployed there," Fitzwater said.

Asked whether he was denying any offensive nuclear weapons are deployed in Cuba, Fitzwater said, "Exactly."

Vice President George Bush said in an interview Monday that "I'm confident this (Robertson assertion) is not true."

"This is a very serious allegation," Bush said in the interview on a Manchester, N.H., radio station. "You keep hearing these outrageous charges from people which are designed to scare the American people."

Another GOP presidential candidate, Rep. Jack Kemp of New York, also criticized Robertson for saying there are Soviet missiles in Cuba. He called it "a rather rash and unsupportable charge," and said if Robertson had evidence of such missiles, he should share it with the American people.

Robertson stuck to his claim Monday, telling an interviewer: "I'm not going to back off from that. I'd be happy to have somebody prove me wrong."

The claim by Robertson arises from his criticism of the new U.S.-Soviet Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces treaty, which would eliminate all short- and medium-range atomic missiles from Europe. Among those weapons would be the SS-4 and SS-5 land-based missiles.

Officials with Robertson's campaign said his contention was based on information supplied by David S. Sullivan, a staff member of the Republican minority on the Democratic-controlled Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

But Sullivan said Monday in an interview with The Associated Press that "we do not know."

Applications accepted for ag college delegates

By Vera McMinimy
Collegian Reporter

College of Agriculture students who want to represent the college, recruit students and promote agriculture can apply to become Agriculture College Delegates.

This is the second year the delegates, who consist of one male and one female student in the College of Agriculture, will be chosen to represent the college at a variety of events, said John Riley, assistant director of resident instruction for the College of Agriculture.

Applications for the delegates may be picked up in Waters 120 and are due March 1.

The students are chosen based on their general personality, knowledge of agriculture, ability to speak, ability to interact with other people, ability to respond to questions and their knowledge of the College of Agriculture, he said. Only students in the College of Agriculture who will be attending K-State next year are considered.

The committee judging the candidates includes the current delegates, the agriculture council president, two faculty members and one person from the community.

Applicants will be judged during a tea, an interview and a speech, said Kate Perkins, sophomore in animal sciences and industry.

Current delegates are Perkins and Todd Johnson, sophomore in agronomy.

Their duties include maintaining public and alumni relations and recruiting prospective students for the College of Agriculture, Perkins said.

Other statewide activities the delegates participate in are farm shows, soil conservation tours and 4-H banquets, she said.

"A big responsibility is going around during the summer to county fairs, going to the state fair, and during the school year going to high school assemblies," Johnson said.

At K-State the delegates help with registration during events such as the Cattlemen's and Swine Producer's Day. They assist with the All University Open House and the Little American Royal, and serve on the executive committee of the Agriculture College Council.

Eight applications were received last year, Riley said, and hopes more students will apply this year.

The College of Agriculture last year changed the program to the Agriculture College Delegates from the Miss Agriculture title, who was a student in the college chosen to represent the college at K-State and statewide events.

The selection process and criteria are the same as they were for Miss Agriculture, but the delegates' duties have changed somewhat from Miss Agriculture's duties, Johnson said.

"We may not have all the same duties because some are not as appropriate, like riding in parades," he said.

Miss Agriculture was a queen figure and did things such as handing out ribbons and judging barbecues, Perkins said.

"I don't think it's lost anything, but was a positive change," she said.

Fund withdrawal not expected to affect ag engineer programs

By The Collegian Staff

A reallocation of funds by the Department of Agricultural Engineering will not adversely affect programs currently offered by the College of Engineering, said Dean Donald E. Rathbone.

Funds once made available by the State Board of Vocational Education for agriculture mechanization and related outreach programs are being withdrawn from the University.

"This is not something new," Rathbone said. "(The withdrawal) has been happening over a 10-year period. (The board) expects the University to pick it up on its own."

K-State is not the only school that will not be receiving funds from the board.

"There is a general trend around the country of (the board) withdrawing funds," Rathbone said. "The same standard approach is being taken with all universities."

The agriculture mechanization program deals with a degree program in agriculture taught jointly with the agricultural engineering department. Related outreach programs include consulting programs for high school vocational instructors.

Modest adjustments will be made within the department, but the programs will continue to be offered and it will not affect staffing or other departments, Rathbone said.

"People won't be affected by the cuts — they won't know the difference," he said.

English, Spanish theaters compared

By Melinda Tiemeyer
Collegian Reporter

Differences and similarities between Spanish and English theater houses were discussed at a lecture titled "Public Playhouses in Renaissance Spain and England."

John J. Allen, professor of Spanish at the University of Kentucky, spoke Monday for the University Lectures in the Humanities series. Allen has written two books on Don Quixote and is an expert on the Spanish stage of late 1600s.

The first commercial theater in Madrid began in 1579. Anderson pointed out that both Shakespearian and Spanish theaters began as open-air theaters.

"Spanish theaters continued the same open-air theaters until the 1730s, which were a lot like Shakespeare's — but for a much longer period of time," Anderson said.

Anderson said documentation for research is usually drawn from descriptions of the theater during the 1600s.

"I think there is a lot more documentation in Spain, most of it still unfound, but it's a different kind of documentation so that the documents in England and Spain will eventually turn out to be quite complementary," Anderson said.

The buildings themselves do not resemble each other that much, but the conditions for the actors are similar, he said.

Anderson described an imaginary scene of the playhouse as it would be viewed in the 1600s.

A fundamental difference between the two was that the London stage was not directly related to the actor's needs.

"In Spain, no matter what the building looked like, the stage maintained a 2-1 proportion and relatively the same size, where as in England that does not seem to have been the case," Anderson said.

"There has been a great rash of discoveries lately of theaters in Spain; there are presently seven of them," he said. Anderson supplemented the lecture with slides of various playhouses in Spain and England. The slides displayed the layout of the theaters, as well as the cities.

Lateral stages were used more frequently in Spanish theater than English, meaning that stage and seating space was interchangeable at the corners of the stage.

"This is one of the main distinct features between this theater and Shakespeare's. It has never been suggested that Shakespeare had this kind of flexibility," Anderson said.

Another major difference is Spanish theater allows more hill scenery than English theater, he said.

Anderson has lectured across the United States and Europe. The University Lectures in the Humanities series is sponsored by the English, history, modern languages and philosophy departments, the College of Arts and Sciences, and the Graduate School. Sigma Delta Pi Spanish student honorary society was an additional sponsor.

Senate will consider abuse bill

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - A Senate Judiciary Committee heard testimony on Monday about a bill that would make it a crime to knowingly report a false allegation of child abuse or neglect.

The state Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services investigates all complaints of child abuse or neglect, said Bob Barnum, SRS commissioner of youth services. SRS received 27,000 complaints in the last fiscal year.

False reports are becoming more frequent and taking up the time of SRS investigators who are already overworked, Barnum said.

Many knowingly false reports are filed when estranged or divorced couples are fighting over custody of their children, Barnum said.

Students expressed different concerns and areas of interest to the representatives, said Pat Bosco, vice-president for institutional advancement. These included, choice of major, financial aid, housing and campus life.

"Typically, we're finding high school students very enthusiastic about how K-State measures up academically to other institutions," Bosco said.

Bosco said he believes the reasons for enrollment increases go much deeper than recruiting.

"The enrollment increase is due to everything from a strong faculty, satisfied students and increased commitment, to showcasing what K-State has to offer," he said.

The efforts of the faculty, administration, admission representatives, alumni and students has helped to increase enrollment, Bosco said.

Faculty members who visited students and their parents, and the alumni who met with high school students made a difference, he said.

"This was a University-wide effort," Bosco said. "All of these efforts were focused and organized. We had a vision."

There are several reasons why there has been an increased interest in K-State, said President Jon Wefald.

He said the major reason is the increased awareness about the quality of K-State's academic programs.

"We are getting the message out that this is an excellent university," Wefald said.

These combined efforts were the reason for the increase in the number of National Merit Scholars in the 1987 freshman class, Bosco said.

In fall 1986, 16 National Merit Scholars from Kansas were freshmen and in 1987 that number rose to 34. K-State also attracted five out-of-state merit scholars in 1987.

In addition, more Governor scholars enrolled at K-State than any other regents university, Bosco said.

The State Legislative Planning Committee said of the 355 Governor Scholars that had indicated a university of their choice, 104 chose K-State.

"Since 1974, K-State has been in the top one percent for Rhodes Scholars, and there is no other public institution that has as many Truman Scholars (as K-State)," Bosco said.

Success one year helps the next year, Wefald said.

"This kind of success brings success," he said. "It sets the stage for the next year."

A majority of K-State students are from Kansas, but the University does attract many out-of-state students, Downey said. However, out-of-state students usually choose K-State because of a particular program.

"Clearly in the undergraduate programs, the majority of students are from Kansas," he said. "But we have a significant number of students who come here for a particular program like the architecture and design program."

Downey cited friends and relatives as two other reasons that out-of-state students come to Kansas.

Also, K-State's graduate programs attract many out-of-state students, Downey said.

"Most out-of-state students come here because we have a good reputation for having good graduate programs," he said. "In graduate programs, you don't go to in-state programs, you go where the best academic program is."

Another enrollment category looked at by the Planning and Evaluation Office is international students.

"The trend nationwide is that enrollment is up for international students," Downey said.

The reasons international graduate students attend K-State are not any different from any other students, he said.

"International graduate students are not any different than any other graduate student," Downey said. "They are applying here on the basis of the academic program."

The last five years has shown a slow growth in graduate enrollment and that this growth will continue, he said.

"If you wish to attract and retain top quality faculty, you must have top quality graduate programs," Downey said. "An increase becomes a stimulus for the faculty to become productive."

Despite the planning and recent enrollment increases, he said the trend may not continue.

"(The) demographics for high school enrollment are not good for the next few years," Downey said. "Eventually K-State will show a gradual decline in the enrollment figures."

The trend should reverse again in the 1990s, he said.

when the New Hampshire results are analyzed. Thus, he noted that his rivals have been attacking him regularly, adding, "I assume that's going to take its toll."

No two polls were alike. But they all showed a Republican race as close as the Democratic campaign was not.

Dukakis, governor in next-door Massachusetts, held a commanding lead among the Democrats with support of roughly 40 percent of the voters. Gephardt and Simon, who finished a close one-two in Iowa's caucuses last week, are in a duel for second place. Jesse Jackson, Babbitt, Gary Hart and Sen. Albert Gore Jr. are far afield in the polls.

Among the Republicans, the surveys said that Dole has wiped out all of Bush's once-commanding lead in the eight days since the Kansas senator won the Iowa caucuses and the vice president slipped to third place behind Pat Robertson. Robertson, Kemp and former du Pont are in a close fight for third place in the same surveys.

What the polls couldn't say was whether Dole's momentum would carry him past a struggling Bush to first place.

The vice president had his retooled, informal campaign style on display. He went from one restaurant to another to greet voters at breakfast time, ordering pancakes at one stop, sipping coffee at a second and eating an Egg McMuffin during a visit to a McDonald's.

Bush attacked Dole's call for a spending freeze as a "copout" that avoids making tough decisions, and forecast a victory for himself in the lead-off primary.

"I'm going to win tomorrow. Believe me," he told a cheering crowd at Daniel Webster College in Nashua.

Dole and his senior aides sounded confident. "I think it's that close," said Dole, who said a victory in New Hampshire might carry him all the way to the GOP nomination.

"I'm always skeptical until the polls close," he said, but then added that he had followed his pollster's example and "slept well last night."

in the Union throughout the year and are expected to be transported to other locations for brief showings, said University Archivist Anthony Crawford.

The 125th anniversary will be noted throughout the year with an anniversary convocation, guest lectures, cultural programs and the All-University Open House in late March.

John Fairman, assistant vice president for University Relations, is coordinator of the anniversary celebration committee. Fairman is assisted by Carol Miller, professor of modern languages.

having 3 cents in his pocket.

"There was an assistant football coach here (at K-State) by the name of Stan Williamson," Gardner said. "Stan and I were roommates in college (at the University of Southern California), he was captain of the football team and I was the captain of the basketball team at the time.

"Well, when this job opened up he got in touch with me," he added. "In those days a stamp cost 3 cents, so I spent 3 cents and mailed in my application to the athletic director, Mike Ahearn, and, believe it or not, they got me for 3 cents. They couldn't afford to bring me in for an interview and they had me come in right before the season."

After coming to Manhattan in the fall of 1939, Gardner was ready for the season to begin and had high hopes for his Wildcats. One problem prevented him from having the kind of season he hoped for — no Wildcats to put on the court.

"I asked Mike (Ahearn) how the recruiting had gone when I got here," he said. "(Mike said) 'that they didn't really do any recruiting and that I'd have to check over the gym classes and intramural programs and go from there.'"

In Gardner's first season, the Wildcats ended up 6-12 in the Big Six League.

But perhaps Gardner's most important contribution to K-State athletics was his determination to make a new field house a reality.

"We fought with legislators and people all around the state to raise money for a new field house," he said. "We, at times, had people in Nichols Gymnasium drop stuffed dummies from the rafters when important people came to watch the game.

"We thought we'd give them a subtle reminder that something like this could happen if we didn't get a new field house," Gardner added.

As for the memories Gardner still remembers most vividly, the students come to mind first and foremost.

"They have been the greatest that I have ever seen since I got into coaching," he said. "That's a long time in coaching for me, and this K-State crowd sticks with these 'Cats through thick and thin. They are the best."

Sandra Day O'Connor addresses full house for Landon Lecture

By Judy Lundstrom

In an address that was praised by some and criticized by others, Supreme Court Associate Justice Sandra Day O'Connor delivered the 78th Landon Lecture on Public Issues Tuesday in McCain Auditorium.

Speaking to a standing-room-only crowd of 1,850, O'Connor focused her 30-minute address on the establishment of the country's judicial

But, she added, the justices seldom all see eye-to-eye on a case. Of the 175 cases the court heard last year, all but 25 had differing opinions.

Because of the broad language employed in the Constitution, O'Connor said a branch of government must sometimes exercise a specific power to give meaning to a rule.

Students' supplies cheaper at Co-Op

By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reporter

"Booksellers take advantage of students because they know the students have to buy textbooks to get good grades in their classes."

"The price of college textbooks is too high."

"Booksellers don't give a fair price for used books."

Do these complaints sound as though they were said last week, or even this morning? They weren't.

In March of 1898, the Board of Regents for the Kansas State Agricultural College recommended that the college establish a bookstore in which "books and supplies be sold for cash only ... at cost and expenses." The regents stipulated that John Walters, professor of Architecture and Drawing, serve as purchasing agent for the store.

The bookstore was situated in Anderson Hall. In its first year, it enjoyed good relations and success with the student body. Then, the day-to-day maintenance was turned over to C.C. Jackson, K-State graduate of 1900.

"In a short time this enterprise was allowed to languish and fall by the wayside. There being no competition, prices then went up until flesh and spirit would bear it no longer," wrote F.A. Kiene Jr., K-State graduate of 1906, in the 1909 Royal Purple.

The outcome of Jackson's management was the establishment of the Students' Co-Operative Association in the fall of 1899, an organization dedicated to providing students with textbooks and school supplies at the lowest prices possible.

The co-op was initially funded by selling stock to students. All stockholders were eligible for a 5 percent rebate on all purchases. The regents sold all of the items in the college bookstore to the newly established co-op at cost.

The co-op began operation in a small building next to campus. Just like the now-defunct college bookstore, the co-op was successful its first year.

After the turn of the century, several of the co-op's founders graduated, and the second president of the co-op died. Its management took a turn for the worse. By 1906, the bookstore co-op was in financial trouble. The co-op's management decided that the best way to fix the bookstore's problems was to move and expand the facility.

Their judgment proved correct.

By 1909, the bookstore co-op was financially stable and able to build its own building. (Woody's Mens Shop, 700 N. Manhattan Avenue, now occupies that building, which still bears the name of the bookstore above the canopy.)

Until 1947, when the Co-op Bookstore became the Campus Bookstore, it continued to be a student-owned organization.

Students protest oath

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

The Communist scare which swept the nation in the late 1940s reached K-State in 1949, when all faculty and employees were required to sign an anti-disloyalty oath before their acceptance for employment, beginning with the 1949-50 school year.

The oath was implemented by a general statute law passed by the Kansas Legislature in 1949. It required all faculty to sign a statement affirming that they would not advocate or become a member of "any political party or organization that advocates the overthrow of the government of the U.S. or of this state by force or violence."

James C. Carey was a professor of history at K-State from 1948-1981, and a staunch protester of the oath. Carey remembers all too well the implications the oath entailed.

"I was against that sort of oath," he said. "It was one way of hushing up the voices of the faculty. Intellectual freedom was damaged."

Carey said many faculty members believed the oath was singling them out.

"We were at first a little perturbed and confused," he said. "And a bit angry. Why did they single us out? It was like (the Legislature) was saying, 'We can't trust you children.'"

Faculty members gave up more than academic freedom, Carey said.

"You had to wonder, if you don't sign ... are you going to lose promotions?" he said.

Carey recalled that some faculty signed under protest.

"We all signed something," he said. "Whether something else was more obnoxious than another ... I just don't remember."

Carey wrote the book "Kansas State University — The Quest for Identity." In an excerpt from the history he recalls the support the 1949-50 staff received from the student senate.

Burk Jubelt, who was student senate chairman at the time, offered a motion in senate protesting the oath. Jubelt said the oath violated "an individual's fundamental and essential freedom of association, speech, press, and the right against self-incrimination as guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution."

Carey joined with three other K-State professors in a lawsuit testing the constitutionality of the oath in 1966.

Cecil Miller, professor of philosophy; William Boyer Jr., professor of political science; and Alfred Borg, professor of bacteriology, sided with Carey in the suit.

The plaintiffs claimed the oath deprived them of rights granted by the first and 14th Amendments.

They prevailed when the oath was declared unconstitutional in September 1967 by a three-member panel of federal judges.

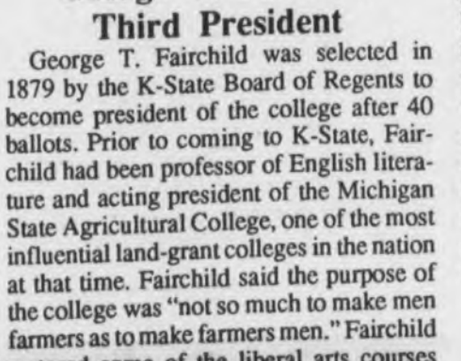
K-State's 12 presiden...

Joseph Denison
First President

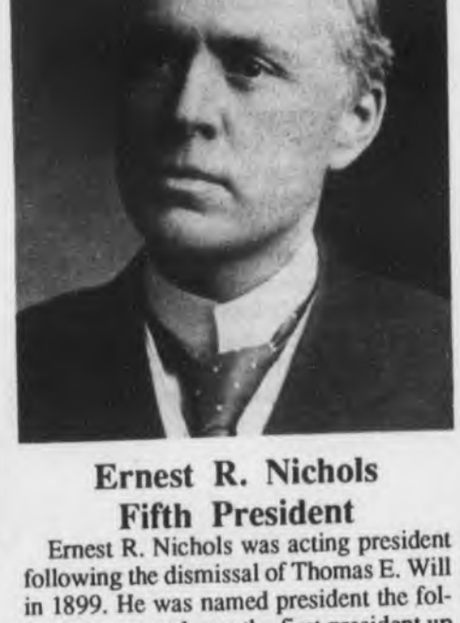
The Rev. Joseph Denison was hired by the Kansas State Agricultural College Board of Regents to be president of K-State when it opened its doors in the fall semester of 1863. In the early part of Denison's administration, most of the students were enrolled in the preparatory curriculum and not in the college. The state provided little support for the school and was itself financially strapped due to the costs inflicted upon the country by the Civil War and Reconstruction. Kansas was also hit hard by the border war with Missouri. Denison is credited with keeping the university's doors open during its infancy.



John A. Anderson
Second President

Hired in 1873 to replace Denison as president, the Rev. John A. Anderson began the process of defining K-State as an institution of practical instruction for future farmers and artisans. Under his administration, the length of study for a student was shortened from six years to four. The Latin requirement was dropped from the curriculum and made optional. Anderson's tenure was marked by frequent clashes with the faculty over the curriculum. The former Presbyterian minister also made enemies with his pungent writings. The Industrialist, a weekly newspaper produced by printing students in the industrial arts department, was started during this period.

George T. Fairchild
Third President



George T. Fairchild was selected in 1879 by the K-State Board of Regents to become president of the college after 40 ballots. Prior to coming to K-State, Fairchild had been professor of English literature and acting president of the Michigan State Agricultural College, one of the most influential land-grant colleges in the nation at that time. Fairchild said the purpose of the college was "not so much to make men farmers as to make farmers men." Fairchild restored some of the liberal arts courses that had been cut during the Anderson administration. He tightened the entrance requirements of the college and the requirements for graduate degrees. Fairchild is said to have been democratic in his leadership style, acting often with full consultations with the faculty.

Thomas E. Will Fourth President

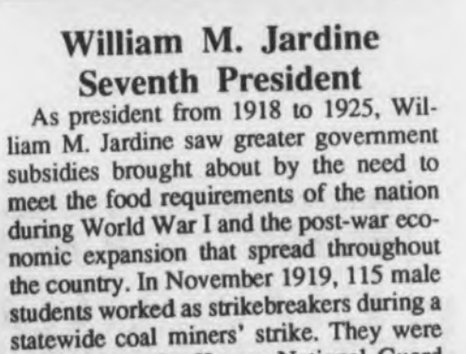
See opposite page for a description of Will's life and administration.

We would like to thank the people of University Archives for their help with this publication.

Ernest R. Nichols
Fifth President

Ernest R. Nichols was acting president following the dismissal of Thomas E. Will in 1899. He was named president the following year and was the first president up to that time not to run budget deficits. During Nichols' presidency, greater definition was given to the jobs of the deans of divisions. Also, the council of deans was created as a policy-making body, and student government was first created in the form of a student council. The first summer school course ever offered at K-State began during Nichols' presidency.



Henry Jackson Waters
Sixth President

Beginning in 1909, President Henry Jackson Waters built on administrative structures created by Nichols and increased the growth of the bureaucratic nature of K-State's administration by making the deans of the college's divisions his primary subordinates. They became the middle-level managers of the college, responsible for the assignment of students to classes — a function previously performed by the president. The deans also became the individuals responsible for the hiring of teaching personnel, a job that had been left up to the president and the Board of Regents until that time. Also, the first statewide board supervising both K-State and the University of Kansas was created during Waters' administration. Though both schools continued to have separate boards of regents, these boards were placed under the State Board of Administration, which also supervised state penal and charitable institutions. Waters was the first president to have a formal inauguration ceremony to celebrate his assumption of the presidency.

William M. Jardine
Seventh President

As president from 1918 to 1925, William M. Jardine saw greater government subsidies brought about by the need to meet the food requirements of the nation during World War I and the post-war economic expansion that spread throughout the country. In November 1919, 115 male students worked as strikebreakers during a statewide coal miners' strike. They were protected by the Kansas National Guard while doing strip-mining. K-State began offering regular radio broadcasts from station KSAC in 1920. By this time, the college had come to have greater reliance on state appropriations for its financial support, in contrast to its early days when K-State relied on land sales to pay its bills. In 1925, Jardine resigned the presidency to become Secretary of Agriculture in the cabinet of President Calvin Coolidge.

Francis D. Farrell
Eighth President

Sandra Day O'Connor addresses full house for Landon Lecture

By Judy Lundstrom
Editor

In an address that was praised by some and criticized by others, Supreme Court Associate Justice Sandra Day O'Connor delivered the 78th Landon Lecture on Public Issues Tuesday in McCain Auditorium.

Speaking to a standing-room-only crowd of 1,850, O'Connor focused her 30-minute address on the establishment of the country's judicial review cases that present issues over which lower courts have reached conflicting viewpoints.

But, she added, the justices seldom all see eye-to-eye on a case. Of the 175 cases the court heard last year, all but 25 had differing opinions.

Because of the broad language employed in the Constitution, O'Connor said a branch of government must sometimes exercise a specific power to give meaning to a rule.

One example is the "advise and consent" clause, which says justices all be nominated by the president vise and consent" of the

Students' supplies cheaper at Co-Op

By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reporter

"Booksellers take advantage of students because they know the students have to buy textbooks to get good grades in their classes."

"The price of college textbooks is too high."

"Booksellers don't give a fair price for used books."

Do these complaints sound as though they were said last week, or even this morning? They weren't.

In March of 1898, the Board of Regents for the Kansas State Agricultural College recommended that the college establish a bookstore in which "books and supplies be sold for cash only ... at cost and expenses." The regents stipulated that John Walters, professor of Architecture and Drawing, serve as purchasing agent for the store.

The bookstore was situated in Anderson Hall. In its first year, it enjoyed good relations and success with the student body. Then, the day-to-day maintenance was turned over to C.C. Jackson, K-State graduate of 1900.

"In a short time this enterprise was allowed to languish and fall by the wayside. There being no competition, prices then went up until flesh and spirit would bear it no longer," wrote F.A. Kiene Jr., K-State graduate of 1906, in the 1909 Royal Purple.

The outcome of Jackson's management was the establishment of the Students' Co-Operative Association in the fall of 1899, an organization dedicated to providing students with textbooks and school supplies at the lowest prices possible.

The co-op was initially funded by selling stock to students. All stockholders were eligible for a 5 percent rebate on all purchases. The regents sold all of the items in the college bookstore to the newly established co-op at cost.

The co-op began operation in a small building next to campus. Just like the now-defunct college bookstore, the co-op was successful its first year.

After the turn of the century, several of the co-op's founders graduated, and the second president of the co-op died. Its management took a turn for the worse. By 1906, the bookstore co-op was in financial trouble. The co-op's management decided that the best way to fix the bookstore's problems was to move and expand the facility.

Their judgment proved correct.

By 1909, the bookstore co-op was financially stable and able to build its own building. (Woody's Mens Shop, 700 N. Manhattan Avenue, now occupies that building, which still bears the name of the bookstore above the canopy.)

Until 1947, when the Co-op Bookstore became the Campus Bookstore, it continued to be a student-owned organization.

Students protest oath

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

The Communist scare which swept the nation in the late 1940s reached K-State in 1949, when all faculty and employees were required to sign an anti-disloyalty oath before their acceptance for employment, beginning with the 1949-50 school year.

The oath was implemented by a general statute law passed by the Kansas Legislature in 1949. It required all faculty to sign a statement affirming that they would not advocate or become a member of "any political party or organization that advocates the overthrow of the government of the U.S. or of this state by force or violence."

James C. Carey was a professor of history at K-State from 1948-1981, and a staunch protester of the oath. Carey remembers all too well the implications the oath entailed.

"I was against that sort of oath," he said. "It was one way of hushing up the voices of the faculty. Intellectual freedom was damaged."

Carey said many faculty members believed the oath was singling them out.

"We were at first a little perturbed and confused," he said. "And a bit angry. Why did they single us out? It was like (the Legislature) was saying, 'We can't trust you children.'"

Faculty members gave up more than academic freedom, Carey said.

"You had to wonder, if you don't sign ... are you going to lose promotions?" he said.

Carey recalled that some faculty signed under protest.

"We all signed something," he said. "Whether something else was more obnoxious than another ... I just don't remember."

Carey wrote the book "Kansas State University — The Quest for Identity." In an excerpt from the history he recalls the support the 1949-50 staff received from the student senate.

Burk Jubelt, who was student senate chairman at the time, offered a motion in senate protesting the oath. Jubelt said the oath violated "an individual's fundamental and essential freedom of association, speech, press, and the right against self-incrimination as guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution."

Carey joined with three other K-State professors in a lawsuit testing the constitutionality of the oath in 1966.

Cecil Miller, professor of philosophy; William Boyer Jr., professor of political science; and Alfred Borg, professor of bacteriology, sided with Carey in the suit.

The plaintiffs claimed the oath deprived them of rights granted by the first and 14th Amendments.

They prevailed when the oath was declared unconstitutional in September 1967 by a three-member panel of federal judges.

ts shape its history

Almost simultaneously with Francis D. Farrell's assumption of the presidency, the present statewide Board of Regents' system of governance for state universities came into effect. Passed in 1925, the bill required that nine members be appointed to the board by the governor without legislative approval, creating an independent commission to govern Kansas state colleges. During Farrell's administration, the Student Governing Association was founded. Doctor of philosophy degrees were awarded for the first time as well as the bachelor of arts degree. Also, a new attendance policy was approved for seniors during Farrell's presidency. Second-semester seniors were allowed to decide for themselves what classes they should or should not attend regularly.

Dwight D. Eisenhower, had to contend with changes forced upon the college by World War II, including a declining enrollment due to the draft. By 1944, enrollment at K-State had declined below pre-war levels. With the end of the war in 1945, K-State's enrollment began to increase as veterans returned home to enjoy the educational benefits of the GI Bill. Enrollment reached its highest levels during the late 1940s. For the first time since the start of the decade, the student population was predominantly male. The ratio of men to women was 4-to-1. Foreign students also made up a sizable proportion of the University's enrollment for the first time. With the increased enrollment came problems in housing. War-surplus barracks were purchased to house students, and housing was created under East and West stadiums.

and the proper means to express student discontent. Never was it worse than during the late 1960s and early 1970s, when student protests against the Vietnam War rocked K-State. Tension between the strongest opponents to the war and the administration had been on the rise all through 1968. Those tensions broke open with the burning of Nichols Gymnasium on Dec. 13, 1968. The fire was attributed to arson, and threats continued to be made against other campus buildings throughout 1969. Small fires were discovered inside Eisenhower Hall, and a small fire was set outside of Kedzie Hall. By May 6, 1970, when a rally was held to protest the Cambodia incursion and the deaths of four students at the hands of National Guardsmen at Kent State University, tensions had been reduced on campus.

Will caught in political battle

By Erwin Seba
Government Editor

K-State exists in a political atmosphere at all times.

Today the political battles affecting the university are often hidden, or if they surface at all are confined to the statehouse in Topeka.

It was not so during the presidency of Thomas E. Will, who led this institution from 1897 to 1899. Will served when two political parties — the Republicans and the Populists — struggled against each other to control state government.

The People's Party, nicknamed the Populists, was formed in 1890 from Farmer's Alliance groups, and sought to improve the lot of farmers and industrial workers.

In Kansas, the Populists, working with the Democartic Party, twice wrested control of the State Senate and the governor's mansion from the Republicans during the 1890s.

The second time the Populist-Democratic alliance won an election, major changes were instituted in the structure of the K-State Board of Regents.

In early 1897, the Legislature passed a bill removing the K-State president as the ex-officio board secretary, thus creating a seventh voting position on the board.

The new seven-member board — five Populists, two Republicans — met on April 7, 1897 and dismissed the entire college faculty.

On the following day, College President George T. Fairchild asked the board to retain those faculty members that it might still find acceptable to ensure continuity of instruction. Fairchild also resigned the presidency.

To replace Fairchild, the board selected Will to be college president.

It was not surprising for the board to select Will. Originally, he had been hired to conduct 13 lectures each semester on economics required at the direction of the board.

Will's first task as president was to hire replacements for the faculty members the regents had found unacceptable.

Julius T. Willard in his book, "History of the Kansas State College of Agriculture and Applied Science," wrote that the faculty members hired by Will were, "scholarly and, while favoring extension of government social control, were not radical in their beliefs."

James C. Carey, former university historian, wrote in 1980, "The quality of faculty was upgraded as (Will's) appointments included the first cluster of Ph.D.'s, all well qualified people."

Carey also cited Will's division of the K-State curriculum into four separate curricula as an important step in the evolution of the university.

Will divided these curricula into four distinct courses of study: general, agricultural, engineering and household economics.

The division of curricula also expanded the basic scope of the college with the creation of an engineering program, Carey wrote. Had it not been for Will's efforts on behalf of K-State's engineering course of study, this university might not have a program.

Yet, while these changes were being made, political fighting over the role the college played in society continued to be waged in election campaigns.

In 1898, a Republican governor and a Republican majority in the Legislature was elected.

With the death of one Populist regent and the expiration of another's term, Gov. William E. Stanley created a Republican majority on the board with the appointment of two Republicans to fill the vacancies.

On June 9, 1899, the board voted to fire Will and three professors hired by him, as well as his secretary.

After leaving K-State, Will taught at Ruskin College and worked for the American Forestry Association before moving to the Florida Everglades in 1910.

Van Zile first dorm

By Brad Fanshier
Collegian Reporter

In 1926, with an enrollment slightly less than 4,100, Kansas State Agricultural College opened the first building for on-campus living.

The first residence hall, Van Zile Hall, housed 140 women, about 4 percent of the enrollment.

The planning and construction of Van Zile began under President William Jardine's administration, but was not completed until Francis Farrell became president.

In 1938, Farrell requested more funds from the state to construct a second residence hall, but it was another 13 years before it was built.

Instead, an existing building, Waltheim Apartments at 1436 Laramie Street, was purchased in 1946 and renovated into another women's hall with a capacity of 80. It was named Waltheim Hall.

In the fall of 1946, veterans returned from World War II and the influx forced emergency housing measures to be taken. Residence areas were constructed in East Stadium and West Stadium, providing housing for 216 men.

Additional men's housing was provided when the University obtained wooden army barracks from the government. The barracks, which housed 300 men, were placed on the southeast corner of campus. The area was named Moro Courts, but residents referred to the area as "Splinterville."

The number of married students also increased sharply at the end of the war, and campus housing was needed to accomodate this group.

Once again, army barracks served as home for the couples. Divided into four apartments, 84 barracks were located in three lots. Hilltop Courts consisted of 120 apartments and was located where Durland Hall now stands.

Problems began with the buildings when the oak posts the buildings were set on became damaged by termites. When the cost of repairs began outweighing the revenue for the apartments, the Department of Housing began considering the construction of a second permanent structure.

Northwest Hall was completed in 1951. Northwest of Van Zile, the women's residence hall was built and later renamed Boyd Hall, in recognition of 1902 graduate Mamie Boyd.

Southeast Hall, another hall for women, was completed in 1952 southeast of Van Zile. The hall was later renamed Putnam Hall after L. Irene Putnam, former professor at K-State.

In 1959, 11 additional buildings were constructed to eliminate the need for units in the army barracks for married students.

Not until the fall of 1960 did a permanent structure exist on campus to house male students. Goodnow Hall, named for Issac T. Goodnow — one of the founders of the college, opened its doors to 600 men. With the opening of Goodnow Hall, 30 percent of the student population was living in campus housing.

Enrollment up following war

By Melinda Tiemeyer
Collegian Reporter

Political turmoil and economic hardships have played a substantial role in enrollment changes since K-State's beginning in 1836.

When K-State began, enrollment consisted of 26 men and 26 women, each paying $4 for a 13-week period. Many of those enrolled had not yet finished high school. They were labeled as sub-freshmen, and would take preparatory classes rather than college courses.

As could be expected, during the early years at K-State very few students were graduated. In fact, only 15 students graduated during the decade from 1863 to 1873.

According to information gathered from sources in the University Archives, enrollment increased in the early 1900s following the Populists' administration.

Homer Socolofsky, professor of history, said the increase in enrollment during the 1890s and early 1900s was largely due to an increase in students finishing high school.

"Most of the schools were rural, so a lot of people had to go great distances," Socolofsky said. "It was easier to finish high school at K-State and then go to college."

A steady enrollment increase took place until 1929, at which time the Great Depression caused a reduction in faculty salary and personnel, slowing enrollment throughout the 1930s.

After World War II, enrollment increased from 2,000 to more than 7,000 students. Many were able to attend college under the G.I. Bill of Rights.

"The Bill provided money to be used for a number of things, including helping to buy a house, start a business or vocational training," Socolofsky said. "Of course, a large majority of them used it to finance college."

Housing became a major problem during this enrollment surge. Barracks were built on the southeast part of campus and the area where Durland Hall currently stands to accomodate the surplus of students on campus.

Enrollment reached its peak for the post-war era in 1951.

Socolofsky said the high enrollment of the 1981-82 school year can be attributed to the "baby boom" generation.

These "baby boom" students are now today's career-oriented "yuppies."

Reasons for attending college have also changed since 1836. Socolofsky said that in the 1800s, people wanted a chance to finish their high school education. Today, they want to increase their chances of getting a better job, he said.

Sandra Day O'Connor addresses full house for Landon Lecture

By Judy Lundstrom

In an address that was praised by some and criticized by others, Supreme Court Associate Justice Sandra Day O'Connor delivered the 78th Landon Lecture on Public Issues Tuesday in McCain Auditorium.

Speaking to a standing-room-only crowd of 1,850, O'Connor focused her 30-minute address on the establ- review cases that present issues over which lower courts have reached conflicting viewpoints.

But, she added, the justices seldom all see eye-to-eye on a case. Of the 175 cases the court heard last year, all but 25 had differing opinions.

Because of the broad language employed in the Constitution, O'Connor said a branch of government must sometimes exercise a specific power to give meaning to a rule.

One example is the "advise and nsent" clause, which says justices all be nominated by the president th the "advise and consent" of the nate.

Sandra Day O'Connor addresses full house for Landon Lecture

By Judy Lundstrom
Editor

In an address that was praised by some and criticized by others, Supreme Court Associate Justice Sandra Day O'Connor delivered the 78th Landon Lecture on Public Issues Tuesday in McCain Auditorium.

Speaking to a standing-room-only crowd of 1,850, O'Connor focused her 30-minute address on the establishment of the country's judicial system. The lecture was held in conjunction with Founders Day, the 125th anniversary of the University.

O'Connor said the recent debates over the nominations of a new Supreme Court Justice have focused public attention on the court and led to questions about its role, power and method of operation.

The answers to the questions, she said, are outlined in the U.S. Constitution. She added, however, that the framers of the Constitution formulated those answers in broad and general terms.

"That we are still here with that structure intact is a powerful testament to the skill and wisdom they applied to their task," she said.

When designing the Constitution, O'Connor said, it was surprising that the framers paid little attention to the judicial branch as compared to the exhaustive debates that accompanied the design of the legislative and executive branches. She attributed the lack of debate to "a general high regard for the judiciary.

"Because they held judges in relatively high esteem, the framers were somewhat less concerned with erecting checks on judicial power than they were with creating similar checks on the other two branches," she said. "Perhaps there are those today who think our judges might not deserve such favored status, but in the minds of the framers, the third branch was the least dangerous branch."

Today, that branch comprises 749 active judges and more than 18,000 employees.

O'Connor said the founders' desire for uniform interpretation and application of the laws continues today, with the Court choosing to review cases that present issues over which lower courts have reached conflicting viewpoints.

But, she added, the justices seldom all see eye-to-eye on a case. Of the 175 cases the court heard last year, all but 25 had differing opinions.

Because of the broad language employed in the Constitution, O'Connor said a branch of government must sometimes exercise a specific power to give meaning to a rule.

One example is the "advise and consent" clause, which says justices shall be nominated by the president with the "advise and consent" of the Senate.

"It wasn't a barnburner, but it was certainly articulate. It was substantive, and in that sense one of the best we've had."
—William Richter

"It is possible that we have recently witnessed a change in the scope of Senate inquiry pursuant to this clause," she said. "Until relatively recently, it was not the practice of the Senate to ask any questions at all of the nominee."

O'Connor said that today the judicial branch has "considerably more influence than any of the delegates to the Constitutional Convention might have expected."

At an interview session before the lecture, O'Connor said, "I don't talk politics," and declined comment on whether smoking marijuana should have been an issue in the confirmation hearings of Douglas Ginsburg.

"That's not for me to say," she said. "That's for the president and members of Senate to determine."

But she joked about her own confirmation hearings in 1981, saying, "I thought when I had my hearings it was a painful experience. Looking back, I see it wasn't as painful as it could have been."

When asked if she considers herself a conservative or a moderate, she said, "I do not try to apply labels to myself. I let others do that."

Justice conducts student forum

By Susan Rouse
Collegian Reporter

Those cases the Supreme Court chooses to hear will likely be the most controversial, Associate Justice Sandra Day O'Connor told students in an afternoon forum following her Landon Lecture Tuesday morning.

The Supreme Court is — by necessity — selective with its caseload, O'Connor said.

Because of the number of cases the Court is asked to consider, "(the selection) tends to be those that raise significant issues on federal law," she said.

A Justice's three most important roles, O'Connor said, are selecting cases for the court to review, researching the case and writing opinions on each case.

In reference to the January Supreme Court decision on the high school censorship case Kuhlmeier vs. Hazelwood School District, O'Connor said those high school students wanting ultimate press control may begin publishing newspapers separate from the schools.

As affirmed by the Court's decision, school administrators have the right to review the material in a high school newspaper since it is a school-funded and sponsored activity, she said.

Some of the students and professors who attended the forum gave O'Connor's speech mixed reviews.

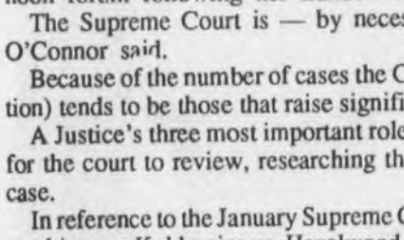
"I thought it was very interesting. It is not every day you can talk with a Supreme Court Justice," said Lloyd Johnson, junior in history.

Mary Hale, sophomore in history, asked O'Connor if she considered the right of privacy when making decisions.

O'Connor responded by saying that the courts have held marital relations within the right of privacy.

"It was pretty obvious that she avoided political issues," Hale said. "She dealt with issues on a superficial level as opposed to getting into the theories," she said.

However, Orma Linford, associate professor of political science, said O'Connor was completely proper with the way she handled students' questions. But Linford also said O'Connor was more reserved than other Justices who have lectured at K-State.



Students who attended the event should not have expected O'Connor to discuss how she would vote on certain cases, Linford said.

"I think the students, especially ones who have taken any political science, economics, history or literature class, already knew what she was talking about," she said.

O'Connor's lecture on the development of the judicial system was excellent, Linford said. But most of the students in attendance knew the Justices' roles and wanted to learn something more, she said.

"She didn't give her vision on what happens in the nation, and I think that is what the students wanted," Linford said. "It is terrific she came. She is the first woman Justice, and that is an historic event."

Bush, Dukakis win N.H. battle

By The Associated Press

CONCORD, N.H. — Vice President George Bush powered past Sen. Bob Dole in New Hampshire's kickoff presidential primary Tuesday and reclaimed momentum in the Republican race for the White House. Michael Dukakis won impressively in a Democratic contest for supremacy and survival.

"Reports of my death were greatly exaggerated," rejoiced Bush as he rebounded from a third-place finish in last week's Iowa caucuses. He was winning 38 percent of the GOP vote to 29 percent for Dole.

Rep. Jack Kemp was narrowly defeating Pete du Pont and Pat Robertson in the third-place competition to emerge as a conservative alternative to the front-runners. But the group was clumped far behind Bush and Dole.

Dukakis was winning 36 percent of the vote and said his showing would "give us a very, very strong boost" going into the delegate-rich Southern primaries ahead. In distant second place was Richard Gephardt, 20 percent, with Sen. Paul Simon at 17 percent.

"I love New Hampshire," the Missouri congressman said. But Simon, a narrow second-place to Gephardt in Iowa, conceded nothing.

Dukakis told his supporters, "Ten months ago we launched a

Enrollment benefits economy

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

Editor's note: This is the third installment of a five-part series on enrollment at K-State and what it means to the University.

For K-State, Elizabeth Bogdan is "the one that got away."

Bogdan, a junior at Benedictine College in Atchison, thought about attending K-State in the fall of 1985, and then she thought again. She decided against K-State because she said she was afraid she would get lost in the crowd.

"I thought it would be too impersonal," Bogdan said. "I really didn't know that much about it (K-State), so the curriculum had no bearing on my attending there."

Every prospective student who follows in Bodgan's footsteps will cost K-State and the Manhattan economy plenty.

The figures break down this way: Each student can be expected to spend $2,354 on room and board, and $1,362 for tuition and fees, according to figures published in the K-State Bulletin.

But that's not all. An extra $1,650 for books, clothes, entertainment and miscellaneous expenses can be added, said Don Hoyt, director of planning and evaluation services. Hoyt calculated the 1987 figures by updating figures released by the office in 1985.

Some quick addition reveals that K-State and the Manhattan economy lose about $5,300 per year when a student chooses not to attend this University.

That's the bad news.

The good news is that K-State enrollment is on the upswing, and more prospective students are visiting campus than ever before.

The Campus Visitation program began in September 1986 as a part of a University-wide effort to increase enrollment.

Since then, more than 3,200 students have visited K-State, according to figures released by Marilyn Trotter, director of new student programs. In 1988 alone, approximately 1,035 students have already visited campus, an increase of 221 students from last year at this time.

Those numbers impress Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life.

"It reflects the hard work of the faculty, student leaders, administration and the financial aid staff," he said.

Bosco said he was "a bit overwhelmed" by the large increase of students visiting campus.

"It's a pleasant surprise," he said. "It could have a positive snowball effect, but it's still too early to tell."

Bosco said he believes encouraging a student to visit campus is one of the most important aspects in the recruitment process.

"The campus visit is the cornerstone," he said. "It offers students a slice of what it will be like (to attend college). Prospective students and their parents like to look a (college) student in the eye."

Seven full-time admissions representatives travel throughout Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Colorado and Nebraska recruiting students to visit campus, Bosco said.

Admissions representative Tim Balfour recognizes the importance of a campus visit.

Balfour said he opens and closes his high school presentations by presenting the benefits of the visits.

The representatives cover different regions in Kansas, and he said students are responding to the fact that they have a contact person on campus.

"I have heard time and time again from students who have said, 'I've received a piece of info from you every month, and the other schools haven't sent me anything,'" Balfour said. "They really want that personal atmosphere."

The increase of students on campus has Bosco concerned about maintaining a personal approach.

"I am very concerned about the load it places on the academic dean's office," he said. "So far they have been very understanding and very responsive."

K-State must continue to convey a friendly and caring atmosphere to maintain its position in the marketplace, Bosco said.

The number of campus tour guides has recently been increased from 12

Husband strangles new wife

LOS ANGELES — A newly married woman whose husband reported she was blown off an ocean liner by strong winds during their honeymoon cruise was strangled, coroner's officials said Tuesday.

The coroner's announcement came as the woman's husband, Scott Robin Roston, 36, of Santa Monica, was formally charged with murder, said Mary McMeniman, spokeswoman for the U.S. Attorney's Office.

San Diego County Coroner's Deputy Max Murphy said Karen Waltz Roston, 26, died from "strangulation associated with drowning, which was determined to be a homicide."

Doctors performing the autopsy found bruises on her neck and other signs that she had been in a struggle before she died, according to an FBI affidavit filed in U.S. District Court and signed by agent Lawrence Gallagher.

The couple were married Feb. 4 in Las Vegas, Nev., and embarked shortly afterward on the Mexican cruise they won in a contest, said Roston's father, Sy Roston, from his home in Florida.

N Reactor to be terminated

WASHINGTON — The aging N Reactor, shut down amid safety concerns prompted by the Soviet nuclear accident at Chernobyl, will be placed in indefinite "cold standby," the Energy Department said Tuesday.

The decision means that the reactor, which for 25 years has produced plutonium for the nation's nuclear arsenal, will be mothballed next year after the completion and testing of $100 million in safety improvements.

Lawmakers said Congress is expected to go along with the decision, which is included in President Reagan's proposed spending plan for the next fiscal year. About 2,600 workers will eventually lose their jobs at the reactor, located at the Hanford nuclear reservation in central Washington state.

Energy Secretary John Herrington said the decision to close the reactor was a result of a review of the nation's future need for plutonium conducted by the Department of Defense.

Barker may picket pageant

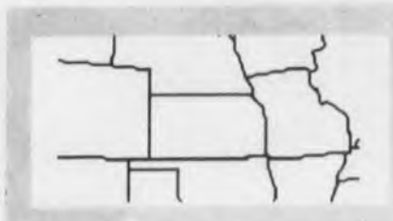
EL PASO, Texas — Television celebrity Bob Barker says he may join animal rights activists in picketing the Miss USA pageant as a protest against a contest prize of a full-length fur coat.

Members of Sangre de Cristo Animal Protection Inc. from nearby Las Cruces, N.M., who will picket the pageant March 1, have invited Barker to join them.

Barker said Monday he will decide in a few days whether he'll join them.

"I'm totally supportive of Sangre de Cristo in this protest," Barker said in a telephone interview from Los Angeles.

Best known as host of the game show, "The Price is Right," Barker had been master of ceremonies for the pageant for 21 years before he resigned last month because the pageant decided to award the fur coat.



Traffic mishap ends in brawl

SILVERTHORNE, Colo. — Two men who fell 40 feet from a highway overpass while brawling over a traffic accident were hospitalized with serious injuries, authorities said.

Michael Harroun, 50, was in critical condition and Peter McNamara, 30, was in fair condition Tuesday, officials said.

The altercation, police said, began Saturday night when a truck driven by McNamara was involved in a collision with a car driven by Harroun on an Interstate 70 overpass near Silverthorne, about 70 miles west of Denver.

Officers said the men began fighting when they got out of their vehicles to inspect the damage. During the brawl, they fell over the bridge guardrail to the ground 40 feet below, police said.

Corporate windfall report heard

TOPEKA — The issue of corporate windfall, which has eluded state economists and statisticians, surfaced Tuesday before a legislative panel that is examining a proposed tax revison plan.

Gerhard Metz, director of taxation for the Kansas Chamber of Commerce and Industry, told the Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee that Kansas could receive as much as $20.4 million on 1987 tax returns in corporate windfall.

The Council of State Chambers of Commerce has estimated that Kansas corporate windfall — additonal money the state will receive as a result of changes in the federal tax law — could be as high as $191 million over the next five years, he said.

Metz spoke in support of a tax revision plan proposed by Sen. Bud Burke, R-Leawood, which would reduce the corporate income tax rate over a five-year period.

Burke's plan also would return the $135 million windfall the state will receive from individual income taxes over a five-year period.

"We believe that the extent of corporate tax increases resulting from federal tax reform to be understated," Metz told the commmittee. "The likelihood of such increases would justify a reduction in the corporate tax rate."

Today's testimony focused largely on the corporate windfall and the advantages of Burke's plan to industry, which would reduce the corporate income tax rate to 5.5 percent, compared to the current 6.75 percent.

Enrollment increases at WSU

WICHITA — Spring enrollment at The Wichita State University climbed to 16,040, an increase of 124 from last spring that reversed a three-year decline in the headcount, officials said Tuesday.

The full-time equivalent figure, a computation comparing the number of students with the number of credit hours they are taking, rose by 135 to 10,201.

Total credit hours, which had been in a downward trend for five years, increased by 1,545 to 138,107.

Graduate student enrollment rose by 71 to 3,612.

Debaters place at tournaments

Competing in two tournaments last weekend, the K-State Debate team placed first at the Southern Missouri State "Ozark Classic" and second at Southwestern College's "Moundbuilder" tournament.

At Southern Missouri, the team of David Filippi and Rich McCollum went undefeated and finished in first place. K-State took four of the top five speaking awards.

The squad is ranked No. 7 in the nation.

Man kills seven, wounds five in seige

By The Associated Press

SUNNYVALE, Calif. — A former employee of a Silicon Valley defense contractor fatally shot seven people Tuesday and wounded five others at the company's offices, including a woman who had spurned him, authorities said.

The man, identified by police as Richard Wade Farley, 39, surrendered after barricading himself inside the building for about six hours. Three officers grabbed him as he walked out with his hands in the air and he was taken to the Santa Clara County Jail in nearby San Jose.

Employees dove under desks and inside closets as the gunman shot his way into the two-story ESL Corp. building, witnesses said.

As the siege continued into the evening, police negotiators talked by telephone with the man, who "expressed a little remorse" for his actions, said Lt. Tom Moore of the Sunnyvale Public Safety Department.

Seven people were killed, said Alex Michaelis, commander of the safety department. They were not immediately identified.

The gunman, who was fired from the company three years ago, had called police and said he shot three people on the first floor "and as many on the second floor," said Capt. Al Scott of the safety department. He was armed with a rifle and a shotgun, Scott said.

One woman was listed in critical condition; two others were in good condition. The condition of two other victims was not immediately available.

At least three people had been reported holed up in a computer room and making telephone calls to police, while others were able to escape.

The shooting began about 2:30 p.m. at the subsidiary of TRW, about 40 miles south of San Francisco, near San Jose.

"I saw a man walk up and I didn't really pay attention and then just shortly later I heard bang, large bangs, and I realized it must be shots," said witness Norma Kessler, who hid in her office.

"I was in the office by myself and I closed the door and it locked and I got underneath my desk and I must have heard about 50 different shots over a period of time. I must have been in there maybe 20 minutes, something like that."

Nearby, police found a motor home they believe was driven by the gunman. Inside, officers found a quantity of ammunition, full cans of gasoline and other explosive material, Scott said.

One of those shot was the woman with whom the gunman had a relationship, Scott said. The two were never believed to have dated, he said.

Moore identified the woman as Laura Black, who he said had been a target of Farley's affections for about four years. Farley, who worked at ESL as a computer software technician, reportedly followed Black and Black had tried to keep him away.

Student impact may be 'checked'

By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reporter

A new plan being considered by Student Senate would affect students — each time they write a check.

The plan, still in its formulation stage, would involve a method of marking checks, either with a sticker or an ink stamp, said Troy Milsap, chairman of Senate's Legislative Affairs committee.

The stickers or ink stamps would be issued to students who wish to participate.

This will help in determining exactly how lucrative K-State is for the local economy.

"(The committee wants to) bring in the business community, the banks and everything, with the hope that when they talk to Topeka, they will feel fondly toward (K-State)," Milsap said.

It is a take-off of a plan implemented by the Associated Students of the University of Montana. ASUM got the idea from their Faculty Senate. The faculty members stamped the words "I am an employee of the University of Montana" on their checks, said Pam Grier, administrative assistant for ASUM.

"(The student campaign) was not very well organized, sort of last minute. I don't know how many students participated or how successful it was, but the faculty surveyed merchants and found that many of them had noticed the stickers," she said.

The Montana plan took place during the Montana Legislature's 1987 session. Stickers identifying the customer as a student of the University of Montana were made available in bookstores and at tables on campus.

Although the event received only limited press coverage by the school newspaper, the university has received inquiries from schools all over the nation, Grier said.

Members of K-State's Student Senate read about the project and formulated their own plan.

"There was some talk about doing it last semester, but the price estimates were completely unreasonable. They (the previous Senate) had a specific design drawn up. We just want something which will work. It doesn't have to be pretty," Milsap said.

Senate's plan is to use a set number of checks — approximately 50 — for each student.

Milsap emphasized that student participation is essential.

"If we had 100 students, we'd make a little impact, but if we have 9,000, we will really open some eyes," he said.

Senate plans to send representatives to meet with State Education Committee members.

Milsap said a decision could be made by the end of March. Even if that happens, he said the Senate will still be distributing the stickers or ink stamps at registration for the fall semester.

Engineer pleads guilty in train case

By The Associated Press

TOWSON, Md. — A Conrail engineer who ran a stop signal and caused an Amtrak crash that killed 16 people pleaded guilty to one count of manslaughter Tuesday in a bargain that will bring him no worse than five years in jail and a $1,000 fine.

Rick L. Gates, 33, who was scheduled to begin a trial on 16 counts of manslaughter by locomotive, was operating the three linked Conrail engines Jan. 4, 1987, when they skidded in front of an Amtrak passenger train carrying 660 people. The worst accident in Amtrak's history left 16 dead and more than 170 injured.

Gates was granted the guilty verdict after attorneys agreed to include in the single misdemeanor count the names of all 16 fatalities. Prosecutors reserved the right to ask for the maximum sentence of five years and $1,000.

Baltimore County Circuit Judge Joseph F. Murphy set sentencing for March 29. Gates remained free on $11,500 bail.

Commission to present plan to 'regionalize' local airport

By Audra Dietz
Collegian Reporter

City Commissioners authorized on Tuesday Mayor Gene Klingler to meet next week with local officials from Riley, Pottawatomie and Geary counties to present his plan to turn the Manhattan Municipal Airport into a regional airport.

Klingler described the plan to "regionalize" the airport as one which would consolidate the service for Manhattan, Junction City and three adjoining counties at Manhattan Municipal Airport.

Klingler said combining airports from Junction City and Geary, Pottawatomie and Riley counties would improve flight service and help attract industry.

Klingler said the entire Kaw Valley region is trying to attract industry and that poor flight service impairs the region's attractiveness.

"We can't get companies to even bring their executives here because they have to take a small plane and rent a car to drive to Manhattan," Klingler said. "A regional airport could solve the problem."

The area needs better connecting flights from Fort Riley and Junction City, he said. Klingler also wants to improve landing conditions.

"This is not an appealing place to fly in to," he said.

Klingler proposed a three-year financing plan to develop the airport. Under his proposal, the City of Manhattan would contribute $25,000 and the other four counties would put up $5,000 each for the next three years to create a regional airport.

Klingler said the Manhattan area has enough air traffic to justify the expense.

"We have the second busiest airport in the state for commercial aviation. We are in an unusual market," he said. Mid Continent Airport in Wichita is the only airport with more traffic.

Klingler said the actual consolidation would have to take place before a manager could be hired.

O'Connor's failing

Justice gives extended history lesson

Commentary

WALLY BROCKHOFF
Collegian Columnist

We did again. Yes, another Landon Lecturer received a standing ovation for a mediocre presentation. I am, of course, referring to the 78th Landon Lecture that was given Tuesday by Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, and the standing ovation she received for giving a 30-minute history lesson. (And all the students who had their Intro to Political Science class cancelled to attend the lecture thought they were getting by with something!)

Now don't get me wrong. The Landon Lecture Series on Public Issues is one of the best features K-State has to offer. One would be hard-pressed to find a university lecture series in the nation that has had as notable of speakers as ours has. Presidents, cabinet members, influential senators and Nobel Prize winners: We have had them all and should be proud of it.

The lecture series is the envy of many other universities around the country, including institutions that are the "academic elite." One of the most obvious of these is our poor, deprived cousins down the river who lay claim to being the "Harvard of the Midwest" but are "embarrassed" to not have a lecture series comparable to ours. (As if we are just plain ol' folk who cannot understand the high-fallutin' words the lecturers use.)

There have been some notable Landon Lectures in my four years at this fine institution. Two who come to mind are those of El Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Duarte and Pulitzer Prize-winning columnist George Will. Duarte's lecture has to be on the all-time top three list for establishing a rapport with the audience.

Maybe it was because of his use of a chalkboard and classroom-type presentation revived from his old teaching days, or maybe it was the articulate manner in which he dissected the issues that faced him as president of a nation in turmoil; in any case, I doubt there was anyone in attendance who was not captivated by his charm and style, regardless of political persuasion or passion.

Will was notable because of his message that reflected his knack for focusing on the heart of an issue in a witty manner. Now, I hate getting caught up in these labels like "liberal" or "conservative," but I liked the way Will fully articulated his beliefs and would not apologize for them. Whether or not one agreed with his ideology, everyone who listened to him that day left a little bit richer in knowledge because they came.

Maybe it has been luck or skill or a little bit of both, but the lecturers we get are not only notable but timely: O'Connor during a time of new visibility for the Supreme Court, President Oscar Arias in the midst of his Central American peace plan, George Schultz the day of the U.S. bombing of Libya. This has added to the potential for the lecturers to provide meaningful insight into these areas of public policy that affect us all. The key word in the last sentence is "potential," which is precisely my beef. By and large, many lectures denigrate into useless rhetoric on a safe subject, as in the case of Vice President George Bush and Arias, or a token history lesson as given by O'Connor.

Maybe it's just a personality quirk I have acquired, but I expect someone who holds a public office to be willing to share with us their knowledge and insight into the issues that affect us. Instead, they seem to hide behind the aura of "they are just fortunate that a person of my stature came to this isolaed Midwestern university."

I support the idea behind the Landon Lecture series — to provide a forum for public policy debate in an academic community. Alf Landon, whom the series owes its name, was known as an extremely down-to-earth and candid figure. I just wish that more of the lecturers who visis his series would emulate those guidelines.

Many can take credit for rise in enrollment

Spring is traditionally a time of growth for all healthy things. And keeping with that tradition, K-State's enrollment, which is looking healthier every year, has grown yet again this semester.

At first glance the increase could be attributed to the increase in programs aimed at recruiting new students to the University. On-campus enrollment has increased this spring by 555 students, making this spring's enrollment the highest in K-State's history.

However, it isn't just the results of an effective recruiting system that are indicated in the figures.

Faculty and staff deserve much of the credit for improving enrollment. There is better student retention this semester, much of which is due to the attempts by faculty to improve the college atmosphere for students. With fewer students leaving the University, and recruitment increased, K-State is enjoying the benefits of high enrollment.

What does this mean to the average student? There is likely little noticeable difference, except that a few classes may be a little fuller since most of the departments are showing an increase. Residence halls will have increased occupancy, and the competition for scholarships may be keener.

What it should mean to administration and state officials is that K-State is doing an effective job of attracting and retaining students. Maybe it's time for a reward, like an increase in funding and salaries.

If these are the results that can be achieved in hard financial times, imagine the improvements that could be brought about through an improvement in other areas which could aid in student retention, such as libraries and class funding.

K-State can enjoy its growth, but like all living things, it won't continue to grow without vital nutrients.

Landon Lecture series merits better speakers

Tuesday morning's Landon Lecture by Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor followed the series' usual course: say nothing new, receive your standing ovation and go back home.

O'Connor was not able to answer any questions about issues that are currently before the court or that may eventually come before the court, K-State President Jon Wefald said prior to beginning the question-and-answer period.

Isn't that typical of a Landon Lecture?

Yes, and the result is that this nation's best series is also the nation's most boring.

Big-name speakers with predictable things to say make for a predictable lecture series.

If K-State wants to have a series that is not just prestigious, but also informative, interesting and thought provoking, it should consider inviting people who have something new to say. Certainly, the series' history demands such innovation.

It is great for students to be able to say they have heard prestigious people speak.

But wouldn't it be better if they could say they learned something new, something for which a standing ovation was in order?

Ignorant reviews

Editor,

As a film aficionado, I have recently been offended by numerous blatantly ignorant comments made by "reviewer" Jeff Schrag. Quite a while ago, Mr. Schrag stated that the movie "... Batteries Not Included" contained no stars. No stars? I think Mr. Schrag meant to say that he didn't recognize anyone in the film, and this is quite a different matter.

Veteran actors Hume Cronyn and Jessica Tandy were featured prominently in the leads. Cronyn, a stage and screen star for half a century, won an Oscar nomination — his first — 44 years ago. Forty-four years ago! He has enjoyed a long and illustrious career, as has Tandy — an equally respected theater and film star. Combined, they have probably made more movies than Mr. Schrag has seen, as they have been working for more than twice the length of his life.

In another review, that of "Broadcast News," Mr. Schrag said that none of the leads were "incredibly famous actors," but maybe this film could change that. This is certainly true in Holly Hunter's case — the film will make her career. On the other hand, Albert Brooks, though not exactly mainstream, has a large and respectful following for his offbeat brand of humor.

But more outrageously, how can anyone say that William Hurt isn't incredibly famous? He is one of the premiere, legendary actors of this decade. His third Oscar nomination in three years will be for this film. I can assure Mr. Schrag that Hurt's career wasn't and isn't hinged on this picture.

Most recently, in a synopsis of "The Couch Trip," he commented that Dan Ackroyd was surrounded by "almost famous" supporting actors. Well, for my money, Walter Matthau, and to a lesser extent Charles Groden, aren't almost famous — they are famous.

The slighting of actors may seem trivial, but for Schrag to have done it shows a cinematic ignorance. I don't enjoy reading reviews by someone who proves time and again that he knows less about films than I do. I would suggest that in the future Mr. Schrag keep these offensive blunders out of his column. Better yet, perhaps he should go back to writing letters to himself on the editorial page.

A cruel world

Editor,

This letter is directed to David Svoboda in response to his column in Monday's Collegian accusing the athletic department of being unfair in the distribution of tickets to the Big Eight post-season tournament. I agree that 525 tickets is a very small number to be allotted to each university, but just who do you suggest should get these tickets?

Maybe we should make Fred Bramlage and all the alumni who have contributed to the Mike Ahearn Scholarship Fund pitch a tent on the steps of Ahearn and camp out for a month to get tickets. You as an ICAT contributed to this very fund in order to get preferred tickets to home games this season.

It was OK for you to do this, but now that someone else has priority you scream "unfair!" It is interesting to hear your reaction now that the shoe is on the other foot. Sure the students are major supporters of athletics through tuition, but the alumni have also paid their tuition, many before you and I were even born, and today still support the program. These are the people who made our athletic department what it is today, and for that simple reason they should have priority.

You aren't the only one who is mad. I get mad every time the national anthem is played before a game and I turn around to see the flag so close to my seat in the Ahearn end zone simply because I didn't buy a preferred ticket with a $20 ICAT membership. This leaves me with just one thing to say. Welcome to the cruel world of college athletics, Dave.

Sins of omission

Editor,

In his commentary regarding U.S. support for Israel ("When is enough enough?" in the Feb. 10 Collegian), Mike Nichols states the problems of the Palestinian peoples could be solved "if only Israel was given the facts." However, in laying out his "facts," Mr. Nichols commits several "sins of omission" which we would like to address to set the current situation in some perspective.

Although we are Jews and support the existence of Israel, we are not, nor will we be, apologists for recent Israeli actions against Palestinians in the occupied territories. The killings and beatings, the general suppression of protest in any form, is to us indefensible and agonizing. Agonizing because the situation threatens to turn two legitimate dreams, Jewish and Palestinian, into nightmares.

The events of the past two months have not, however, arisen de novo. They are the almost inevitable outcome of the occupation of the West Bank and Gaza 20 years ago. The Israelis didn't ask for these areas or their residents. They were captured in a war that was part of 20 previous years of hostilities threatening Israel's existence.

It is not unreasonable to be paranoid when someone really is out to get you. Israel has been living with violently hostile Arab and Palestinian neighbors for nearly 40 years. It is to deny this real and constant threat of espoused annihilation that the United States has sent arms and funds to Israel. Although this military aid has sometimes, albeit rarely, been misused, it has mainly served its purpose in keeping Israel alive. Despite the relatively recent assertions that the Palestinians no longer "cry to drive Israel into the sea," this threat to Israel and Israeli lives cannot be lightly dismissed on a verbal disclaimer.

And yet we believe Israel must risk accepting that disclaimer to achieve peace in order to save the soul of the Jewish dream.

The problem cannot be solved by imposing "facts" by means of "forceful advice" in the form Mr. Nichols suggests. There will be no easy solutions to a problem that has taken decades and many lives to reach us. We must all work to bring to this conflict communication and a lasting resolution that realizes the dreams of both peoples.

Correction

Because of an inaccurate editorial in The University Daily Kansan, the student newspaper at the University of Kansas, an item appearing on the Collegian's editorial page Tuesday was incorrect. The item, an excerpt of the Kansan editorial, appeared in the "Other Perspectives" column and wrongly stated that KU's School of Journalism had done away with the reporting course required for broadcast news majors.

The course — Reporting I — will be replaced by a broadcast production and writing course that will retain emphasis on information gathering and writing and producing radio and TV news stories, commericials, public service announcements and promotions.

Israeli soldiers bury Palestinians alive

Official calls act 'totally unacceptable'

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Israel's deputy hief of staff said Tuesday some soliers had committed "totally unacceptable" acts against Palestinians, nd hospital officials reported three rabs wounded by troopers in the Vest Bank.

Maj. Gen. Ehud Barak also said nore than 200 Israelis had been njured, most of them lightly, since rab riots began Dec. 8 in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip. He aid 53 Palestinians had been killed, ut the United Nations puts the numer at 54.

Barak confirmed some soldiers ad used a bulldozer to bury four alestinians alive near the West Bank city of Nablus and declared: "This pattern of behavior ... is totally unacceptable under the standards of the Israeli Defense Forces and any civilized norms. Whoever is found responsible for this event will be punished."

Neighbors rescued the four Arabs shortly after they were buried.

Young Palestinians set fire to a bus Tuesday, burned tires and built road blocks in the occupied territories and Arab east Jerusalem, where a general strike virtually closed down Arab communities and neighborhoods.

Riot police stopped a bus carrying Israeli Arab high school students from school in Haifa to their homes in Umm al Fahm and beat several of them, the daily newspaper Al Hamishmar reported.

An official at Umm al Fahm confirmed the report to The Associated Press. Police declined comment.

Transport Minister Chaim Corfu appeared to suggest Israel bombed a ferry that was to carry Arab deportees from a Cyprus port to Israel. If the Palestine Liberation Organization obtained another vessel, he said, "Its fate will be the same."

"We knew we wouldn't allow the boat to reach Israel," he said on Israel radio. "If we could prevent its departure, that was obviously the right thing to do."

In the West Bank, a soldier punched and shoved an Israeli cameraman working for NBC News.

The soldier said he asked the cameraman, Ofir Moradov, to stop filming a protest, but NBC correspondent Martin Fletcher said Moradov did not hear the request. The army said the soldier was convicted of "unbecoming conduct," but would not reveal his name or the sentence.

Barak said soldiers had no choice but to use beatings in an attempt to curb the riots.

"Whatever amount of force is needed ... is something that in my judgment is forced upon us by the situation," he told a news conference of foreign reporters.

"We can't easily put the realities of life into a simple set of orders. The situation created during the control of a violent riot is much more complicated than it might seem."

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said on a visit to Italy: "We want to put an end to the riots and restore normal life. On the other hand, we don't want to kill people. ... I hope in the near weeks we will find the most right methods."

"We have to handle it in the most human limitations," he said, addressing a news conference in English. "We have to defend ourselves and at the same time continue our efforts for finding peace."

Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin, questioned about the beating policy during debate in Parliament, said the orders to use force were necessary and "to the best of my knowledge and judgment, are legal."

Barak said the army is succeeding in "gradually (improving) the caliber of behavior of our forces," but added: "We are confronting a new type of threat. We cannot afford to yield to it, and we are not going to."

He said protesters are "led by a nucleus of activists who enjoy the support and cooperation."

Quality of used auto equipment questioned in Senate debate

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Advocates and foes of non-original equipment parts used n the repair of damaged automobiles debated before a Senate committee oday whether they are unsafe and devalue the vehicles or are a boon to lowering repair costs and insurance premiums.

Owners of body and parts shops spoke on both sides of the issue, while auto manufacturers' representatives argued against the nonoriginal quality replacement parts and spokesmen for the insurance industry strongly supported their use.

Both sides claimed their position was more beneficial to consumers.

The Senate Transportation and Utilities Committee took no action on the bill that spawned the debate.

It would require those who do damage repair work to disclose to owners that so-called "crash parts" are being used and their use could invalidate remaining warranties on the vehicle or render the vehicle out of compliance with federal motor vehicle safety standards.

Failure to comply would constitute a misdemeanor with a fine of $2,000 imposed, under terms of the bill.

Crash parts are those manufactured by companies other than the original equipment manufacturers. Insurance companies frequently dictate that the crash parts be used to repair damaged vehicles and require the owners to make up the difference if they want original manufacturer parts used.

They are much cheaper, and testimony before the committee was conflicting as to whether they are of nearly equal quality.

Those supporting the bill claimed its passage would insure that Kansas consumers have their cars restored to the full pre-accident value, while the opponents argued the replacement parts — manufactured mostly in Taiwan, but also in the U.S., Italy and Korea — are just as safe and meet manufacturer specifications about as closely as those made by the cars' original manufacturers.

Play to portray Soviet history

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — A new play by a leading writer equates Soviet founder Vladimir I. Lenin with his successor, dictator Josef V. Stalin, and provides a negative picture of 70 years of Soviet history, three historians said in an article published Monday.

The historians criticized Mikhail Shatrov's play "Onward ... Onward ... Onward" in a half-page article in the Communist Party newspaper Pravda.

The play was published in December and is to be performed this spring in Moscow. Shatrov has used the greater artistic freedom of Soviet Communist Party General Secretary Mikhail S. Gorbachev's reforms to produce plays on historical subjects that previously could not be touched by Soviet artists.

A play published last spring reviewed Lenin's decision to pull revolutionary Russia out of World War I against the advice of many of his supporters.

The new work takes the form of a debate among Bolsheviks and their opponents looking back over 70 years of Soviet history at the 1917 revolution.

The historians, G. Gerasimenko, O. Obichkin and B. Popov, accused Shatrov of using Lenin as a conduit for his own ideas and treats the Bolshevik revolution as an accident instead of the historical certainty that Soviet theorists claim it was.

They said Shatrov's play equates Stalin and Lenin, echoing those who claim "that the methods of Stalin are identical to those of Lenin, that Stalin starts his roots from Lenin's epoch. Thus the author unequivocally gives a negative description not of Stalin alone but the whole period of the socialist construction of this country," they said.

Pravda has criticized the play briefly before, but the lengthy article Monday was the most detailed and serious rejoinder.

Bill pending for alumni license tags

By Angela Hale
Collegian Reporter

A bill is now pending in the Kansas House of Representatives which would allow members of alumni associations to promote their schools on car license plates.

The Kansas Senate passed the measure earlier in this legislative session.

The plates would be available to any institution of higher education in the state, although there must be 500 alumni signatures before a school could participate in the program, said Sen. Dick Bond, R-Overland Park.

Bond said that the minimum of 500 signatures would probably limit the promotional license tags to the regents schools.

"It (participation) would depend on how active the alumni association is," he said.

The preliminary sketch for the K-State plates has Willie the Wildcat on the left side of the license tag number and "KSU Alumni Association" along the bottom. The county and year are placed in each of the upper corners of the plate.

The plates would cost $40 each, which is the same cost as a personalized plate, Bond said.

The idea for the promotional plates began at Pennsylvania State University, said Amy Button Renz, the director of membership for the KSU Alumni Association. Button Renz, along with the special projects directer for the University of Kansas alumni association, began pushing for the bill in February 1987.

Button Renz said the plates promote higher education and allow alumni to show support for their school.

The plates would also support the state economic development and provide additional revenue, she said. The alumni organization would receive no monetary benefit, Button Renz said.

Lt. Bill Jacobson of the Kansas Highway Patrol said that their main concern with the promotional plates is the problem of reading them.

"There are so many tags running around, that it (the school promotional plate) could hinder identification," Jacobson said.

With the many personalized plates it is sometimes necessary to "get out and inspect a tag to see what it says," he said.

If the bill passes this spring, promotions for the license plates could begin in the fall, Button Renz said. Paying members of the KSU Alumni Association who wanted a license plate could send an application to the association. The organization would then send the application to Topeka.

Meatless dishes staple for vegetarian dinners

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

Here's a recipe for trashing your body! Overeat and gain lots of weight; eat a lot of high-fat, high-calorie food with plenty of animal products; eat loads of simple and refined carbohydrates, especially candy and pastry; make sure any grains you eat are milled and refined; be as sedentary as the Grand Pooh-bah of couch potatoes; allow stress to build up — like maybe, take a job as a stockbroker. If you can't fit them all into a schedule evenly divided between television and Aggieville, just try a few; that may work too.

On the other hand, if your goal is to be healthy and perpetuate your genes, do just the opposite.

A cornucopia of international flavors can be achieved when a cook skillfully blends food staples and prepares a sumptuous casserole that contains no meat.

All of the recipes below are meat-free. They feature vegetables, pasta and spices as their cornerstones. These casseroles can provide a "home" kind of feeling, but are elegant enough to serve guests.

Casseroles are a boon to cooks trying to divide their time between school, studying, working, supporting the Wildcats and making a trip to Aggieville whenever the old budget can hack it.

Today is Ash Wednesday, which marks the beginning of Lent. Aside from the religious aspect of consuming less or no meat on Fridays, these casseroles are also very healthful in that animal fat, cholesterol and sodium have been either eliminated or minimized.

These casseroles can be prepared well in advance and frozen in a tightly wrapped or sealed container for up to three months.

If you freeze a casserole, be sure to allow extra time for baking — generally one hour for pint servings or 1¼ hours for quart servings.

The international tour of flavors begins with Italy.

Pasta Primavera

Ingredients:
1 tablespoon butter
1 tablespoon olive oil
¼ cup dry sherry or white wine
1 small onion, minced
4 tablespoons minced garlic
1 cup sliced mushrooms
½ cup julienned red or green bell pepper
1 cup peas, fresh or frozen
½ cup julienned carrots
2 tablespoons chopped fresh parsley
2 tablespoons chopped fresh basil (or 2 teaspoons dried basil)
½ teaspoon each: herbal salt substitute and ground pepper
4 cups cooked bow-tie pasta
1½ cups grated Parmesan cheese

Preparation instructions:

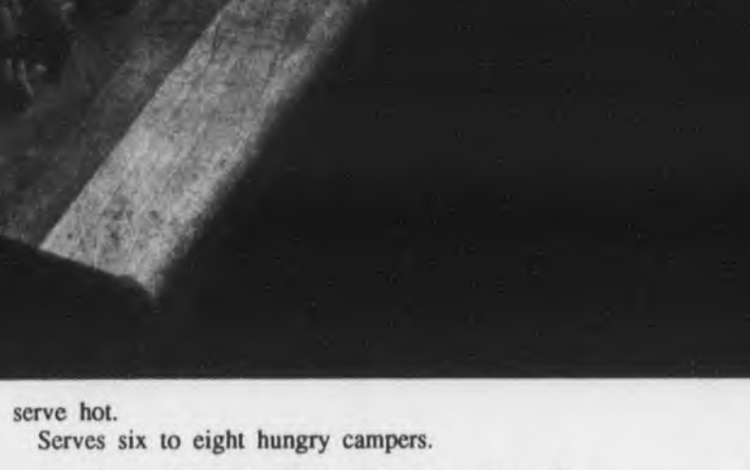
Heat together butter, oil and wine in a heavy skillet over medium heat and saute onion and garlic without browning for 8 to 10 minutes, or until soft.

Add mushrooms and bell pepper. Continue cooking over medium heat for 5 minutes, adding ¼ cup water if mixture begins to dry up.

Add remaining ingredients except pasta and cheese. Cook for 5 more minutes.

Toss with cooked pasta and place in a lightly oiled 9-inch by 12-inch casserole dish.

Top with Parmesan cheese and bake at 350 degrees for 15 minutes and serve hot.



Serves six to eight hungry campers.

Vegetarian Shepherd's Pie

This nutritious casserole is perfect for chilly days.

Crust ingredients:
¾ cup whole-wheat pastry flour
pinch of herbal salt substitute, or if you must, real salt
3 tablespoons margarine or butter

Filling ingredients:
2 tablespoons olive oil, or if you must, butter
1 onion, sliced thinly
2 cups cubed red potatoes
½ cup chopped carrots
2 leeks, cleaned and sliced into rounds
2 tomatoes, cored and chopped coarsely
1 cup chopped greens (such as spinach, kale or collard)
3 tablespoons chopped parsley

1 teaspoon arrowroot
1 cup vegetable stock, cooled
2 teaspoons nutritional yeast
1 tablespoon tamari
1 cup grated soy or dairy cheese (optional)
oil or egg for glaze

To make the crust:

In a large bowl, mix together flour and salt substitute or salt. Cut in margarine or butter and knead lightly by hand or in a food processor until margarine is completely incorporated.

Lightly flour a clean, dry surface and roll the dough into a 9-inch round.

Wrap carefully in plastic wrap and refrigerate. Lightly oil a 9-inch round baking dish and preheat oven to 300 degrees.

To make the filling:

Heat the olive oil or butter in a skillet and saute onion until very soft but not browned.

Add potatoes and carrots and continue cooking over medium heat for 5 more minutes. Add leeks, tomatoes, greens and parsley.

Cover and cook 4 to 5 minutes. Dissolve arrowroot in cooled vegetable stock, then add to vegetables. Cook for 10 minutes, stirring occasionally.

Pour filling into oiled casserole dish. Season with yeast and tamari. Lay the prepared pastry dough over vegetable mixture and seal the top around the lip of dish.

Cut two small steam holes and brush crust top with more oil or a beaten egg.

Bake for 30 minutes, or until pastry is lightly browned. Serves four to six.

Easy Vegetarian Lasagne

Sauce ingredients: mix the following ingredients together:
6 ounces tomato paste
3-15 ounce cans of tomato puree
1 tablespoon olive oil
15 ounces water
1 teaspoon salt substitute or salt (optional)
1 tablespoon honey
½ teaspoon ground oregano
½ teaspoon dried basil
½ teaspoon garlic powder
½ teaspoon dried parsley
1 pound bag frozen spinach, cooked and drained

Cheese mixture:
1 pound tofu, crumbled
1 pound mozzarella, grated
¼ cup Parmesan cheese whole-wheat lasagne noodles, uncooked
1 tablespoon dried parsley
1½ teaspoons ground oregano
1½ teaspoons salt substitute or salt (optional)

Preparation instructions:

In a 9-inch by 13-inch pan or large baking dish, layer sauce, then lasagne noodles, sauce, cheese mixture, lasagne noodles, sauce and cheese mixture.

Bake at 350 degrees for 45 minutes to one hour. Serves four to six.

For a distinctively European flavor try Partenkirchen Pasta.

Partenkirchen Pasta

Ingredients:
12 ounces pasta in assorted shapes (such as rotini, ragatoni or twirls)
1 medium tomato, diced
2 celery stalks, sliced
½ small bermuda onion, diced
½ cup broccoli flowerettes (separated and blanched)
½ cup cauliflower flowerettes (separated and blanched)
10 to 12 snow peas (blanched)
4 to 5 radishes, sliced
½ green bell pepper, diced
½ red bell pepper, diced
1 medium cucumber, peeled and diced
¼ cup red cabbage, diced
½ cup shredded carrot
1¼ cup Italian dressing or vinegar and oil.

Clean and prepare vegetables. To blanch cauliflower, snow peas and broccoli, place in boiling water for about 30 seconds. This brings out and stabilizes the full color of the vegetables.

Combine about half of the dressing with the prepared vegetables and mix well. Allow to set for one hour to allow the vegetables to marinate.

Cook pasta according to the directions on the package. Drain and rinse in cold water.

Combine pasta and marinated vegetables in a large bowl.

Colleges ask to set tuition

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Presidents of three Kansas community colleges asked Tuesday for the state to let them set tuition rates for out-of-state students, as a way to attract more of them.

Ted Wischropp, president of Seward County Community College in Liberal, told the Senate Education Committee that stores in his town, in the far southwestern corner of Kansas, attract customers from nearby towns in Oklahoma and Texas.

The college also attracts many students from those areas, but many are turned away by the high out-of-state tuition rates charged non-Kansans, Wischropp said.

Tuition for a Kansas resident at Seward is $15 per credit hour, and tuition for out-of-state students is $80 a credit hour. The State Board of Education sets tuition at community colleges.

A bill before the Education Committee would allow the boards of trustees of the 19 Kansas community colleges to set tuition for out-of-state students anywhere between a minimum of $44 to a maximum of $80.

Dick Hedges, president of Fort Scott Community College, said the colleges want the change because they have many degree programs with fixed costs that don't have enough students. Filling those slots with out-of-state students wouldn't cost any more money because the colleges wouldn't have to add teachers or classroom space.

"We think there's a lot more people out there who would come to school," if tuition was lower, Hedges said.

Community colleges do not receive state aid for out-of-state students, and would be reluctant to raise local taxes to pay for out-of-state students, said Gery Hochanadel, president of Labette County Community College in Parsons. Thus, when the empty slots in a program are filled, the colleges could simply stop admitting out-of-state students to that program, so they didn't lose money, Hochanadel said.

Connie Hubbell, a member of the state Board of Education from Topeka, said the board thought the bill would bring in more revenue for the colleges.

U.S. warships reduced in gulf

Iraqi manuevers raise security concerns

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A top Pentagon official said Tuesday the United States was withdrawing some warships from escort and mine-clearing duties in the Persian Gulf, and expressed concern that Iraqi forces were engaging in dangerous manuevers near U.S. ships.

Richard Armitage, assistant defense secretary for international security affairs, said the United States already had protested to Baghdad an incident over the weekend involving an Iraqi jet that fired a missile near a U.S. destroyer.

He said the administration planned to send a team of military officials to Iraq later this week to discuss the matter further.

In a wide-ranging briefing at the Pentagon, Armitage confirmed that the United States was now reducing the number of U.S. warships in the Persian Gulf, and said the administration had no plans to offer military protection to U.S.-owned ships flying foreign flags.

In Santa Barbara, Calif., White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said, "This represents a fine-tuning of our position in the Gulf and not a policy change that would be reflected in overall forces or in other countries' actions."

"We think this has been a very successful operation, and it's just time to kind of fine-tune our forces," Fitzwater said.

The remarks by Armitage were the first by an administration insider reflecting official concern about Iraqi military operations near U.S. ships. The United States thought it had won Iraqi agreement last year — after the attack on the USS Stark — to keep jet fighters roughly 40 miles away from American warships.

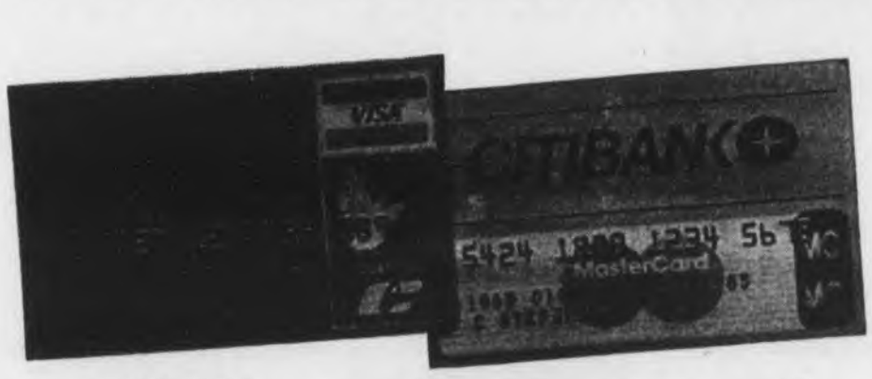
An Iraqi fighter attacked the Stark in May 1987 in what Iraq has described as a case of mistaken identity. Thirty-seven sailors died in the attack.

While no American ships have been attacked since, there have been a number of close calls and the United States now wants "to assure that we're all singing from the same hymnal," Armitage said Tuesday.

The latest incident occurred on Saturday and involved an Iraqi jet that failed to respond to Navy radio calls and fired a missile that passed close to the destroyer Chandler during a convoy operation.

"It was the fact of the firing of the missile and the range of the firing that was troublesome about the recent event," Armitage said.

"We have communicated with Baghdad the undesirability of this dangerous practice. And we will be sending a team in the next day or two back to Baghdad" to review safety procedures, he said.



The assistant secretary also formally announced on Tuesday the withdrawal of some warships from the Persian Gulf region. Administration sources had previously outlined the moves on Jan. 26.

There are currently 28 ships in the region, but the helicopter carrier Okinawa and the battleship Iowa and two escorts are coming home without being replaced, Armitage said. The withdrawals represent nothing more than a fine-tuning of military forces, and U.S. policy toward the region has not changed, he added.

"Our mission of protecting U.S. flag ships in the gulf remains unchanged," Armitage said. "We don't think the (overall) threat has abated."

Farm program requests funds

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A program designed to provide low-cost legal assistance to troubled farmers needs more money in order to remain effective, a House committee was told Tuesday.

Roger McCollister, executive director of Kansas Legal Services Inc., said his organization needs between $50,000 and $60,000 more in state funds during the current fiscal year and a similar increase in financing for the next fiscal year to do an effective job.

The non-profit agency contracts with the state's Farm Assistance Counseling and Training Referral program, or FACTS, to provide the services. The group mostly provides legal services for the poor.

The goal of the legal services program is to help some farmers in trouble stay on their land, McCollister said.

"We can save farmers if we have the money," McCollister told the House Agriculture Committee.

The current FACTS budget contains $100,000 for legal services, and Gov. Mike Hayden has recommended the agency receive $100,000 for legal services for the next fiscal year, which begins July 1.

However, the program received $220,000 for legal services in fiscal 1986 and $193,000 in fiscal 1987. Legal Services is allowed to charge between $1 an hour and $40 an hour for its work, but McCollister said his group had collected only $800 in fees during the current fiscal year.

"Most of the farmers are unable to pay anything," McCollister said.

McCollister said his group does not think the state's rural economy has improved enough to justify the reduction in the FACTS program's legal assistance budget over the past few years.

Lithuanian protests blocked

By The Associated Press

VILNIUS, U.S.S.R. — Police and civilian auxiliary officers patrolled near churches, a historic cemetery and in the center of this Baltic capital Tuesday, preventing demonstrations to mark Lithuania's brief independence.

Jadvyga Beliauskiene, a Roman Catholic activist, told reporters shortly before midnight Monday that four Lithuanian nationalists were under house arrest to stop them from leading protests.

A high profile by police, showing a harder line by Soviet authorities against expressions of Baltic nationalism, seemed to deter any large-scale showing of national feeling.

Western reporters brought to Vilnius by the Soviet Foreign Ministry for a government-approved visit were followed constantly in cars and on foot as they visited Lithuanian activists and traveled through winding medieval streets to visit sites where protests had been scheduled.

Beliauskiene, a former member of an anti-communist partisan movement in the 1940s who spent 12 years in prison, was one of about 200 people who signed a petition to Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev in January asking that authorities not "terrorize" people who wanted to celebrate Lithuanian independence.

Tuesday marked the 70th anniversary of Lithuania's declaration of independence from Soviet Russia months after the Bolshevik revolution brought the Communists to power. Lithuania was independent until it was absorbed by the Soviet Union in 1940.

Activists called on citizens to pray at two Vilnius churches and lay flowers at a monument to Polish-Lithuanian writer Adam Mickiewicz and the grave of Jonas Basanavicius, a doctor and champion of the Lithuanian language who died 61 years ago, on Feb. 16, 1927.

The monument to Mickiewicz was the scene of a demonstration on Aug. 23 marking the anniversary of the 1939 German-Soviet non-aggression pact that consigned most of Lithuania to Soviet control.

"We want to raise the consciousness of people so they remember they have the right to be free," said Beliauskiene, 59, who works as a file clerk in a government AIDS laboratory.

Witnesses said one woman was led away by police after she laid flowers at the monument to Mickiewicz on Tuesday evening. But they said she apparently was not arrested.

Nijole Sadunaite, a Roman Catholic activist who spent six years in prison and exile for her role in distributing religious literature, met reporters Monday night in the stairwell of an apartment house guarded by uniformed and plainclothes police.

A uniformed officer told reporters that if they entered the apartment, they would be responsible for anything that happened to Sadunaite, 49.

Sadunaite said KGB agents had attacked her, ripping the buttons from her coat and punching her in the stomach. She said her only goal was to "honor the memory of the dear Lithuanian people who died for our independence."

"We don't use tanks, we don't use machine guns, we don't even use profanity," she said nervously. "Even if they strike us, we do not strike back."

Kaunas, Lithuania's second-largest city, also appeared quiet.

Mayor Petras Staskunas told Western reporters who visited the city that dissident reports that nationalists had been injured in a scuffle with police on Sunday were not true.

"There were no incidents in Kaunas on Sunday."

Tort law decisions induce rash action

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Rash action taken out of frustration over adverse court decisions could precipitate a worse medical malpractice insurance crisis in Kansas, a spokesman for the Department of Insurance told a legislative committee Tuesday.

"The Kansas Insurance Department understands and appreciates the frustration of all those who have waited patiently for tort reform measures to stabilize premiums and surcharges in Kansas only to have these measures struck down by the courts," said Ted Fay, a department attorney.

He said the department supported efforts at revising the state's tort laws, trying to reduce malpractice insurance premiums for Kansas physicians, "and is equally frustrated."

However, Fay said extreme reactions to recent court rulings striking down a package of legislation enacted in 1986 could make the situation worse.

Fay told the House Judiciary Committee the department opposes bills that would eliminate a requirement that Kansas doctors and other health care providers carry liability insurance and would abolish the state Health Care Stabilization Fund unless steps also are taken to insure doctors will have other coverage available.

The fund, created by the state, pays large medical malpractice judgments against Kansas doctors, who must pay into it to provide the pool of money to make those payments. The doctors carry their first $250,000 worth of liability from private insurance carriers, and the state fund protects them on larger judgments.

"The department believes that the fund has settled cases reasonably during the last decade," Fay told the committee. "The fund has done this while holding down overhead costs.

"There is no doubt that with the elimination of the fund and the plan, providers' insurance costs for anything close to comparable coverage will increase for providers — not decrease."

If the Legislature decides to eliminate the fund, Fay said, the department recommends that a five-year plan be drawn up to fully fund the exisiting obligations of the fund and to provide time for new insurance providers to be attracted to Kansas to write policies for this state's doctors.

Message in bottle to bring wedding

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO — If you have an urge to send somebody a message in a bottle, Edna Hulbert can give you some hints. She started throwing bottles in bodies of water 66 years ago, when she was 17.

She's received replies from people in France, England and Spain, and even played matchmaker to a French couple getting married in June.

"It doesn't cost any money and I'm hearing from people I never knew. There was no end to the fun I've had," said Hulbert, 83.

Although she doesn't drink, Hulbert prefers liquor bottles because they float best. She used to pour her late husband's Scotch into empty mustard and ketchup jars so she could have the empties.

She tossed her first message into the Mississippi near St. Louis and has since lobbed bottles into the Hudson River, the Thames in England, the Caribbean and Mediterranean seas, a Montana lake and the canals of Amsterdam.

She doesn't recommend lakes: "They don't go very far. They go in a circle."

Over the years about 30 people have responded, many of them young men looking for a girlfriend. A French man and woman who lived in towns about 100 miles apart each found one of her bottles; Hulbert told the girl about it.

"She wrote to him and he wrote to her and now they're going to get married. I was thrilled to hear that," says Mrs. Hulbert, who has been invited to the wedding.

Bottle messaging, like life, is not all fun and games. A bottle that went into the Fox River near Oshkosh, Wis., brought a citation for littering from the local police.

"I ignored it," she says.

'Good things happen' as 'Cats beat Buffs

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

Sometimes a little change doesn't hurt. As a matter of fact, variations in K-State's game plan enabled the Wildcats to crush the University of Colorado, 83-65, Tuesday night in Ahearn Field House.

First, there was the lineup switch when Ron Meyer replaced Fred McCoy as starting center. All Meyer did was shoot 6-for-6 from the field and score 12 points before fouling out with 5:44 left in the game. McCoy came off the bench and added 12 points.

K-State also stuck primarily to the man-to-man defense, and forced the Buffaloes into 38.6 percent (23-of-57) shooting from the field. Heck, the 'Cats even scored some points off the fast break.

"Good things are going to happen for you when you are playing at a pace where you're getting good shots and not rushing things on the other end," K-State coach Lon Kruger said.

One thing that didn't change was the play of Mitch Richmond. After a 41-point performance Saturday at Oklahoma, Richmond led all scorers with 28 points in 28 minutes against the Buffaloes.

"He had quite a ball game tonight, didn't he? This may have been as good a game as he has had all year," Kruger said. "He was a serious threat as long as he had the ball, whether to shoot it or pass it."

Richmond said he had been working on his shot after scoring a combined 34 points in the two games prior to the match with OU.

"Right now I'm trying to get back on track and do the things I've been doing since Christmas break," Richmond said.

K-State, 15-6 overall and 7-2 in the Big Eight Conference, controlled things from the start and built a 13-point lead just nine minutes into the game. Colorado center Scott Wilke, who led his squad with 20 points, kept the Buffs within single digits by scoring eight of his 10 first-half points during the next five minutes.

But Richmond and forward Charles Bledsoe — who finished with 13 points — combined for K-State's next 16 points to build the lead back to 13, 40-27, at the intermission. In the last 13:03 of the first half, the forward tandem was responsible for all of K-State's 24 points.

K-State's start was the difference in the game, said Coloardo coach Tom Miller.

"They shot 59 percent in the first half and I don't think it got any worse in the second half," he said. "Fifty-nine percent against 30 percent is going to cause a lot of problems."

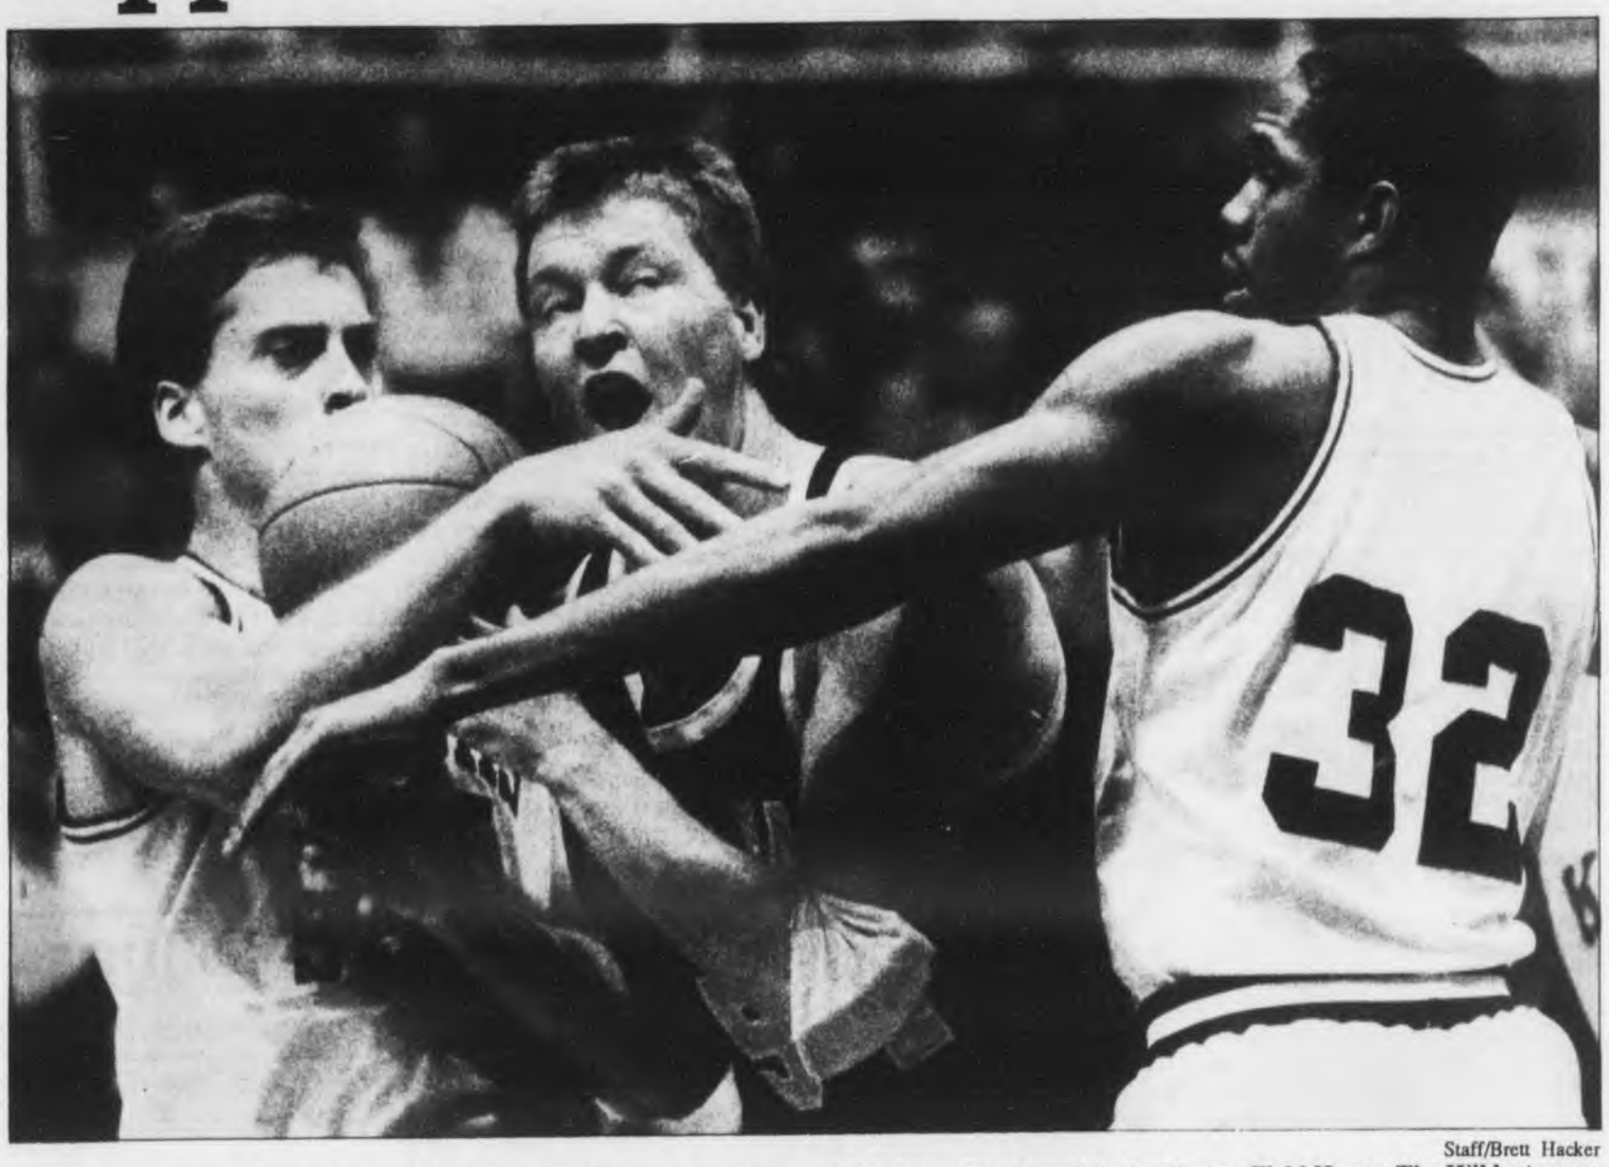
If there were any problems with K-State, it was that its aggressive defense led to eight first-half fouls and Colorado hit 10-of-14 attempts from the free-throw line.

"We fouled too much in the first half. They were in the bonus situation relatively early. In the second half, our man (defense) was better. We showed better awareness," Kruger said.

Point guard Steve Henson said the switch to the man defense helped the team's intensity.

"We pushed up the defensive intensity. Switching to a man tonight made it easier to be more intense," Henson said.

When K-State switched to the 3-2 zone in the second half, Colorado's shooting percentage improved to 45.2 percent. But it wasn't enough, as the 'Cats made nearly 59 percent of their shots from the field and led by as many as 23 points with 4:17 remaining.



"In the second half against the zone we got some shots, but we didn't shoot good enough," Miller said. "K-State's a fine basketball team and I think we saw them at one of their better games."

With the loss, Colorado dropped to 7-16 and 3-7. It was the Buffaloes' 35th straight conference loss on the road.

Wildcat center Ron Meyer, left, and forward Charles Bledsoe, right, strip the ball away from Colorado's Scott Wilke during the Wildcats 83-65 victory Tuesday night in Ahearn Field House. The Wildcats now hold a 7-2 record in the Big Eight Conference.

Meyer makes most of starting role

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

It was almost like a script from a movie.

After not starting since the Southern Mississippi game Dec. 17, 1987, and sitting behind Fred McCoy for 12 games, Ron Meyer got his first start and made good on it, as the Wildcats defeated Colorado soundly with a score of 83-65 Tuesday night in Ahearn Field House.

"Obviously, I was real pleased with it," Meyer said of his performance. "I took the shots when I had the chance."

Meyer, who wasn't picked to be a starter until Monday afternoon at practice, connected on all six of his shots from the field. On the night, Meyer collected 12 points and three rebounds.

Meyer's thoughts were on his defensive performance, though.

"Defensively, I was about a step behind," he said. "I was caught off balance and I made some fouls that shouldn't have been committed."

And after commiting his fifth foul with 5:44 remaining, some of the student fans started bowing to salute his performance.

At least one person in Ahearn wasn't surprised with Meyer's performance, though, K-State coach Lon Kruger.

"He played hard in practice the last few weeks," he said. "He's kept his head up and he just played the same way tonight as he has in practice."

If Meyer looked like a man with confidence, it was due to the morale booster he received from his teammates.

"Mitch and Charles talked to me (Monday) and just told me to go out and play like I would normally play in practice," Meyer said. "It helps to know that your teammates are behind you. So I came in today and said to myself, 'what do I have to lose, I haven't started'...if I had the open shot, I had to knock it down."

He even knocked Colorado center Scott Wilke with his performance.

"I was surprised he was hitting all those shots," Wilke said. "(Hitting) some of those shots from 12 to 15 feet — he had a good strong game tonight."

Hockey team's loss not 'end of world'

By The Associated Press

CALGARY, Alberta — The U.S. hockey team is right where it expected to be, if not where it wants to be, in the Winter Olympics.

"We figured to be one-and-one at this point," said public relations director Mike Schroeder as the U.S. team prepared to play the second-seeded Soviet Union tonight. "Looking at the schedule long-range, it appears now that West Germany will be our most important game."

That game will be Sunday and it could determine whether the Americans reach the six-team medal round.

The U.S. team began Olympic play with a 10-6 victory over Austria Saturday, as expected, and lost to Czechoslovakia 7-5 Monday night, which was also expected. The Czechoslovaks are seeded third in the Olympics and the United States is No. 7.

If form follows in this tournament, the Americans should lose to the second-seeded Soviets Wednesday night and beat No. 10 Norway on Friday night.

That would give them a 2-2 record and force them to beat No. 6 West Germany to have any chance for a place in the medal round. The West Germans are 2-0 so far after a surprising victory over Czechoslovakia on opening day and a triumph over Norway.

But even if the Americans defeat West Germany next Sunday, nothing is guaranteed for them under the complicated Olympic system. The top three teams in each pool advance after the five-game round robin, but one of the determining factors could be the score of the U.S.-West Germany game. At this point, the Americans have to beat the West Germans by two goals.

The American players have taken note of all the games that have gone against form in this tournament.

"The Swiss weren't supposed to beat the Finns and the Germans weren't supposed to beat the Czechs," said Corey Millen, the scoring leader of the U.S. team. "Hockey's a funny game."

And the Polish team wasn't supposed to give Canada a tough time before losing 1-0 and tying top-seeded Sweden 1-1, either.

"There's a lot of parity in this tournament," said Art Berglund, the general manager of the U.S. team. "People don't realize how many good hockey teams there are in this year's Olympics. They can all skate well."

Like many of the American players, goaltender Mike Richter figured his team would be 1-1 after the first two games. But when the Americans jumped to an early 3-0 lead against the Czechs Monday night, he wasn't thinking "1-1" anymore. Then, he was thinking "2-0."

"Any time you're up with a lead like that (3-0 after 6:08 of the first period), it really hurts to lose it," Richter said.

If he was upset by the loss, U.S. Coach Dave Peterson didn't show it.

"It's not crushing," he said. "Those are your words, not mine. It was really only a one-goal loss (to the Czechs)."

U.S. wins medal; skier looks for gold

By The Associated Press

CALGARY, Alberta — Ekaterina Gordeeva and Sergei Grinkov of the Soviet Union won the gold medal in pairs figure skating Tuesday night while the United States won its first medal of the Winter Olympics when Jill Watson and Peter Oppegard took the bronze.

Second place went to defending gold medalists Elena Valova and Oleg Vasiliev of the Soviet Union.

While the Soviets continued their strong showing in these Games, Americans had little to cheer about before Watson and Oppegard skated to their world ranking and won their bronze medal.

Further emphasizing the Americans' newly found depth in pairs, Gillian Wachsman and Todd Waggoner wound up fifth.

Gordeeva, the sprightly 16-year-old who has entranced crowds throughout the world the last two years, and Grinkov clearly were the class of the competition. Their jumps, lifts and spins were perfect. Gordeeva's landings on every jump were as light as a feather and the sell-out crowd rose and gave them a thunderous ovation when they completed their long program.

Gordeeva and Grinkov, 20, were first with all nine judges in both the short and long program. Skating to music by Chopin and Mendelson, they received 14 5.9 marks and four 5.8s out of a perfect 6.0.

Valova and Vasiliev, finished second with every judge. Vasiliev touched down on side-by-side triple toe loops, but the rest of their program — to "The Final Countdown" and "Snowstorm" — was clean.

By The Associated Press

MOUNT ALLAN, Alberta — Switzerland's peerless Pirmin Zurbriggen took a major step toward his second gold medal of the Winter Olympics on Tuesday by winning the downhill portion of the men's combined by nearly a half-second.

Results of the downhill will be coupled with those of a slalom today to determine a combined champion.

The combined is returning to the Olympics after a 40-year absence. Since 1982 the combined, with separate downhill and slalom races, has been contested in the World Alpine Championships.

Zurbriggen, who overtook teammate Peter Mueller to win the regular men's downhill on Monday, was timed in 1:46.90 in the combined race. It was held on the same course as Monday's race, but was shortened by moving the start down the hill by about 200 yards.

Franck Piccard of France, the bronze medalist in the regular downhill, was second in 1:47.38, and Felix Belczyk of Canada was third in 1:48.24.

Steven Lee of Australia was tentatively listed in third place at 1:47.39, but he was later disqualified for missing a gate.

Luxembourg's Marc Girardelli, one of the favorites for the combined title, did not start the downhill. The official reason for his absence was given as a sore elbow stemming from an injury in a downhill fall at Leukerbad, Switzerland, last month. Girardelli said his elbow was still causing him problems when he pushes off at the starting gate.

Colorado comes to Ahearn tonight

Lady Cats looking to get second conference victory

By Mike Rouse
Sports Writer

K-State's Lady Cats will try to put together two halves of basketball tonight against the Colorado Lady Buffaloes in Ahearn Field House. Tipoff is at 7:30 p.m.

K-State, 8-15 overall and 1-9 in the Big Eight Conference, blew a seven-point halftime lead to Oklahoma Saturday, a phenomenon which has been plaguing it as of late. The young team's inconsistency shows up on the stats sheet, as the Lady Cats have a 6-5 record when they lead at the half.

"We haven't gotten very many breaks " Coach Matilda Mossman said. "It is either a missed free throw or a late turnover that costs the game."

In K-State's first meeting with Colorado, the Lady Cats shot 34 percent from the field and lost, 84-58, in Boulder.

"We played intimidated and scared," Mossman said. "We need to keep our composure to win against them (Colorado)."

Since that Jan. 27 loss, the Lady Cats have won just one game — an 83-70 victory over Iowa State Feb. 3. But Mossman remains confident and thinks the team has improved during the past three weeks.

"I'm pleased with the way our team is playing right now," she said. "Our whole team has showed togetherness and is very competitive."

The Lady Buffs, 15-8 and 5-5, are led by guard Bridget Turner, who averages 13.4 points per game. Center Crystal Ford is also a threat, as K-State has discovered. Ford scored 18 points in just 24 minutes against the team's previous meeting.

For the Lady Cats, freshman Diana Miller, who was the only player to score in double figures in Boulder, continues to be a team leader. Miller averages 10.0 points per game, and leads the team in rebounds with seven per game. Freshman Nadria Hazim led the team with 17 points Saturday against Oklahoma, and both she and Janet Madsen are averaging in double figures.

NOTES...Free throws were a deciding factor in the teams' earlier meeting. Colorado set records for most free throws made by an opponent this season with 30, and most free throws made in a half with 16.

Students to meet with high school officials

By Nancy Chartrand
Staff Writer

Starting at 10:15 this morning, K-State students have the opportunity to help out their high schools as well as themselves during the Principal-Counselor-Student Conferences.

More than 350 officials representing 183 Kansas schools will be participating in this year's conference.

The University has been sponsoring the conferences for 30 years, said Richard Elkins, director of admissions.

From 8:45 to 10 a.m. in Union Forum Hall, there will be a panel discussion on the selective admissions program, and President Jon Wefald will make the opening greeting.

The panel will consist of Ed King, counselor at Shawnee Mission East High School; Allan Voth, principal of Kingman High School; John Welch of the Board of Regents and Sen. Joseph Harder, R-Mound Ridge and chairman of the Senate Education Committee.

"The basic heart of the conference is the two-hour segment where the principals, counselors and (high school) administrators visit with the K-State students," Elkins said.

K-State students have been informed of the conferences through invitations sent by the University, Elkins said.

"We still feel that the best recruiters are happy students. One happy student can out-do all of the people in admissions."
—Richard Elkins

A memo has also been sent to teachers encouraging them to excuse students from class, if possible, to allow them to attend.

Through these meetings, high school officials are able to recognize what they need to do to better prepare their students for college.

"(The conference) is very positive for students," Elkins said.

The students' comments about K-State and their opinions of the curriculum will then be presented by the high school officials to representatives of the colleges during an afternoon question-and-answer period.

This, said Elkins, helps the University identify problem areas.

The English Department is one area that has profited from these conferences.

A few years ago students told officials from their high schools that English Composition classes at K-State were too large. In order to better serve the students, the University has made the classes smaller.

Another important aspect of these conferences is recruitment, Elkins said.

"We still feel that the best recruiters are happy students," Elkins said. "One happy student can out-do all of the people in admissions."

The conferences also allow interaction among educators.

"Some high schools only have one counselor," Elkins said. "The conference allows them to meet others in the same profession."

School bill may absorb cuts

Amendment intends to 'soften' urban 'blow'

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Senate amended Tuesday and then advanced to final vote a school finance bill that would lessen the cuts urban school districts would absorb in the coming year.

"I think it's a fair and just compromise," said Sen. Jim Allen, R-Ottawa, who introduced the amendment to a bill which incorporated Gov. Mike Hayden's proposal on the way state aid is distributed to Kansas' 305 local school districts.

The bill sends less money to big-city school districts and more to rural schools than last year, but Allen's amendment is intended to soften the blow to the larger school districts.

The shift in state aid is a result of declining land values in rural areas.

Tuesday's debate was reminiscent of those in past years that pitted rural school districts against their urban counterparts in the bid for state dollars.

The state determines its share of funding for local school districts through a complex equalization formula based on districts' wealth. District wealth is determined to a large degree by local property values. The school finance formula is designed to ensure that all students receive roughly the same financial support for educational opportunity.

"The formula is working," said Sen. Joseph C. Harder, R-Moundridge, who is chairman of the Education Committee. "It's putting more money in poorer districts and less in the wealthy districts."

Allen's amendment allows the state to average land values over the previous 21 months to figure state aid to school districts, rather than values over the previous year. That change increases the funding for big city school districts, but urban areas would still lose money.

"When you take money and give it to large districts, it has to come from somewhere," Allen said. "This is coming from small districts."

Sen. Eugene Anderson, D-Wichita, said he would oppose the bill, amended or otherwise, citing the money the Wichita school district would lose.

Under the original bill, Wichita would receive $2.7 million less, while under the amended version, it would receive $1.4 million less than it did previously.

"It still he puts us in a position where we are again losing," Anderson said. The loss in state aid would have to compensated by local property taxes, he added.

Harder said the Wichita school district would receive a total of $36 million in state aid under the bill.

"They're doing pretty well when you take all the figures into consideration," he said.

Sen. Joseph Norvell, D-Hays, opposed the amendment that reduced state aid to rural school districts to offset the cuts to urban schools.

"The rural districts are now much poorer relative to other districts," he said.

"We in rural areas of the state are paying more in property taxes than the urban districts," he said. "I think it's time we stopped punishing rural schools."

Sen. Fred Kerr, R-Pratt, urged senators to adopt the amendment and "put aside the rural-urban war and concentrate on the bigger picture of education."

Under the amendment, Lawrence schools would receive $538,000 less in state aid instead of $1.1 million; Leavenworth would receive $106,700 less instead of $192,500; Hutchinson Public Schools receive $222,700 less instead of $280,900; Topeka Public Schools would get $1.2 million less instead of $1.5 million less; and the Turner schools in Kansas City would receive $127,000 less instead of a $175,600 cut.

Sen. Nancy Parrish, D-Topeka, offered an amendment that would ensure no school districts would receive less state aid next year than it does this year, a proposal that drew the support of Sen. Jack Steineger, D-Kansas City.

He questioned offering a bill that increases local property taxes statewide by $32 million when the state coffers are receiving $135 million in additional income tax as a result of changes in the federal tax law.

"Now is the time and place to stake out a claim for that $135 million," he said.

The proposed amendment failed on a voice vote.

Soviet Union begins dismantling arms

By The Associated Press

BERLIN — The Soviet Union has begun dismantling part of its intermediate range nuclear arsenal in East Germany, the state-run news agency ADN reported Tuesday.

The step makes "an important contribution toward disarmament even before" a U.S.-Soviet treaty to eliminate the medium-range missiles is ratified, ADN said.

According to the report, rockets stationed near Neubrandenburg, north of Berlin, have been dismantled, crated and are ready for transport back to the Soviet Union.

ADN did not say how many had been dismantled or when the rockets will be transported back to the Soviet Union. East German television late Tuesday showed soldiers loading missile crates onto transport vehicles.

The disarmament treaty was signed in Washington in December by President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, but the U.S. Senate has yet to ratify it.

campaign for the future of America, a campaign for good jobs and real opportunity for every citizen ... a campaign to get our fiscal house in order."

The effort earned him a bronze medal in Iowa, he said, and in next-door New Hampshire, "We went for the gold and we won it."

CBS, reporting on the basis of interviews with voters leaving their polling place, said Bush was helped considerably by President Reagan's popularity in the Granite State. Other pollsters concurred, and said Dukakis was helped by his long tenure as governor of a neighboring state.

With 94 percent of the precincts reporting, Dukakis led for 9 Democratic convention delegates, Gephardt 6 and Simon 3. That would raise the national totals to 44.50 for Dukakis, 39 for Gephardt, and 33 for Simon. In all, 2,082 delegates are needed to win the Democratic presidential nomination.

In the raw vote, it was:

Dukakis, 36,193 votes, or 36 percent.

Gephardt, 19,449 votes, or 20 percent

Simon had 17,113 votes, or 17 percent.

Jesse Jackson and Sen. Albert Gore Jr., were denied the boost they sought as the primary campaign moves to their native South, trailing with 8 percent and 7 percent of the vote. Former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt had 5 percent and was a candidate for withdrawal. Long-ago front-runner Gary Hart had 4 percent.

They won nothing Tuesday, but Gore already had commitments for 10.55 delegate votes at the convention, Jackson had 9.80 and Babbitt 4.

In the Republican race, Bush led for 11 New Hampshire delegates, Dole 7, Kemp 3 and du Pont 2. Those results would raise their national totals to 61 for Bush, 42 for Dole, 35 for Kemp and 2 for du Pont. In all, 1,139 delegates are needed to win the Republican presidential nomination.

In the raw vote:

Bush, 49,689 votes, or 38 percent.

Dole, 37,820 votes, or 29 percent.

Kemp, 17,046 votes, or 13 percent.

du Pont, 13,581 votes, or 10 percent.

Robertson, 12,584 votes, or 10 percent.

Empty handed Tuesday, Robertson already had won 8 delegates.

Bush thus ended Dole's dream of taking early control over the GOP campaign and said in an exultant victory statement, "You haven't chosen a man, you've chosen a course to expand our prosperity" and build a strong America.

Dole blamed his loss on inaccurate attacks by the Bush forces on oil import fees and taxes but vowed, "We'll live to fight another day."

Dukakis claimed victory in a speech to supporters in which he took several thinly veiled jabs at Gore.

"I don't have a southern strategy," said the man with the New England accent. "I have an American strategy."

Dukakis, who held a steady double-digit lead in the polls virtually all night, sought every last ounce of momentum his victory could bring as he made the rounds of the television networks.

"I think this is a very strong message about the future," he said. "It's about which of has the strength, the values to lead this country into the future."

Bush's victory was all the more impressive coming on the heels of a third-place fizzle in the Iowa caucuses. The vice president completely overhauled his message and his style in a successful bid to reverse Dole's post-Iowa surge.

Dole said he would have won by 10 points if it hadn't been for Bush campaign "distortions."

Said the Kansas senator, "It makes the climb a little steeper, but it doesn't make it impossible. I feel that had we won, it would have been spectacular. We almost won. That's good." The vice president portrayed Dole all last week as an advocate of an oil import fee and likely to cave in to pressures for a tax increase.

Babbitt, probably nearing withdrawal on the Democratic side, said he would spend the next few days meeting with supporters in Washington before making a decision. Jackson suggested that Babbitt might endorse him if he decided to withdraw. "We're talking about that," he said.

Hart, who scored a spectacular victory here four years ago, said it would take "at least 30 to 60 days to determine if I can put together a viable candidacy."

Lecture

"I thought it epitomized what can go wrong with the Landon Lecture Series," said Edward Schiappa, instructor of speech. "We bring someone in who is a big name who comes in and gives a boring lecture and still gets a standing ovation. I think the audience should be more demanding than that."

Schiappa said a Landon Lecture should be a serious analysis of a public issue.

"There are a number of important constitutional issues she could have discussed without violating her rules (of not discussing current court cases)," he said. "But she was bending over backwards not to say anything controversial."

William Richter, professor of political science and head of the department, said O'Connor's lecture was among the best he has heard.

"It wasn't a barnburner, but it was certainly articulate," he said. "It was substantive, and in that sense one of the best we've had."

Richter said although he could see why some people said the speech was not "rousing," he thought O'Connor did a good job of dealing with current issues.

"She was dealing with contemporary issues in a current way," he said. "She just didn't touch upon them in a way to be taking a political issue."

Hayden 'disappointed' by defeat

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Republican Gov. Mike Hayden conceded Tuesday night that Sen. Bob Dole's loss in the New Hampshire presidential primary was a disappointment, but said the public should keep the loss in perspective.

"The way Senator Dole ended up is less than what we had hoped for," Hayden said. "But going into the race for the Republican nomination we were aware of Vice President Bush's strength in New Hampshire."

On the Democratic side, state Sen. Paul Feleciano of Wichita, the Kansas chairman for Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, said Dukakis' wide victory in New Hampshire should give him momentum for the battle in southern states on Super Tuesday, March 8.

"It puts him in a position of strength," Feleciano said. "Basically it gives him the momentum he needs to gear up for Super Tuesday."

Hayden, who will lead Kansas' 34 delegates to the Republican convention for Dole this summer, said he thought a series of television advertisements the Bush campaign ran in New Hampshire last weekend saying Dole advocated a tax increase was a key factor in Dole's defeat.

"They weren't exactly accurate," Hayden said, "and the Dole campaign didn't respond to them. I think that was critical."

The governor said Dole and Bush have each won one victory and now the battle will continue in South Dakota and Minnesota.

"Those are states where we know the senator has a lot of strength," Hayden said, also admitting that those two states don't have the media impact of New Hampshire.

Feleciano said Dukakis has kept to a timetable his campaign managers set for him, including getting major media attention in New Hampshire.

"I think the advantage he has is the fact that for the past nine months he has been campaigning and working in 30 states. That should pay off in the long run," Feleciano said.

to 15 to accommodate the influx of students.

Eighty students applied for the three positions, Trotter said.

She said she believes personalized campus tours have played a big part in the recruitment process.

"Many of the students who applied for the jobs said their tour was what brought them here (to K-State)," Trotter said, adding that now they want the chance to give the tours.

Angie Rowland, senior in apparel and textile marketing, is a veteran tour guide.

Rowland, who has been with the program since she was a freshman, said the recruitment process has become more structured in the last two years.

"The prospective student's viewpoint of K-State is more positive," she said. "Before, all they knew was that we had a losing football team."

Rowland credits much of that success to the traveling admissions representatives.

"It extends that personal touch," she said. "They can visit with the same AR (admissions representative) on campus that they met at their high school."

A goal was set by the administration when the current enrollment management program was started under President Jon Wefald, and Bosco said that goal is still the same.

"We want to bring the overall student body to where we were in the early 1980s — right around 20,000," he said.

U.S. officer kidnapped in Lebanon

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Gunmen on Wednesday kidnapped a U.S. Marine officer serving with the U.N. peacekeeping force in south Lebanon as he drove along a highway. It brought to nine the number of Americans held hostage in Lebanon.

U.N. and Pentagon officials identified the victim as Lt. Col. William R. Higgins, 43, a native of Danville, Ky., and chief of an observer group attached to the U.N. Interim Force in Lebanon.

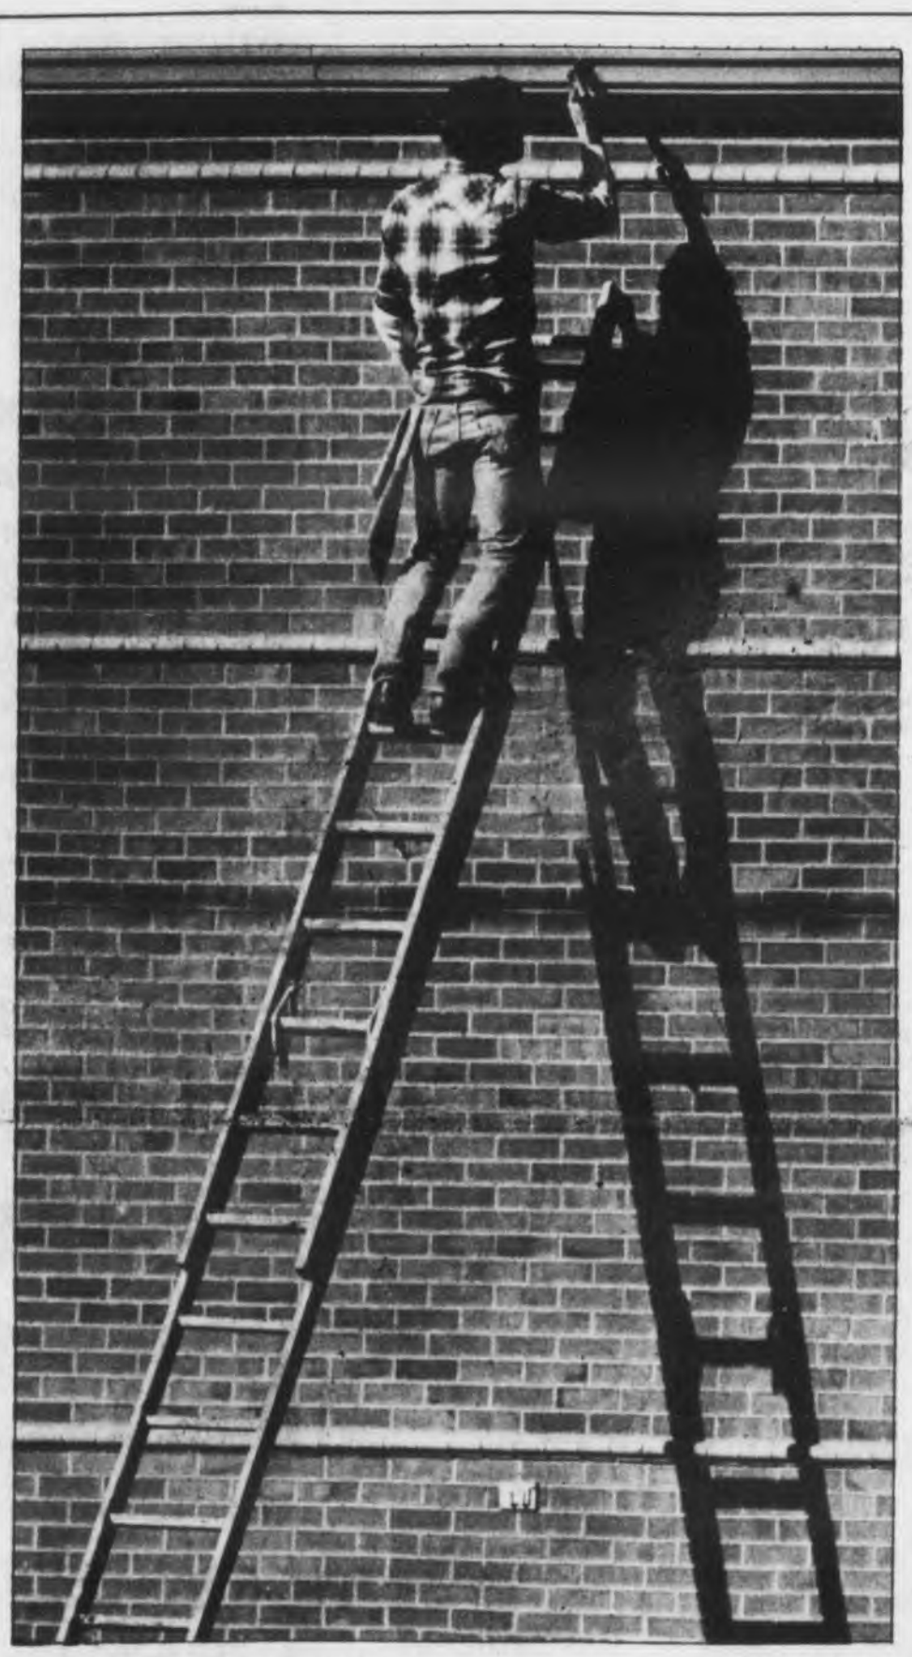
The 76-officer U.N. group from 16 countries monitors cease-fire violations on the Lebanon-Israel border. Higgins was the top-ranking American officer assigned to the force's observer group, holding the title of senior U.S. military observer.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the abduction, which occurred about 4:15 p.m. on the coastal highway between Lebanon's southernmost port of Tyre and the border town of Naqoura, the location of UNIFIL's headquarters.

"Higgins was driving in a U.N. jeep station wagon from Tyre to Naqoura behind a similar vehicle in which two other observers were traveling," said U.N. spokesman Timur Goksel.

He said the first vehicle went around a bend in the road, "and when the two observers noticed that Higgins' car was not following them, they stopped and drove back, only to find Higgins' station wagon abandoned."

He said Higgins was alone in his vehicle. Goksel said UNIFIL helicopters and ground troops were searching for Higgins.



The observers in the other station wagon were another American and a Dane, but UNIFIL officials did not name them.

Security sources in Tyre said two gunmen in a brown Volvo passed Higgins' car, blocked the road, forced Higgins into their car and drove north toward Tyre.

They said the abduction occurred between the villages of Ras el-Ein and Deir Qanoun. The two villages are controlled by Justice Minister Nabih Berri's Shiite Amal militia. U.N. sources said Amal was helping UNIFIL search for Higgins.

Reporters in Tyre say the influence of the Iranian-backed Hezbollah, or Party of God, has been steadily growing in the two villages.

Recruitment efforts increase enrollment

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

Editor's note: This is the fourth installment of a five-day series on enrollment at K-State and what it means to the University.

The record-setting enrollment at K-State this spring has been largely attributed to an increased recruitment effort. Within student groups, beefed-up recruitment has resulted in a steady increase in nearly every category.

Hakim Salahu-Din, assistant director of admissions and coordinator of minority student recruitment, attributes the increase in minority enrollment to increased recruitment.

"K-State has had increases in Hispanic-Americans, blacks and Mexican-Americans, but we are not as effective as we would like to be with American Indians," Salahu-Din said.

Information is sent to tribal organizations throughout the United States and visits by admissions personnel are made to the Kickapoo Nation High School in Brown County and to Haskell Indian Junior College in Lawrence, he said.

"We don't have cop-out answers; we do what we can," he said.

According to figures from the Kansas Board of Education, of the 25,587 1986 high school graduates, 22,695 were white, 1,656 were black, 628 were Hispanic-Americans, 294 were Asian or Pacific Island Americans and 106 were American Indians.

That equates to a figure of 10 percent minority graduates. Blacks represented 6.5 percent of all 1986 Kansas high school graduates.

"The figures remain relatively stable from year to year. However, figures nationwide indicate an upward trend in the graduation of blacks and Hispanic-Americans," Salahu-Din said, adding that similar 1987 figures have not been released.

Minorities at K-State represent 5 percent of the student body, and blacks make up 2.5 percent of the student body.

According to spring 1987 minority group enrollment figures provided by Veryl Switzer, assistant vice president for minority affairs, 385 blacks, 181 Hispanic-Americans, 122 Asian-Americans, 51 Mexican-Americans and 36 American Indians were enrolled at K-State, for a total of 787.

This spring there are 437 blacks, 183 Hispanic-Americans, 138 Asian-Americans, 77 Mexican-Americans and 36 American Indians, for a total of 868, an increase of 81 over last spring.

Switzer cautioned that the figures for this spring have not been fully analyzed and may contain some minor errors.

Salahu-Din said it may not be a fair judgment of K-State's minority recruiting efforts to compare students enrolled to the total number of minority students graduating from Kansas high schools.

In addition to K-State, there are more than 50 universities and community colleges in Kansas, and vocational-technical schools and the military are also available to increase minority students' options, Salahu-Din said.

"The keys to retention of minorities is financial aid, increased scholarships and work-study positions that parallel their course of study," he said.

Salahu-Din said before significant progress can be made in minority enrollment, the program must be re-evaluated and restructured.

Although recruitment is important in attracting the non-traditional student, the nation's changing demographics will virtually guarantee that the enrollment of older students at K-State will climb.

By the year 1992, one-half of all college students in the United States will be over the age of 25, according to education and demographics researcher Harold Hodgkinson in his book "All One System."

Ruth Hoeflin, director of the Fenix program, said non-traditional undergraduate students, generally defined as those students over age 25, routinely comprise 15 to 18 percent of all new undergraduates at K-State.

There were 740 new undergraduates more than 25 years old last fall, and enrollment figures for this spring indicate an additional 151 non-traditional undergraduates.

Although there are efforts to recruit non-traditional students, the challenge is to reach potential students in rural towns, Hoeflin said.

Another increasing pool of students is veterans. Lorene Dahm, administrative officer with student financial assistance, said the number of veterans enrolled at K-State has

Issues varied for students

Conference to cross racial barrier

By The Collegian Staff

About 700 Kansas college students are expected to attend the 11th annual conference of the Big Eight Council on Black Student Government today through Saturday.

The conference's theme is "Remembering Our Roots, Cultivating Our Growth, Harvesting Our Goals."

Sessions will cover topics that are important to all minorities, said Laurian Cuffy, director of minority affairs and senior in business administration.

"The same issues that blacks face at predominantly white universities hold true with most minorities," he said.

The Big Eight Council on Black Student Government is a support group for black students who attend predominantly white universities, said Ann Butler, director of educational and supportive services.

Since the conference is open to all students, Cuffy said he hopes students from all ethnic backgrounds will attend.

"We will address legitimate concerns of both black and white students," he said. "We hope that we can get some input from white students so we can obtain different facets on different problems."

Michelle Ragland, chairwoman of the conference and sophomore in industrial engineering, said she is encouraged by the Student Governing Association's support.

"I'm very happy with the support we've got from SGA. I hope student leaders attend the conference to hear the issues we will be discussing," Ragland said.

SGA, she said, has encouraged its members to attend the conference.

Olivia Dorsey of KMBC-TV in Kansas City, Mo., will moderate a question-and-answer session from 7:15 to 8:45 p.m. Friday in the Union Little Theatre.

"The discussion will be more profitable if we can get input from everybody concerned," Cuffy said.

A career fair will be conducted from 3 to 5 p.m. Friday and 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday in the Union Cottonwood Room.

More than 30 sponsors and recruiters from the business community are scheduled to participate, Butler said.

Newspaper represents minorities

By Steven Zadina
Collegian Reporter

As far as newspapers on campus go, the Collegian isn't the only game in town. Another paper, the Alliance, exists primarily to serve K-State's black student population.

The Alliance's two-member staff produces the paper with a circulation of about 1,500. Barbara Baker, senior in radio and television, does most of the writing for the paper while Bobby Van Buren, senior in fine arts, does the layout, artwork and photography. The editing for the paper is shared by both students, but Anne Butler, assistant dean/director for educational support services and adviser of the Alliance, has the final say on the stories.

"It's hard when there are only two of you doing all the work on the paper," Van Buren said. He added that "I enjoy the work or I wouldn't still be doing it."

"Minority students very seldomly see themselves represented in mainstream media," Butler said. "Basically we try to zero in on activities that students are active in here at the University."

Alliance focuses on local and campus activities which are not generally covered in other media and leans toward feature stories rather than hard news, she said. The next issue of Alliance is scheduled for late this month.

The paper provides information on scholarships and activities that could be of special interest to the black student and serves as a vehicle for those students who are journalism majors.

In addition to stories written by the Alliance staff, the newspaper also accepts stories from other people in the community that deal with minority issues.

Burglary incident results in arrests

By Judy Lundstrom
Editor

Two K-State football players were arrested Tuesday on felony charges stemming from an incident Sunday night in parking lot B-2 by Haymaker Hall.

The men, Christopher Martin, freshman in arts and sciences undecided, and Daniel Smedra, freshman in arts and sciences undecided, were charged with criminal damage to property, conspiracy to commit theft, burglary of a motor vehicle and theft, according to Riley County Police.

Martin is a resident of Goodnow Hall, and Smedra lives in Haymaker Hall.

The men were arrested by K-State Police and held in the Riley County Jail, said K-State Police Chief Charles Beckom. Both were released Tuesday night on $1,000 bond.

Whereas a federal law called the Buckley Amendment prohibits campus police from releasing names in police reports, the fact that the men were taken to the Riley County Jail made the incident public record, Beckom said.

He said the men allegedly entered a 1982 Ford custom van by means of "trick devices," stole an equalizer and were attempting to remove the stereo when they were apparently scared off by witnesses.

About $300 in damage was done to the interior of the van, which is owned by a male resident of Haymaker Hall, Beckom said.

Property damage in excess of $150 is a felony offense, and burglary of any kind is a felony, he said.

Beckom said three officers spent four hours Monday "developing evidence and information that allowed us to pick the young men up and make charges."

He declined to say how the information was gathered.

"At this point, we'd prefer not to release the means of identifying them," he said.

He called the incident "unfortunate," saying that the department has had few problems with athletes in the past few years.

"We see fewer athletes through this department in connection with criminal acts or parking violations than we do with juvenile offenders," he said. "To us, that

Group protests nuclear arms

LONDON — Scores of religious protesters converged on the British Defense Ministry on Wednesday and daubed anti-nuclear slogans on the building with ashes.

Police said 57 people were arrested, mostly for criminal damage, but Defense Ministry business was not disrupted.

The demonstration was organized by Christian CND, an interdenominational faction of the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament, to coincide with Ash Wednesday, the first day of Lent, when ashes are put on the forehead as a sign of pentinence.

Israeli ad campaign canceled

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands — The Israeli National Tourist Bureau has canceled an advertisement it was running in Dutch newspapers that said Tel Aviv and Jerusalem were only "a stone's throw" apart, a bureau spokesman said Wednesday.

The bureau withdrew the ad because of the ongoing unrest in the Israeli-occupied territories, where Palestinian youths frequently hurl rocks and other objects at troops, said spokesman Albert Kooistra.

The ad, which ran last week in two newspapers and in three TV program guides, was meant to emphasize the short distances between Israel's cities and other tourist sites, Kooistra said.

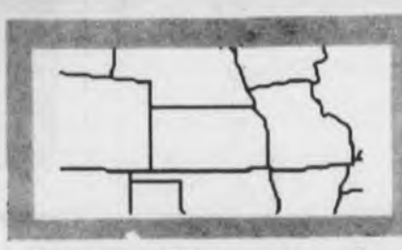
"The distance between Tel Aviv and Jerusalem? About a stone's throw," Kooistra quoted the ad as saying.

"Speaking figuratively, that's true, only I think the text must have caused something of a shock in the current context," he said.

Fire breaks out in U.S. Embassy

MOSCOW — Soviet firefighters chaperoned by Americans extinguished a fire Wednesday in the U.S. Embassy, the aging building the United States has been unable to abandon because of bugging devices that permeate a new structure.

About 150 embassy employees were evacuated and sent home for the day, embassy spokesman Richard Gilbert said. No one was injured.



U.S. Embassy officials said Soviet firefighters were called to put out the fire in an unoccupied fifth-floor residential section after they decided embassy personnel couldn't extinguish it on their own.

The Soviets responded promptly and were "escorted at all times by American employees," inside the building, said Gilbert, who briefed reporters in the wet snow outside the mustard-colored embassy's main door after the fire had been brought under control.

The 10-story embassy building, on busy Tchaikovsky Street near the center of Moscow, has been the source of controversy for more than a year.

Last spring U.S. officials said they had determined a new eight-story red-brick office building directly behind the old one could not be occupied immediately because of Soviet listening devices apparently installed during construction.

The $191 million structure already was five years behind schedule at the time.

Garnett man charged in murder

GARNETT, Kan. — A young southeast Kansas man was charged with first-degree murder Wednesday in the shooting death of a woman who disappeared from her home nearly two years ago.

Kent A. Badders, 23, of rural Kincaid, was held under $100,000 bond following his appearance before Magistrate Phillip Fromme, Anderson County Attorney Craig Cole said Wednesday.

He was charged in the slaying of Hanna Zeigler, 55, of Colony, who was last seen at her home on March 15, 1986. Her skeletal remains were found by quail hunters last fall in a well near Colony.

Court rules against KPL in suit

TOPEKA — Kansas Power and Light Co. had a duty to warn a painting crew about a high-voltage power line at the Business World Center in Lawrence and should have to pay a $1.45 million judgment against it in the 1984 electrocution of a man, the Kansas Supreme Court heard today.

"Experts say that line presents a hazard to this day to anyone who is working around that building," Donald W. Vasos of Kansas City, Kan., the attorney for the victim's family, told the court.

"KPL knew it was a construction site and workers would be working around its line, and its line was only 6½ feet from the building. But KPL relied on the minimum of what you should do under the (industry safety) code. It seems KPL would want to do more under the circumstances of this case."

Message prompts investigation

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A cryptic Valentine's Day message published in a newspaper Sunday caught the eye of police officials investigating the shooting death of an area political leader and caused a little embarrassment for the sender.

The message published Sunday in The Kansas City Star began with the words "CHUCKIE'S DEAD" and mentioned a silver bullet.

It was a tantalizing possible lead in the unsolved slaying Dec. 21 of Charles Thompson, a Kansas City, Kan., Democratic leader who was shot six times. But it turned out to be a message from a woman to her boyfriend.

The message: "CHUCKIE'S DEAD, You're not. Charlie's not very hot. Silver bullet don't hit the spot. Can you?" It was signed "Dinghy."

Wyandotte County District Attorney Nick Tomasic subpoenaed records from The Star giving the woman's identification. A Kansas Bureau of Investigation agent visited the woman's house Tuesday, but Dinghy was not home. The agent left his business card.

What the message means, according to a slightly embarrassed Dinghy, who discussed it after being assured anonymity, is that Chuckie's batteries had run out. Chuckie is one of a set of three sexual toys given to the woman a year ago by her boyfriend. The others were named Charles and silver bullet.

Babbitt, du Pont may abandon race

By The Associated Press

Republican George Bush and Democrat Michael Dukakis exulted in their impressive New Hampshire primary victories on Wednesday while the rest of the presidential field jockeyed for position in a campaign without clear, commanding front-runners.

Two of the also-rans, Democrat Bruce Babbitt and Republican Pete du Pont, appeared on the verge of dropping out after poor showings in Iowa and New Hampshire.

With the delegate-rich primaries just ahead in the South and elsewhere, there was no danger of peace breaking out among the remaining combatants.

"I think you're seeing a mean George Bush," said Sen. Bob Dole, who blamed his defeat in New Hampshire on distortions he said were spread by the vice president's campaign. "I'm not going to run from it. I'm not known for running from a fight."

Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore Jr. dismissed his Democratic rivals as "peas in the same pod" who had staked out positions to appeal to the voters of Iowa and New Hampshire that would be rejected in the Southern primaries next month.

Dukakis disputed that, just as Bush denied Dole's accusation of foul play.

"We're going to surprise some people" in the South, said the Massachusetts governor as he headed for a day of campaigning in Dixie. "Our message of strength, of opportunity for the future is going to do very well there."

While most of the field worried about raising money and gaining momentum, there were others who had possibly fought their last.

Former Arizona Gov. Babbitt returned to Washington after his fifth-place Democratic finish and said in an interview Wednesday night, "It is very likely that I will make the decision to exit." He scheduled a news conference for Thursday morning.

Du Pont, the former Delaware governor, scheduled a news conference for Thursday afternoon, and a source in his campaign indicated withdrawal was likely.

There was fresh talk that the muddled races might produce no clear winner before the nominating conventions, particularly on the Democratic side. New York Mayor Ed Koch said he thought the Democrats would draft a nominee, either New York Gov. Mario Cuomo or New Jersey Sen. Bill Bradley.

But Democratic national chairman Paul Kirk predicted the convention would pick a winner on the first ballot from among the active contenders.

Bush, who won in New Hampshire after first watching his support hemorrhage when Dole captured the Iowa caucuses, said he was taking "nothing for granted" from here on out.

The vice president denied Dole's charges, and said he had proven he had staying power by rebounding from his third-place finish in Iowa.

"The system worked," he said. "You can take them on the chin, you can get up and you can fight again."

The contenders went about the business of planting their flag on friendly territory in hopes of scoring a victory in the handful of contests before the multi-state Super Tuesday contests concentrated in Southern and border states on March 8.

Rep. Richard Gephardt, a distant second behind Dukakis in New Hampshire, sought to portray the race as a two-man competition. He set trips to South Dakota for six of the next seven days in hopes of scoring in the primary election next Tuesday. Campaign aide Ali Webb also said Gephardt would work hard in Wyoming, which holds caucuses March 5.

Rec Complex's use studied by Senate

By The Collegian Staff

Raydon Robel, director of Recreational Services, briefed Student Senate members about current conditions at the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex at their meeting Wednesday night.

According to Robel, last year's daily average use of the facility was about 1,500 people with an annual use of over 353,000. With an executive staff of only three members, the program runs very smoothly, Robel said.

Two graduate students, two secretaries and a few undergraduate students are also employed at the complex.

Eighty percent of the student body use the facility. The participation rate in intramural sports is also very high. Last year's figures show 165 football, 320 basketball and 223 softball teams participated in the intramural program, Robel said.

At present, each student pays $5.50, which is included in student fees paid at enrollment, to help maintain the Rec Complex, he said. Last year's income of $298,000 from student fees and other sources covered the expenses for the facility.

However, with increased enrollment, overcrowding has occurred in certain areas of the Rec Complex. Robel said the expansion and improvement of the weight room and additional space for the fitness and exercise equipment would take a 50-cent increase in fees.

Administration should withdraw support fee

The K-State administration is practicing the game of politicians: going back on its word.

In January 1987, directors of the Union, Student Publications Inc., housing and intercollegiate athletics departments, Lafene Student Health Center, the Kansas Artificial Breeding Service Unit, and the K-State Police were told they would have to pay a 3 percent charge on all income from sales and services.

The administration imposed the service fee on these seven agencies in an effort to overcome budget setbacks after Gov. Mike Hayden's 3.8 percent statewide budget reduction.

At the time, the directors grudgingly accepted the fee even though they were not given enough time to budget around it. However, most directors paid the fee with the understanding that it was only temporary, until the state emerged from its fiscal crisis.

Dave Adams, director of Student Publications Inc., maintains that when the administration requested the fee, agency directors were told it would be temporary.

Now that the crisis is over and the administration has had time to recover from Hayden's budget cuts, administration officials say elimination of the fee is not probable.

The administration is charging the agencies for services provided by the University, when in the past it was understood that the agencies also provide services to the University. This past relationship was considered even-steven, with neither side actually paying the other.

Whether this situation is right or wrong, or practiced by other Big Eight schools as the administration claims, the administration still played unfair by giving the directors an indication that the fee would be temporary. Now that the administration has what it wants, it is not ready to give it back to the agencies.

Seemingly, the institutional support fee will follow the path of many other fees and governmental programs, in that it will be much harder to do away with the fee than it was to impose it in the first place.

George Miller, vice president for administration and finance, did say that elimination of the fee is not an impossibility. If the University receives most of the money it requested from the state under the Margin of Excellence plan, Miller said the administration may consider eliminating the fee.

If that's possible, it should be strongly considered. The agencies came to the aid of the University at a fiscally tight time, and for that they should be commended. But the crisis has eased, and their obligation — at least for now — is over.

The administration should not only consider eliminating the fee, but it should make every effort to be honest and fair about such matters in the future. Being obscure about the life of a fee, or about any other matters, does nothing good for the image of the administration.

Nebraska threatens to dissolve compact

The situation surrounding the Central Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Compact has become absurd.

Just when it seemed that the host site had been designated and that Nebraska was — albeit reluctantly — going to accept the honor, yet one more wrench has been thrown into the whole mess. Now, a group of Nebraska petitioners has decided it doesn't want to take the waste dump after all, and it is trying to get the state to withdraw from the compact altogether.

And everything has virtually gone back to square one.

News of the Nebraska petition has caused a domino effect among the other compact members. A similar petition drive in Arkansas that would have that state pull out of the compact has gained momentum because of what's happening in Nebraska.

And, not to be left out of the fun, Kansas lawmakers have indicated that they will introduce legislation to pull out of the compact if the Nebraska petition drive is successful. So far, nothing has been heard out of Oklahoma or Louisiana, the other members that entered into the five-state agreement.

What's interesting about the impending Nebraska pullout is that the state hasn't been threatened with legal action, even though it has entered into a legally binding contract. Back in the compact's infancy when Kansas was considering dropping out, the state was told it could be sued. Apparently, Nebraska hasn't been given similar advice.

As evidenced by the chain reaction that is already occurring, the move by the Nebraska petitioners has virtually killed the compact. And for what?

The compact's demise has virtually ensured that all five states will become responsible for building and maintaining their own dump. As a result, instead of building one dump every 30 years and being able to rely on the advanced technology that will be available in the future, the states will be forced to build five dumps utilizing today's technology.

And based on dumps currently in operation, it's likely that within 15 or so years all the states will have five leaking dumps on their hands. Then perhaps the compact won't look so bad.

It's a safe bet that hindsight will still be 20-20 in the 1990s.

TV's double standards

Shows as 'offensive' as censored ads

Commentary

CATHERINE DOUD
Collegian Columnist

When boredom sets in and there is nothing else to talk about, a safe conversation topic is to gripe about the TV set. Everyone I know has his or her own particular pet peeve about this electronic device and would be willing to go on at great length about it.

More interesting than just complaining about the television in general is picking out specific programs, policies or commercials to gripe about. This isn't just a pastime of bored college students. The media, various consumer groups and the government devote vast amounts of time and money to the topic.

Somehow the TV medium has acquired the role of being a monster that is a much greater threat to mankind than the print medium. Specifically, the commercials that appear on television are considered to be the true criminals.

Everyone has commercials he or she hates. Some people even make a practice of keeping their remote control close beside them so that when commercials come on they can zip about from station to station, avoiding them all. Now that hardly seems fair to the advertisers, since it is their commercials that pay for commercial television. Fortunately, even though a lot of people avoid these commercials, enough see them to complain about them.

These complaints have done a great deal more to the appearance of TV commercials than they have to any other media. Commercials that would be tame by any national magazine's standards can create a furor on television. Imagine an ad for the Obsession fragrance being shown on television with various naked bodies running around. It would never happen. The major networks would never allow it to be run, imagining the panic that would be created when consumers rioted and claimed their children were being corrupted. However, extremely graphic ads can run in magazines and newspapers, which are around for a long time and are easily accessible to any child tall enough to reach the living room coffee table.

I imagine I should actually quit complaining and be thankful that TV commercials have become so much more liberal. After all, you can actually see women modeling bras on television now.

Another example of the double standard in programming practices is the banning of cigarette ads on television. However, the ads can still appear in print. Once again, I fail to see how an ad for cigarettes on television would be more harmful than one in print. It sounds like a conspiracy to get the money from cigarette advertisers channeled into print. I fail to see how the government can ban the advertising of cigarettes since they are a legal product and, therefore, manufacturers have a right to inform the public about them.

Perhaps one of the major recipients of complaints in advertising is commercials aimed directly at children. At one time there was a movement to stop all commercials aimed at children. Once again, it's another example of how people overreact when it comes to television.

The double standards about which I complain, though, aren't just between television and the print media. There is even a large discrepancy between TV ads and TV programs. In fact, the programs usually are more repulsive than the prudish, restricted commercials.

People on TV programs smoke and drink, while commercials can't advertise cigarettes, and alcohol advertisements can't actually show someone drinking. Does this make sense?

A good example of how far programming can go today can be seen in Wichita's KSAS-TV, which broadcast the uncut version of "Texas Chainsaw Massacre" at 9 p.m. Saturday. The station's general manager, Harlan Reams, didn't even expect any public controversy over the broadcast since it really wasn't that violent, at least compared to today's horror films. TV programmers have taken the attitude that the American public has seen it all, so they can be twice as shocking without causing offense.

TV programs can depict sex, violence and drug use, while a commercial that would show such despicable things would be condemned as trying to corrupt the minds of consumers.

I'm not trying to defend advertising as an art form. Granted, it is creative and interesting, but it is basically a form of information distribution. However, it is time the restrictions placed upon it are lifted.

The broadcast companies need to realize that it is senseless to condemn advertising aimed at children when they turn around and show violent shows at a time when many children are still awake. It is hypocritical to ban cigarette advertising when it is a fact of life.

The whole practice is a sham that places too much control over the release of consumer information in the broadcasters' hands. The old practice of making commercial producers present a commercial to the broadcast board two or three times during production to make sure they wouldn't find it offensive is archaic. It is time to face reality — as unpleasant as it may be — and allow ads that depict real life to be run.

Not best memorial

Editor,

Recently I have been bombarded with information about the proposed Vietnam Veteran's Memorial that will be built on the K-State campus. In front of me is a brochure that asks me to give money to the Vietnam Memorial Fund. I have not and will not contribute any of my money to this fund.

Do not misunderstand me. I respect the 38 K-Staters who gave their lives for their country. Having given the ultimate sacrifice, they should be remembered and honored. However, I do not feel that a memorial such as the one proposed is the best way to honor these veterans.

K-State is home to two other "memorials" — Memorial Stadium for World War I veterans and All Faiths Chapel for World War II and Korean War veterans. These memorials serve a double purpose: to commemorate the veterans and to benefit the K-State students and faculty. The Vietman memorial will commemorate the veterans but otherwise be of little value to the K-State students and faculty.

Why not keep the needs of the K-State population in mind in this endeavor? Why not build a Memorial Parking Lot or a Memorial Wing in Farrell Library? I am sorry if I offend anyone, but $20,000 is a lot to pay for something that will serve little purpose other than to commemorate the veterans. The much less expensive plaque in the Union already does this — and quite well, too.

Confusing column

Editor,

For several weeks I have been following, or should I say tolerating, the series of "columns" by Chris Kippes. Monday's poorly organized and written commentary on the Telefund provoked me to speak my mind.

Before reading what Kippes had to say about the Telefund, I had no strong feelings on the topic. After reading the column, however, not only was I confused about how the author felt about the Telefund, I was even less interested in finding out more about it.

He begins by implying that the Telefund is a "painful and shameful institution that uses its volunteers to beg for alumni support." He goes on to imply that a motto used by the Telefund organizers is "Hitleresque," at the same time admitting that he has received monetary support from the efforts of this drive. One wonders how much time Chris himself has put into the Telefund and, if so, how he was able to stomach the "hyped-up, slicked-down, mindless, cowbell-ringing foolishness" of the fund drive.

The telephone was invented in 1876. One would think a century's experience would produce the most effective, albeit corny, methods of soliciting by phone. Isn't there enough information and disinformation flooding our lives that we don't need senseless editorials that fail to enlighten us on an issue or opinion?

Confessions of a Shopaholic

Story by Chad L. Sanborn Photos by Rob Squires

He was glad he'd decided to go shopping. Pausing for a moment in a national department store in the Manhattan Town Center, it all came back to him why he, like most people, loved to shop.

As usual, he went to his right, toward the men's clothing section. Ah, the ties, the slacks, the coats (double and single breasted) all displayed for his shopping pleasure. He could buy anything, but to do it so soon after entering would strip the hunting trip of its excitement, the hunter of his glory.

He made his way through the men's and into the women's clothing section, unaware of the distorted elevator music which subconsciously enticed him to walk slower.

"Da-Da (take your time)," it whispered reassuringly. "Dum-Dum (look around). De-De (there's no hurry)."

It seemed silly to look at women's clothing. He was not a transvestite and it was all much too small for him anyway. Still, he continued the shopper's dance to the beat of the music.

A sashay to a clothes rack. A dip to read the price tag. Then, as if dancing the Tango solo, a beeline to the next item, contorting the body so as not to bash into a seductively posed mannequin.

Those harlots. Practitioners of the oldest sales pitch. Using a pointed look, wonderful figure and better-than-life legs to sell their wares.

"Stay away from women like that!" his mother had told him long ago in a department store far away but very much the same as his current hunting ground. Whether there was truth in this or whether it just a mother being overprotective of her child, it didn't matter now. He was shopping alone. Only he was responsible for controlling and fulfilling his primal urges.

Tearing himself from the spell of these evil sirens, he made a clumsy dash for the walk-way. The cosmetic ladies in their mauve overcoats gawked and giggled as he half-tripped out the store. He was oblivious to their non-verbal chides. He was on a quest. For what he did not know, but that was beside the point.

The large intestine of the mall offered him little frame of reference. There was confusion everywhere. People roaming, arm-in-arm or at least riding on the same brain waves, with no rhyme or reason. The confusion, enhanced by the dizzying walk-way tile patterns, gave him a rush.

There were so many people. Women and girls with fashionable clothes. Men and boys with stylish haircuts. These were his people. They weren't intriguing because he understood them — he was one of them.

But the older people, their reasons were alien to him. The biggest shopping innovation of their day was the five-and-dime store. But here, under one roof, were as many different stores (and even some duplication) as could be imagined. And, excluding cigarettes, as many different items as consumers could consume.

One old couple seemed in a daze. He was unsure if it was culture shock or adrenaline overdose. Either way, they needed help.

The armpits of the old woman's flowered, bathroom-curtain-like blouse were stained with sweat. The old man's straw cowboy hat was pushed back on his head and his brown, pointy-toed cowboy boots clicked out a dragging country-swing beat.

When hunting or shopping (there is no difference), only the strong survive. The old and weak are weeded out.

Sweating, he entered the pet store. Immediately his heartbeat increased its rpm's, and adrenaline raced through his body. He knew this COULD be the place.

He made eye contact with a small, hairless dog; more like a skinny, nude rat than a dog. "Oh, the poor thing," he thought to no one but himself.

He oozed odd sympathy for the dog. He pitied it not because it was trapped behind plexiglass, but because it was forced to watch people shop day in, day out and so forth, without ever getting a taste of the action.

Breaking connection with the dog-rat, he slid past an old woman being tongue-whipped by a small, black-and-white puppy wearing a bow in its hair. Suddenly he was struck with a disheartening feeling — there was nothing here for him to buy. It came to him like some twisted man's intuition. He exited the store and merged with the confusion.

He stalked from store to store, making a trail through people moving too slow.

The teeny-bopper clothes stores were kind of fun for him. He liked the duds, and the sales girls were cute (though not nearly as perfect as the mannequins).

He visually assaulted the items in the store, though careful not to give away his desire to buy. As much as it was a quest for merchandise, it was a game with sales people.

Always well-dressed and eager to compliment, the sales people presented a paradox. They were the guides through the jungle, yet they were not to be trusted due to their obvious allegiances.

He could sense he was just wasting time. There was nothing here he wanted to buy. He made his way past an acid-washed girl who was probably putting her umpteenth item on lay-a-way.

Focus was needed. Until now he had been wandering when he should have been tracking. "Trust your instincts, but watch for signs!" He was more than familiar with the techniques.

Just the other day he had been dining with a woman who relayed a shopping (hunting?) story to him. The woman and her aunt went shopping, primarily because that was all they had in common. At one point in their quest they tried on lipstick for three hours.

That is what it is all about. It had little to do with the mango-colored lipstick the woman bought. It was more about the thrill derived from roughly 180 minutes of stalking. It was about the glory of walking out of the store with two and three-sixteenths inch lips.

Sensing the hunt was coming to a close, he quickly tried every store, even the potpourri store. It reeked of coffee and reminded him of the kind of store his mother would like. From somewhere in the deep recesses of his mind he could hear his mother scream: "Don't touch that, I can't afford to pay for it."

He was weary from hunting. He slid into one of two sporting goods stores in the mall. The other was obnoxious to him. All decorated in blue neon like a Miami Vice set or a Michelob Light commercial, he thought it too cheap-looking.

Unfortunately, the chosen store was out of his size in the style of shoe he wanted. It was just not to be.

Tired and empty-handed, he left the mall. But he had hunted well and in this modern age one could afford to come home without a kill. Besides, he knew of a thrift store just down the street...

School board hears bid on new school

By The Collegian Staff

Solutions to the overcrowding in Manhattan area schools were considered by the Manhattan Board of Education on Wednesday night with a presentation of new facility cost projections and a summary of available classroom space.

An information packet prepared by Hal Rowe, superintendent of schools, explained the urgency of finding a solution for the growing student population. Rowe compared expanding current school districts and the building of new schools.

A tentative bid by Brent Bowman and Associates Achitects, P.A. described a new three-section elementary school costing approximately $3.5 million, which would accommodate 525 students.

Alumni donations break records

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

The KSU Foundation's annual Telefund is setting new fund-raising records for the 10th consecutive year.

Telefund is a nationwide alumni-giving program coordinated by the Foundation. Volunteer student and faculty callers from K-State's eight academic colleges phone alumni to enlist financial support for scholarships and programs for students.

The arts and sciences, business administration and architecture and design colleges have each established new records during the 1988 fund-raiser.

Last year, the College of Arts and Sciences raised $114,831, but topped that by enlisting $120,763 in pledges this year, the highest amount ever received by any single college.

The College of Business Administration shattered its 1987 total of $47,645 by obtaining $58,242 in pledges this year. Architecture and Design also increased its pledge amount.

The total raised by all colleges now stands at $321,725 pledged by about 12,000 alumni, with seven nights of fund-raising still remaining.

The total raised last year was $460,000 donated by 15,000 alumni.

Arthur Loub, president of the Foundation, said the key to the success of the Telefund is the volunteers who do the calling.

"The presence of students, faculty and administration all working together toward a common goal lends credibility to what we are doing," Loub said.

Gordon Dowell, assistant director of annual giving and communications for the Foundation, said 60 phones are being used this year as compared to 35 in 1987.

"The Telefund is the primary reason K-State leads the Big Eight (Conference) in the percentage of alumni who provide support to their alma mater with 26 percent," he said.

"The national average for alumni support for similar universities is only about 15 percent," Dowell said.

Last showdown for 'Hawks in Ahearn

File/Jim Dietz

Danny Manning will be leading the University of Kansas tonight as the Jayhawks and Wildcats clash for the last time in Ahearn Field House.

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

This is a game that needs no introduction. It's K-State vs. the University of Kansas — the last matchup between the intrastate foes that will be played in Ahearn Field House.

It takes place at six tonight, and will be televised live by the Entertainment and Sports Programming Network.

Word from the battle camps at Lawrence and Manhattan is neither side will have any trouble getting motivated for the 201st meeting between the Sunflower State rivals.

"It's K-State vs. KU — what else needs to be said for that one," K-State coach Lon Kruger said. "I don't think that we'll have any problem getting up for this one. I don't think that anyone has had a letdown for this game as long as I can remember.

"In some games, one has to talk about getting ready to play a game. This is not one of those cases," he added.

"We're really excited. I can see it in our eyes that we're ready to play," KU guard Kevin Pritchard said.

Kansas forward Chris Piper added: "Part of this game will be revenge. We can't stand losing to K-State."

Piper was referring to the last meeting between the Wildcats and the Jayhawks, when K-State snapped KU's 55-game home court winning streak, 72-61, Jan. 30 at Allen Field House.

Since then, Kansas coach Larry Brown has restructured his starting lineup and the 'Hawks are on a four-game winning streak after whipping the University of Nebraska, 70-48, Tuesday in Lawrence.

"I'm excited we're playing as well as we can. It's not the same team I thought I would have at the beginning of the season," Brown said of his squad, 16-8 overall and 5-4 in the Big Eight Conference.

After losing forward Archie Marshall to a knee injury and center Marvin Branch to grades earlier this season, Brown has experimented with various lineups before finding the right combination. The key changes involve Pritchard replacing Otis Livingston and Lincoln Minor — both starters this season — at point guard, and Jeff Gueldner taking over for Pritchard at the shooting guard spot.

This lineup has made Kansas' last four opponents pay for sagging down to guard the preseason's top candidate for national player of the year honors, Danny Manning.

In the last K-State-KU matchup, the Wildcats' 3-2 zone defense shut down Manning in the second half as they dared the Hawks to shoot from outside. It worked as Kansas hit just 44.1 percent of its field goal attempts and was just four-of-16 from outside the three-point line.

"We're not going to leave Manning alone inside, but they are a different ball club than when we played them last. We have to concern ourselves with the other players that they have coming at us," Kruger said.

ESPN is billing tonight's clash as a battle between Manning and K-State forward Mitch Richmond. Though both players lead their squads in scoring — each average 24 points per game — Richmond doesn't see it that way.

"It's not a duel between me and Manning. We're both just trying to help our teams win. It's K-State vs. KU. I don't guard Manning and Manning doesn't guard me," Richmond said.

For senior center Ron Meyer, who reentered the starting lineup Tuesday against Colorado, it will be the last chance he has to beat the Jayhwaks in Manhattan. K-State, 15-6 and 7-2, has lost four straight to the 'Hawks in Ahearn.

"Honestly I hadn't thought that much about it, but it's real important now that I think about it," Meyer said. "They'll be real motivated...and they'll want to win. We're just going to have to do what we have to do and take care of what needs to be done."

NOTES: Kansas leads the series in Manhattan 51-43, but is 17-22 in Ahearn Field House...with 28 points against Colorado, Richmond has tied Kruger for 11th on the all-time K-State scoring list.

Lady Cats fall in hard-fought battle with Colorado

By Chase Clark
Sports Writer

K-State women's basketball coach Matilda Mossman has said the Lady Cats are climbing a hill for a majority of the season — a hill they just can't get to the top of.

Wednesday night in Ahearn Field House, K-State stumbled on its way up that hill once again — losing 86-70 to the University of Colorado.

What Mossman once thought to be a clear path up a small hill has turned into a treacherous, rock-strewn path up the side of Mount Everest.

"I think the hill keeps getting higher," Mossman said. "That's the problem now. We thought we were at the top and then all of a sudden we found there is another level. Every time we take one step forward, we take two steps backward."

Colorado didn't make the climb any easier for the Lady Cats. The Lady Buffaloes, 16-8 overall and 6-5 in Big Eight Conference play, made Ahearn into a home away from home as they shot 59 percent from the field and seemed unable to have a call go against them for much of the ballgame.

"Colorado did an excellent job running their offense," Mossman said. "They moved the basketball and their people moved in on offense. They have great shooters who shot the ball extremely well. They were very tough to stop tonight."

Things started out with mixed emotions for K-State, 8-16 overall and 1-10 in conference play. Lady Cat Janet Madsen gave the the team its only lead of the game by canning the first shot of a two-shot foul to put K-State up 1-0 less than a minute into the contest.

K-State's chances of a victory started to fade when Madsen missed the second shot and Colorado's Crystal Ford sunk a basket in the lane on the ensuing play.

Colorado slowly pulled away from K-State and had built a 10-point lead, 41-31, with only a little more than three minutes left in the half, before K-State made a run at the Buffaloes.

"Early on we had a lot of layups — and we missed," Mossman said. "I just think that got our kids frustrated. We wanted to keep penetrating, but Colorado's defense stopped that penetration."

Behind the efforts of Rita Matteucci, K-State scored eight unanswered points to close the scoring gap to within two. But Colorado scored from the baseline with one second left in the first half. It was the Buffaloes up by four, 43-39, at halftime.

Matteucci and teammate Nadira Hazim led the Lady Cats in an early second half surge to tie the score three times during a two-minute time span from 15:06 to 13:25 left in the game.

But K-State committed 11 second half turnovers to Colorado's 4 turnovers and enabled the Lady Buffs to take reins of the game once again to win by 16 points, 86-70.

"We keep shooting ourselves in the foot," Mossman said. "Every time we do something good, we do two things bad. We're showing some signs of improvement.

"We're still getting better, but we keep making bad decisions. We get behind defensively and foul people. We've got to do a better job of anticipating things and quit getting caught behind."

Matteucci paced the Lady Cats on offense with 18 points and 10 rebounds. Hazim netted 12 points, Diana Miller collected 11 points and Madsen scored 10 points.

"I thought Rita had a splendid game," Mossman said. "She did a great job and played well on both ends. She did the defensive job on Crystal Ford the second half. She's probably one of the smartest players on the team."

Tonight's game must win for 'Cats

Commentary

TOM PERRIN
Sports Columnist

After nearly hitting rock bottom with a 1-4 Big Eight Conference record to start the season, the University of Kansas basketball team appears to be back on track.

The Jayhawks have won four Big Eight games in a row — albeit against the conference's lower division — and seem to have regained some of the confidence they lost when Archie Marshall blew his knee and Marvin Branch blew his grades.

KU's recovery may not be enough to keep Larry Brown from crying about how tough life has been treating him, but then again, what is? Larry Brown not complaining just wouldn't be Larry Brown.

K-State, on the other hand, has hit a skid of sorts. The Wildcats, while having revived somewhat in Tuesday's blowout of hapless Colorado, still are losers of two of their last three games after a seven-game winning streak. Saturday's loss at Oklahoma represented one of K-State's worst performances of the season.

The situation, to a lesser extent, resembles the one surrounding the KU-K-State matchup in Lawrence earlier this season — except in reverse. The 'Hawks are up, and the 'Cats are just a little bit down.

Regardless, the game tonight is a very important one for both teams.

KU is fighting hard to remain in contention for a berth in the National Collegiate Athletics Association tournament. With every loss, the Jayhawks' chances diminish.

K-State must win the game to stay in contention for the Big Eight title. One more Wildcat loss and you might as well concede the conference to Oklahoma, which looks more and more like a juggernaut every game. From what I can see, only Missouri has a legitimate chance to knock off the Sooners during the remainder of the conference schedule.

The key to K-State beating KU will be the same as it was earlier this season in Lawrence — neutralizing Danny Manning. A big game from Manning could send the Jayhawks home as winners.

But if Manning is going to score many points, he will have to do so against K-State's sagging 3-2 zone defense that is designed to keep the ball from going inside. If KU's Kevin Pritchard and Jeff Gueldner can't hit from the outside to open things up under the basket, Manning will have a tough time.

In comparison, K-State's inside game is looking as strong as it has all season with the recent emergence of Ron Meyer as a force. Just when everybody writes Meyer off, the 6-foot-9 senior comes back, asserts himself and gets his starting job back from Fred McCoy. The fickle group of students who cheered Meyer in the Colorado game after booing him all season long should be ashamed.

Even if Meyer doesn't start again the rest of the season, his earning

U.S. hockey team loses to Soviets

By The Associated Press

CALGARY, Alberta — The U.S. hockey team ran out of miracles Wednesday night, losing 7-5 to the Soviet Union in their first Winter Olympic meeting since the stunning American victory at the 1980 Lake Placid Games.

This one fell just short for the United States, which rallied from a 6-2 deficit to 6-5 but couldn't get even, despite outshooting the high-powered Soviets 12-4 in the final period.

The loss left the Americans on the brink of elimination from making the medals round, with a 1-2 record and having to beat Norway and West Germany to even have a chance. The defending gold medalist Soviets are now 3-0 and virtually assured a spot in the medals round.

The top three teams from each of the two pools make the medals round.

With Vaicheslev Fetisov, their all-star defenseman from their main Red Army club, leading the way with two goals and three assists, the Soviets continued the domination of Americans in international play.

The victory was the sixth in eight meetings with the United States in Olympic play since the Soviets played their first Olympic game in 1956. The only time the Americans have beaten the Soviets in the Olympics came in the gold-medal winning years of 1960 and 1980, the last time a dramatic 4-3 victory that was coined the "Miracle on Ice" at Lake Placid, N.Y.

The Soviets have never lost to the Americans at the World Championships, holding a 22-0 advantage.

Sessions allow feedback

Some changes needed, students say

By Angela Hale
Collegian Reporter

About 3,000 K-State students took the opportunity Wednesday to tell their former high school administrators how well their high school curriculum prepared them for college.

More than 350 administrators and 150 secondary schools across Kansas were represented at the Principal-Counselor-Student Conferences in Ahearn.

The conferences allowed students to talk to their former administrators about their high school programs and any problems they may be having in college, said Dana Jaax, admissions representative.

Counselors who were told about problems in college classes by their former students were able to talk to K-State administrators and alert the department involved to the student's problems.

"Some students mention things to the counselor that they won't tell anyone else," said Jaax.

When the counselor relays a student's problem, the University can then do "something to combat that," she said.

Bonnie Patrick, counselor at Aquinas High School, said the conferences were very helpful. Patrick had her former students fill out a questionnaire so that when she returned to the high school, she would have something concrete to show the teachers and administration.

Patrick said her questionnaire showed that students from Aquinas believed they were unprepared for timed composition writing.

"Our English teacher will take that to heart," she said.

James Menze, principal at Haven High School, also thought the conferences were beneficial.

Former students' input on the high school curriculum allows problems to be detected and adjustments to be made, he said.

The conference also gave Menze a chance to recruit former students to return to the school and speak during spring break about college academics, he said.

Traci Boone, freshman in secondary education, met with her former counselor from Andover High School. She said the conferences were important because they give the high school teachers feedback on their programs.

"It's important for teachers to know how well the students are prepared," Boone said.

A former Haven High School student, Stacy Smith, junior in philosophy and psychology, also met with her former counselor.

"It's nice to get back in touch," she said.

Officials oppose admissions changes

By Robert Short
Collegian Reporter

Kansas high school administrators and counselors voiced strong opposition to a proposed selective admissions policy forcing a broadened curriculum on state high schools during a four-person panel discussion Wednesday in Forum Hall in the Union.

Kansas regent and panel member John Welch found he was one of the few proponents of the qualified admissions policy adopted last year by the Kansas Board of Regents as other panel members and members of the audience severely criticized the proposal.

In defense of the proposal, Welch said qualified admissions is in the best interests of the six regents' universities.

"The basic question we asked ourselves was if the current policy of open admissions gave entering students an adequate guide to the level of preparation that would be expected of them once they reach a regents' institution. The answer the Board of Regents gave was 'no,'" Welch said.

The regents' proposal would require all high school students to take four years of English, three years of mathematics, three years of social studies, three years of natural sciences and two years of foreign languages.

Several audience members directed comments to Welch voicing concern about the proposal.

Members of the audience questioned whether or not the Kansas Board of Regents understood the resentment that many high school departments expressed at the idea of having their budgets cut back to make room for the new requirements.

Allan Voth, principal of Kingman High School and panel member, said 48 percent of Kansas high schools have less than a total of 120 students in the top three grades. He said it is difficult for him to justify filling positions for math and foreign language classes for so few students in each high school.

"I would encourage the Board of Regents and the Legislature to refrain from adopting a qualified admissions standard. I don't think it is sound policy," Voth said.

Sen. Joseph Harder, R-Moundridge, Senate education committee chairman and a panel member, said his committee has recommended the proposal to the legislature, but he does not agree with all of its aspects.

"I do not know if the smaller high schools can handle the 15-hour increase in requirements, especially the (two years of) foreign language. In the next two weeks we will bring this issue to a head in the legislature," Harder said.

Panel member Ed King, counselor at Shawnee Mission East High School, said there is a human cost that must be considered in allowing any student to attend college unprepared. He also said students can gain a lot from college, even if they do not stay on to graduate.

"I believe we are in search of a middle ground," King said. "One that will balance the monetary and human costs of the present policy with the educational aspirations of our young people. We must establish differing admissions standards for our various regents' colleges."

Welch said the 15 percent exception window allowing unqualified students to go ahead and enter the university was not intended for athletes, but was for affirmative action.

"Minority Kansans tend to score lower on measures of standardized examinations. Their levels of preparation for university study tend to be less than those of other Kansans," Welch said.

The panel discussion was held to kick off the Principal-Counselor-Student Conferences scheduled for the afternoon.

Answers on AIDS

Why isn't the virus transmitted through food handling?

The basic principles of transmission apply here as well. To do any harm, the virus must get from inside the body of the infected person to inside the body of someone else in sufficient quantity to be effective and without the virus dying in the meantime.

How would dangerous quantities of the virus get on the food? Saliva would provide insufficient quantities. Heavy bleeding could provide sufficient quantity. If the food were uncooked, the blood would be clearly visible, and you wouldn't eat the food. If the food were cooked, the heat used in the cooking process would kill the virus. If the virus were on the food for some time before serving, the virus would probably die of its own accord.

The national Centers for Disease Control says that "all epidemiologic and laboratory evidence indicates that blood-borne and sexually transmitted infections are not transmitted during the preparation or serving of food or beverages ... The CDC guidelines about AIDS in the workplace clearly state that 'food service workers known to be infected with (the AIDS virus) need not be restricted from work unless they have evidence of other infection or illness for which any food service workers should also be restricted.'"

Cleaning serving utensils also poses no risk. Soap and hot water kill the virus. The kind of dishwashing equipment used in restaurants or company cafeterias, or even home dishwashers, will easily kill the AIDS virus.

What about exposure to someone's blood?

Large quantities of blood should be treated carefully regardless of AIDS. Although intact skin is an effective barrier against the AIDS virus and most other diseases, blood-borne diseases are common enough and serious enough so that blood should be dealt with carefully.

An effective way to clean up quantities of spilled blood is by using an ordinary solution of regular household bleach — 1 part of bleach to 10 parts of water, just as it says on the label. Products like Lysol or Tide can also be used.

Minor amounts of blood are not cause for concern — for example, the tiny bit of blood that can result from a minor paper cut or pin stick. Nevertheless, blood can transmit hepatitis and other diseases far more contagious than AIDS, so use common sense about blood contact in the event of a serious accident.

This column is a joint effort between the Collegian and Lafene Student Health Center to inform people about AIDS. Questions may be asked by writing to the University health educator at Lafene or by calling 532-7755.

KU denies FBI access to records

By The Associated Press

LAWRENCE — Officials at the law school library of the University of Kansas recently refused a request by an FBI agent who wanted to know what books a certain person had checked out.

Library officials said it is not their policy to disclose such information, unless the person making the request has an authorized subpoena.

"Our general policy," said James Ranz, dean of KU libraries, "is one of protecting the students of the University."

An FBI representative said the request was routine and part of a pending criminal investigation "that doesn't directly involve the University of Kansas."

FBI spokesman Max Geiman also said the incident was unrelated to the recent investigation of Citizens in Solidarity of the People of El Salvador.

"It has absolutely no relationship to that whatsoever other than it happened in Lawrence, Kansas," said Geiman, a special agent with the FBI's Kansas City office.

Peter C. Schanck, a KU law professor and director of the law school library, said an FBI agent came to the library in mid-January and asked a librarian whether a person had checked out a particular publication.

Schanck declined to divulge the gender of the person being investigated or the material the FBI agent inquired about.

"Believe me, it in no way would tell you anything. It's a very general publication," he said.

Hostage

Hezbollah is believed to be the umbrella group for Shiite Moslem factions holding most of the foreign hostages in Lebanon.

Higgins was returning from a meeting in Tyre with Abdel Majid Saleh, a political leader of Amal in the area, Saleh told reporters. One of the things they discussed was efforts to free foreign hostages in Lebanon, Saleh said.

One source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the kidnappers took Higgins to the village of Shabriha, a half-mile northeast of Tyre.

White House spokesman Roman Popadiuk said President Reagan was informed of the kidnapping before he left his California ranch for Washington.

"We are still investigating, trying to learn more about it," the president said as he boarded Air Force One.

less we have to worry about," Van Buren said.

The Alliance has been around for nearly eight years and is published two to three times per semester. Last semester, however, there was only one issue because neither of the students on the paper had been on the staff before and it took time for them to get accustomed to the operation.

Although the main focus of the paper is on the black student population on campus, the paper is for anyone interested in minority activities in the area, Butler said.

The paper's annual $1,350 budget is supplied through the minority affairs office.

"We manage to pull together a very decent paper for the funds we have," Butler said.

the starting spot in the Colorado game (and hitting six of six shots) should boost his confidence. Meyer's improved play is bound to give McCoy some extra inspiration as well.

And how about the recent play of Charles Bledsoe? Bledsoe has cut down on his fouls, continued to hit the boards hard and has scored consistently under the basket. Heck, Bledsoe is even hitting a free throw now and then.

Granted, matching up Bledsoe, Meyer or McCoy individually against Manning is going to be a mismatch. But by K-State playing zone and having two of their three big men pushing Manning around inside, the 'Cats should be able to contain the 6-foot-10 superstar.

Prediction: K-State by 12.

says a lot about our athletes. We don't wish for a couple of incidents to reflect on the image of the team as a whole."

Stan Parrish, head football coach, said Martin and Smedra have been suspended indefinitely from the team.

"It is our policy to do so until whatever legal action is taken," Parrish said. "Like anybody else, they're entitled to due process."

Parrish said he thought it was unfortunate that athletes seem to be "singled out" by the media.

"Both of these kids are redshirted players who have never been on the field for one down of football for us yet," he said.

An isolated incident, he said, should not reflect poorly on the entire team.

"We've taken a great deal of pride in that our athletes — at least our football kids — in the last two-and-a-half years have done a pretty good job of representing the team," he said. "There are isolated incidents on every team."

Both men are attending K-State on athletic scholarships, he said.

Preliminary hearings for both men will be at 1 p.m. Feb. 22 in Riley County District Court. At the hearing, the charges will be read. However, Beckom said that a suspect has the right to waive a preliminary hearing and go directly to court.

The sentence for a felony offense can range from probation to serving one or more years in prison, Beckom said.

increased significantly.

Dahm cited the new G.I. Bill being offered by the Reserves and National Guard as the reason for the increase.

Enrollment figures for veterans in 1986 indicate that 425 veterans attended K-State, compared to 464 in 1987 and 477 currently, an increase of almost 10 percent from 1987.

Dahm said she anticipates within the next three to four years that 10 percent of the student body will be attending K-State on the G.I. Bill.

Donna Davis, director of the International Student Center, said enrollment of foreign students has steadily increased.

Davis said 710 foreign students — defined as non-immigrants — attended K-State in 1985. By the fall of 1986, that number had increased to 870, and in 1987 the figure was 971.

Figures for this spring are not yet available.

Despite the lack of a formal recruitment effort in the past, Davis credits the various foreign student organizations with recruitment. However, she added that the administration has developed a program to initiate formal recruitment of foreign students.

Politburo drops former boss

MOSCOW — Communist Party leaders Thursday dropped Boris N. Yeltsin, the outspoken former Moscow party boss, from the ruling Politburo and promoted officials charged with reforming economic planning and party personnel.

In a wide-ranging address to about 300 members of the policy-making Central Committee, party leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev said the Soviet Union faces a "most serious financial problem," and he called for "free competition of minds" under his policy of greater openness.

Gorbachev also said the Central Committee should devote a future session to the problems of the more than 100 nationalities that populate the Soviet Union. Ethnic groups in the Baltic states and elsewhere have been agitating in recent months for greater autonomy or outright independence.

Around The Nation

Toxic leak causes evacuation

FREMONT, Ohio — A toxic chemical spill snaking its way toward Lake Erie on Thursday forced the evacuation of hundreds of people and fouled drinking water for at least 22,000 along the Sandusky River.

At least three people were treated for injuries after an estimated 100,000 gallons of toluene, an octane enhancer, spilled Wednesday from a ruptured Sun Co. pipeline south of here.

Five hundred people, including 300 residents of Old Fort, 10 miles to the south, were evacuated Wednesday and Thursday because of the fumes.

"It could get worse," said Sandusky County Sheriff Dave Gangwer. "It depends on how slow it moves, and it's slowing down rapidly."

The spill reached Fremont late Thursday, and the city stopped pumping water from the river, officials said.

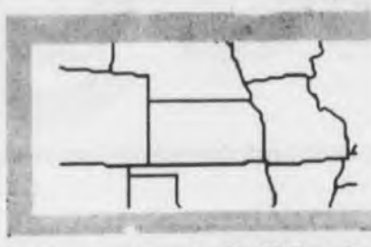
Justice Kennedy sworn in WASHINGTON — Anthony McLeod Kennedy took his place Thursday as the 104th Supreme Court justice in U.S. history, restoring the court to full strength for the first time in eight months and inheriting a pivotal vote on key issues.

"I do solemnly swear that I will administer justice without respect to persons and do equal right to the poor and to the rich," Kennedy, 51, said in a brief courtroom ceremony witnessed by some 450 invited guests.

He then took his seat at one end of the high court bench reserved for the Supreme Court's newest member.

Ailing woman tries to kill son



WAUKEGAN, Ill. — An ailing 81-year-old woman tried to shoot her retarded son to death because she was afraid to leave him "at the mercy of strangers," her attorney said Thursday.

Geraldine Sagel was sentenced Wednesday to 30 months' probation at a nursing home by Circuit Judge William D. Block, who said, "Sometimes a mother's love puts people in strange situations."

The aggravated battery charge carried a maximum penalty of five years in prison and a fine of $10,000.

"It was an act of love and compassion for her son. Being the only one who had ever, ever cared for him, she felt it her responsibility to make sure he was at peace before she died," Assistant Public Defender Laureen Casey said Thursday.

"She had indicated that she wanted to take his life and then would take her own," said Casey, adding her client suffers from poor eyesight, emphysema, loss of hearing and is losing her memory.

Around The Region

Suspect killed in car chase

WELLINGTON, Kan. — The investigation of a shoplifting complaint resulted in a car chase early Thursday ending in an accident that killed one person and injured three others, authorities said.

Wellington police officer Larry Kingsley, 48, was called to a convenience store about 1:15 a.m. to investigate a reported shoplifting, Kansas Highway Patrol Trooper Kenneth Metz said. He attempted to stop a vehicle believed to have been used to flee from the store, but the driver refused to stop.

The driver led Officer Kingsley on a chase to Oxford, Wellington Police Chief Rodney Oldridge said. The driver, identified as Peter Ethier, 23, of Wichita, lost control in a one-lane construction area on the U.S. 160 bridge over the Arkansas River. The car overturned.

House OKs deer hunting bill

TOPEKA — The House today passed a bill that state lawmakers and officials hope will decrease the number of deer playing in Kansas.

The measure is designed to encourage landowners to hunt the deer on their own property, to allow more Kansans to hunt and to get hunters to come from other states. The House approved the bill on a vote of 120-3, and it now goes to the Senate.

State Wildlife and Parks Department officials have expressed concerns that the Kansas deer population is becoming too large. A large population is a problem for farmers, because the animals break fences and eat crops.

The agency has acknowleged its earlier estimates of a population between 400,000 and 500,000 deer were too high, but it cites the 4,000 reported cases of deer "road kill" by motorists last year as evidence of the problem.

Rep. Dennis Spaniol, R-Wichita, chairman of the House Energy and Natural Resources Committee, called the bill a "comprehensive solution" to the deer population problem.

Reagan proposes $1.1 trillion budget

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan proposed Thursday his smallest Pentagon increase but sharply higher spending for AIDS research and airline safety in a $1.1 trillion fiscal 1989 budget that was largely preordained in a deal with Congress.

"This budget does not fully reflect my priorities," the president said in his message accompanying the last spending plan he'll see through to completion. "But ... abandoning the deficit reduction compromise would threaten our economic progress and burden future generations."

The spending plan only hints of the "Reagan revolution" years as it strives to comply with the administration's agreement with congressional leaders last November to reduce the federal deficit.

The agreement set overall spending limits for domestic, military and foreign aid spending. Reagan has already signed the tax increase required under the agreement, adding $14 billion to the Treasury's receipts for next year.

The president's plan envisions overall spending of $1.094 trillion, offset by $965 billion in receipts. That would leave a deficit of about $129.5 billion in the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1, within the guidelines of the Gramm-Rudman, budget-balancing law and down from $150.4 billion last year and an estimated $146 billion this year.

Because of the agreement with congressional leaders, Reagan was forced for the first time to submit a military budget that would not keep pace with inflation.

Restrained to $294 billion in outlays, up from $285.4 billion this year, the president proposed reducing the nation's active-duty forces and abandoning the goal of a 600-ship Navy.

On the domestic side of the ledger, the president requested new spending authority that he has resisted in the past but which Congress would likely favor anyway in an election year, including:

- $1.3 billion for AIDS research, a 38 percent increase.
- An increase of $1.5 billion, or 8 percent, on education.
- A 13 percent boost, to $3.9 billion, for drug law enforcement and treatment programs.
- $363 million to begin construction of the Superconducting Super Collider, a huge new atomic research facility.
- Full funding for a $2.5 billion, five-year program to combat acid rain, and an increase in spending on hazardous waste cleanup.
- A 44 percent increase, to $1.6 billion, for the Federal Aviation Administration to modernize its air traffic control system.
- $11.5 billion for space programs, including the manned space station and space shuttle improvements.

Reagan offsets those increases by calling for a halt to Amtrak and mass transit subsidies, ending Urban Development Action Grants, and eliminating the Interstate Commerce Commission and Economic Development Administration. In addition, government assets such as loan portfolios, the Alaska power administration and the Naval Petroleum Reserve would be sold.

The administration predicts that if its budget is adopted deficits would continue to retreat from the record levels earlier in Reagan's term. When Reagan took office in 1981, the annual deficit was $78 billion, and he promised to bring the budget into balance within three years.

Offering help to towns reflects well on K-State

To some it may be a pleasant surprise that commitments to community service and student participation in local programs are not dead at K-State. Thanks to the efforts of the Community Service Program, active involvement of K-State students in aiding local communities is being sponsored by colleges campuswide.

The Community Service Program, organized by Marvin Kaiser, head of the Department of Sociology, Anthropology and Social Work, has three main purposes:

■ First, the program seeks to create opportunities for students to engage in community service, working under the Jeffersonian principle of citizenship, which comprises not only a set of rights and privileges, but also certain moral duties.

■ Second, the program aims to aid segments of Kansas that are going through difficult times, in a way, paying back the state for providing the University in which we study as well as the communities in which we live.

■ And third, it provides socially conscientious students with a limited income an opportunity to engage in community service without having to lose money in the process.

Part of this program is the community service team project, an assignment for groups of four to five students and a faculty supervisor to spend the summer in one of eight Kansas communities, performing tasks to improve local conditions. Projects, among other things, include developing the economic infrastructure of communities, restoring parks and school playgrounds and improving the potential for tourism in communities.

Perhaps the most significant aspect of this program is stated by Kaiser: "The students are allowed to work not for but with the communities. They become, for a short period of time, part of those communities."

The Community Service Program not only provides students experience and opportunities, but the state with some positive input from K-State.

Foresight will benefit Kansas' racing dogs

Someone is thinking of the future of the pari-mutuel betting industry in Kansas. And this time the foresight may benefit not only the industry, but the animals as well — before problems associated with them become too widespread.

Marion Labs in Kansas City, Mo., has awarded a $30,000 grant to a team of researchers at K-State to adapt a human drug-testing kit that would test for drugs in greyhounds that race. The main objective is to develop a test that will screen a large number of samples quickly and efficiently.

Too many unscrupulous racers drug greyhounds to boost the animals' performance, and it is not known how long the two most commonly used stimulants — adrenaline and caffeine — stay in a dog's system and how quickly they are broken down after exercise.

The researchers are trying to establish first, if the test can detect the drugs and, consequently, if it will continue to detect them as the dogs' metabolism breaks them down during and after excercise.

If the adaptation is successful, drug detection will not only be faster and cheaper, but it will also be more effective. The faster the test, the likelihood of a detection will be much greater.

Depending on the enforcement rules of a given state, the dog, owner and even the trainer can be banned from further racing if the dog tests positive for drugs.

With the increase in the probability of detection, it is less likely an owner or trainer will consider the use of drugs to boost an animals' performance.

Religion and women

Females slighted through beliefs

Commentary

RIZWAN MITHANI
Collegian Columnist

At the outset, I would like to say that I deliberately did not submit this column for publication during the recently concluded Susan B. Anthony Week. Also, I wish to emphasize that women's issues deserve more than just one week.

Since time immemorial, our society has always been male-dominated. Though at present we are in the midst of a major change in our society. There is a growing awareness that "men and women equally compose mankind." Women are increasingly competing in traditionally male domains. "Women's lib" and "feminism" are important issues, from coffee tables to serious conferences.

Religions, (the opium of the masses), have sometimes been the cause of this male dominance; and they have provided fuel to the fire at other times. This is because most religions are patriarchal.

Generally, in all the religions, the man is the authority figure while the woman is domestically powerful. Moreover, the religions generally voice male concerns and legalize the male desire to victimize females. Invariably, the God is defined in masculine terms. In most religions a family and its stability are very important. Generally, religions nourish male dominance in the existing society. However, all generalizations are dangerous, while exceptions would prove the rule.

In the early days of Buddhism, "nirvana" (salvation) was independent of gender; it had the same rules for its male and female followers. Both had the same spiritual path. The women were included in activities which took them beyond their mother's role and domestic circle. But later on, the Buddhist nuns had to be deferential to the monks.

Early Hinduism with its female symbolism gave religious power to the women. However, it slowly developed into a male-dominated religion, which was never challenged. The female's role as mother and wife were praised and she was considered honored if she gave birth to male children. A woman was not allowed to divorce her husband, and a widow could not remarry. There exists a custom of "sati" in Hiduism, where the widow has to jump into the funeral pyre of her dead husband. The fact that one such event occurred in 1987 leaves much to be desired.

Confucianism involved a woman's submission to her father, husband and adult son. The woman was viewed as the mother, and she was responsible to her family, loyal to her husband and in-laws, and she obeyed her husband's wishes. Girls, who past their childhood were to reside in women's apartments, learn pleasing manners, sewing and cooking. Whereas, the boys learned the three Rs, music and martial arts. Further male dominance was developed during times of war, when women were viewed as commodities. Chinese footbinding and female infanticide are extreme instances of Confucian female victimization.

Early Judaism viewed the woman as a mother. The women were allowed a few religious roles like temple singing, but they were forbidden priesthood since they were considered impure. Later they were prevented from studying religious scriptures, which created an educational gap between the sexes. The women benifitted from religion only in motherhood. The unmarried and infertile females were subject to be ridiculed by both sexes.

Early Christianity included women in activities which were beyond their mother's role. In time this gave way to male dominance legitimized by reference to its male founder. Christianity permitted women to be teachers, prophets, martyrs, leaders and evangelists. The early Catholic Church allowed the monastic option to women, but later monks had control over the nuns. The hierarchy in Protestantism is Christ, man and woman. Independent Christian women were at one point termed witches and burned at the stake. Today, to avoid female threat, most strong Protestant women are encouraged to become missionaries and exercise their power in faraway countries.

Women were included in activities that took them beyond the domestic circle in early Islam. In principle, Islam allows both men and women to attain salvation. During its formative years, Islam abolished female infanticide, allowed women to inherit and regulated the "number of wives!" However it ordains that men are to excel over women. Again, with deference to its male founder, it gave way to male dominance. The "purdah" (veiling) system requires a Moslem woman to always don the veil in public and never expose her face. Moreover, the mosque is generally inaccessible to women.

Female symbolism was at the root of Taoism. However, it transformed into male dominance due to the influence of Confucianism. In religious Taoism, females obtained perfection in eight steps in a manner similar to the males, though the perfect-most rank remained male.

As pointed out at the beginning, the world is changing and it is hoped that the religions would be flexible enough to adopt those changes. Religions face the challenge of changing the old sex roles to incorporate the changing world view of women.

Stereotyping

Editor,

Though I frequently enjoy Leigh Rubin's cartoon "Rubes," I was distressed to see the offering for Monday. This cartoon pictured a highly stereotyped Arab doing a comedy routine centered around the themes of polygamy (directly) and oppression of women (indirectly.) As pointed out by Southern Illinois University communications professor Jack Shaheen in his book "The TV Arab" (1984), such a portrayal only confirms and perpetuates the highly inaccurate and pejorative media stereotyping of Arabs.

In American media, Arabs are typically portrayed as villains, terrorists, fanatics, sex fiends, nomadic desert eccentrics or obscenely wealthy sheiks. Arabs and Arab-Americans almost never appear as sympathetic characters or positive role models. (Remember M*A*S*H's Lebanese-American Max Klinger, the none-too-bright cross-dresser who often spoke of his extended family's questionable relations with camels?)

Still, people may respond, "What's the big deal?" The main dangers of media stereotyping come when the stereotypical world is accepted by readers and viewers as reality. For example, how many readers of the Collegian are aware that the custom of the harem was never prevalent among Arab cultures and today is nonexistent?

Those of us relatively unfamiliar with Arabs may assume that the media stereotype of Arab men holding down harems of oppressed wives in reality, when in fact it is not. Research shows that adults and especially children learn about other groups primarily from the media.

While I respect cartoonist Rubin's right of free speech to draw such a cartoon and the Collegian's right to publish it, I hope readers will recognize such blatant and inappropriate stereotyping. Just as the media characters of past eras like the miserly Jewish merchant, the greasy Mexican "bandito" or the savage native American are not considered realistic or helpful images today, perhaps so can today's Arab villain be seen tomorrow as an archaic remnant of past prejudice.

Backing beef

Editor,

Re: Chuck Horner's Food Wednesday "Meatless dishes staple for vegetarian dinners" in Wednesday's Collegian.

I am an animal protein consumer (i.e. red meat — primarily beef), and I view myself as an open-minded individual because I am a firm believer in the familiar adage "to each his own." Therefore, it is not my intent to defame the practice of vegetarianism.

I would, however (because I have been involved in promoting the qualities of beef since I was old enough to grasp a knife and a fork), simply like to give beef the fair and equal time it deserves by sharing some basic beef nutritive facts:

■ A three-ounce serving of cooked lean beef (the size serving often recommended by nutritionists) provides only 192 calories, or 8 percent of the average daily caloric intake of an adult male. Thus, beef is not a major contributor to excess energy intake and obesity.

■ Animal fats, which are highly digestible (about 97 percent of beef proteins and 95 percent of beef fats), also supply neded fatty acids, transport fat-soluble vitamins (A,D,E,K), provide protection and insulation to the human body and add palatability to lean meat. Also, recent research on animals suggests that high amounts of polyunsaturates may suppress the body's natural immune responses, possibly increasing the risk of cancer.

■ A three-ounce serving of cooked lean beef contains only 73 milligrams of cholesterol. The normal human body needs cholesterol — about 1,000 milligrams each day — and the difference between the amount required and the amount consumed is produced by the body itself.

■ Beef is an especially rich source of phosphorous, copper, iron and zinc.

■ Beef contains all the essential amino acids in proper ratio for human nutrition.

Oh, by the way Chuck, before you generalize (as you blatantly did in your lead paragraph), please get the facts, because beef (a vital segment of your "animal product" industry) is far from being a nutritional villain.

Music students to compete

By Vera McMinimy
Collegian Reporter

Two K-State music students will compete for a top prize of $5,000 in the Naftzger Young Artists Awards semifinals today and Saturday in Wichita.

Karalee Kiger, senior in music education, will compete in the instrumental division, and Eugene Thomas, graduate student in music, will compete in the vocal division.

This semester Kiger is student teaching in her hometown, Newton.

"My major is music education so I will be looking for a job where I can teach and perform in an orchestra," she said.

Thomas has plans for earning a living as a singer, but right now he is busy preparing for the competition and earning a degree.

"Some of the areas I've been working on for two years already," Thomas said. "I keep singing them and getting pickier and pickier and pickier."

The Naftzger competition is sponsored by the Naftzger Fund for the Fine Arts and is administered by the Wichita Symphony Society.

Forty-two students will compete for $11,000 in prizes. Awards of $2,000 will be presented to the finalists in vocal, instrumental and piano divisions. The grand prize of $5,000 will be awarded to the overall winner at a public concert Saturday night.

The concert is in The Wichita State University's Duerksen Fine Arts Center, and it is the final phase of the competition.

The competition is open to college and university students from Kansas, Oklahoma and Missouri.

Kiger and Thomas sent 30-minute audition tapes to the Naftzger competition and were selected to compete in the semifinals.

Each student must perform a certain number of selections from different categories. The Wichita Symphony Society specifies the categories, and the judge for the final competition is Maestro Michael Palmer of the Wichita Symphony.

Kiger will perform three selections on the double bass. Her selections are 45 minutes long, but the judges will select 20 minutes for the semifinal audition.

"My major is music education so I will be looking for a job where I can teach and perform in an orchestra."
—Karalee Kiger

Kiger said she practices about three hours each day and about three to five hours on weekends. When she is not getting ready for a competition, she practices about 1½ hours each day.

The Naftzger competition is Kiger's first competition of the year. Last year she won the instrumental division of the Kansas Music Teacher's Competition. She then won honorable mention at the seven-state regional competition.

In the vocal competition, Thomas will perform 13 selections. His audition will also last 20 minutes.

"I practice on my own about an hour a day, plus I think about it and mentally practice," he said. "A singer's voice can only take so much physically, and the amount of stress put on the voice dictates how much to practice."

Thomas hopes to complete his master's degree in music voice performance in May. Thomas said he would like to sing professionally as a stage performer.

The Naftzger Fund for the Fine Arts is a private endowment established by M.C. Naftzger and his wife in memory of three members of the Naftzger family.

Last day to sign up to be blood donor

By The Collegian Staff

Sign-up ends today in the Union for the Red Cross Blood Mobile that will begin Monday and continue through Thursday in the Union Ballroom.

K-State hopes to meet its goal for the seventh consecutive year by collecting 350 units each day, said Phyliss Hammond, project coordinator and director of nurses at Lafene Student Health Center.

Donations will be taken from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. each day by nurses from the Red Cross Center in Wichita.

K-State is one of the largest donors in the Big Eight Conference, Kansas and Oklahoma, she said.

"This is primarily because of student response," she said.

It takes about an hour to donate blood, said Linda Frey, executive director of the Riley County Red Cross. Donors will be questioned about their health and if they use any medication on a regular basis.

"A commonly asked question by students is whether allergy medication would cause them to be turned down — and no, it won't," Frey said. "Some types of medication, such as antibiotics, are seen as a deferral, but allergy pills are not."

THE NCR $300,000 STAKEHOLDER ESSAY COMPETITION FOR STUDENTS

THE MISSION

THE CHALLENGE

THE RULES

NCR

TO CREATE VALUE

At NCR, we've found that in order to create value, we must first satisfy the legitimate expectations of every person with a stake in our company. We call these people our stakeholders, and we attempt to satisfy their expectations by promoting partnerships in which everyone is a winner.

- We believe in building mutually beneficial and enduring relationships with all of our stakeholders, based on conducting business activities with integrity and respect.
- We take customer satisfaction personally: we are committed to providing superior value in our products and services on a continuing basis.
- We respect the individuality of each employee and foster an environment in which employees' creativity and productivity are encouraged, recognized, valued and rewarded.
- We think of our suppliers as partners who share our goal of achieving the highest quality standards and the most consistent level of service.
- We are committed to being caring and supportive corporate citizens within the worldwide communities in which we operate.
- We are dedicated to creating value for our shareholders and financial communities by performing in a manner that will enhance the return on their investments.

TO WIN

We're so committed to our mission that we're encouraging the next generation of leaders to re-examine America's business values. We're doing this by holding the NCR Stakeholder Essay Competition which all full-time undergraduate and graduate college or university students may enter. Entries should explore the topic: "Creating Value for All Stakeholders in Corporations and/or Not-for-Profit Organizations."

The student chosen as the first place winner will be awarded $50,000 cash. Plus, the entrant's school will receive $100,000 in NCR data processing equipment. The second place winner will receive $15,000 cash and the entrant's school will receive $35,000 in equipment. One hundred $1,000 awards of merit will be given to chosen participants. In addition, selected award-winning entrants will be invited to attend the first NCR International Symposium on Stakeholders to be held June 9 & 10, 1988, in Dayton, Ohio.

1) The NCR Stakeholder Essay Competition is open to any full-time undergraduate or graduate student attending an accredited college or university in the United States or its territories.

2) Entries must be original, unpublished work on the topic: "Creating Value for All Stakeholders in Corporations and/or Not-for-Profit Organizations." Essays must not exceed 3,000 words. Areas of discussion may include, but are not limited to: Ethics, Corporate Governance, Strategic Management, Social Responsibility, or Managing Change as these topics relate to managing for stakeholders.

3) Entries must be typed, double-spaced on 8½" x 11" bond paper, one side only. A separate cover sheet should list the entrant's name, school, home address and title of the essay. Subsequent pages should be numbered sequentially and include the essay title in the upper right margin. Winners will be required to produce proof of current full-time college or university enrollment.

4) All entries must be postmarked by March 31, 1988, and received by April 15, 1988 to be eligible for consideration. Submit entries to: NCR Stakeholder Essay Competition, NCR Corporation, Stakeholder Relations Division, Dayton, Ohio 45479. NCR is not responsible for, and will not consider, late, lost or misdirected entries.

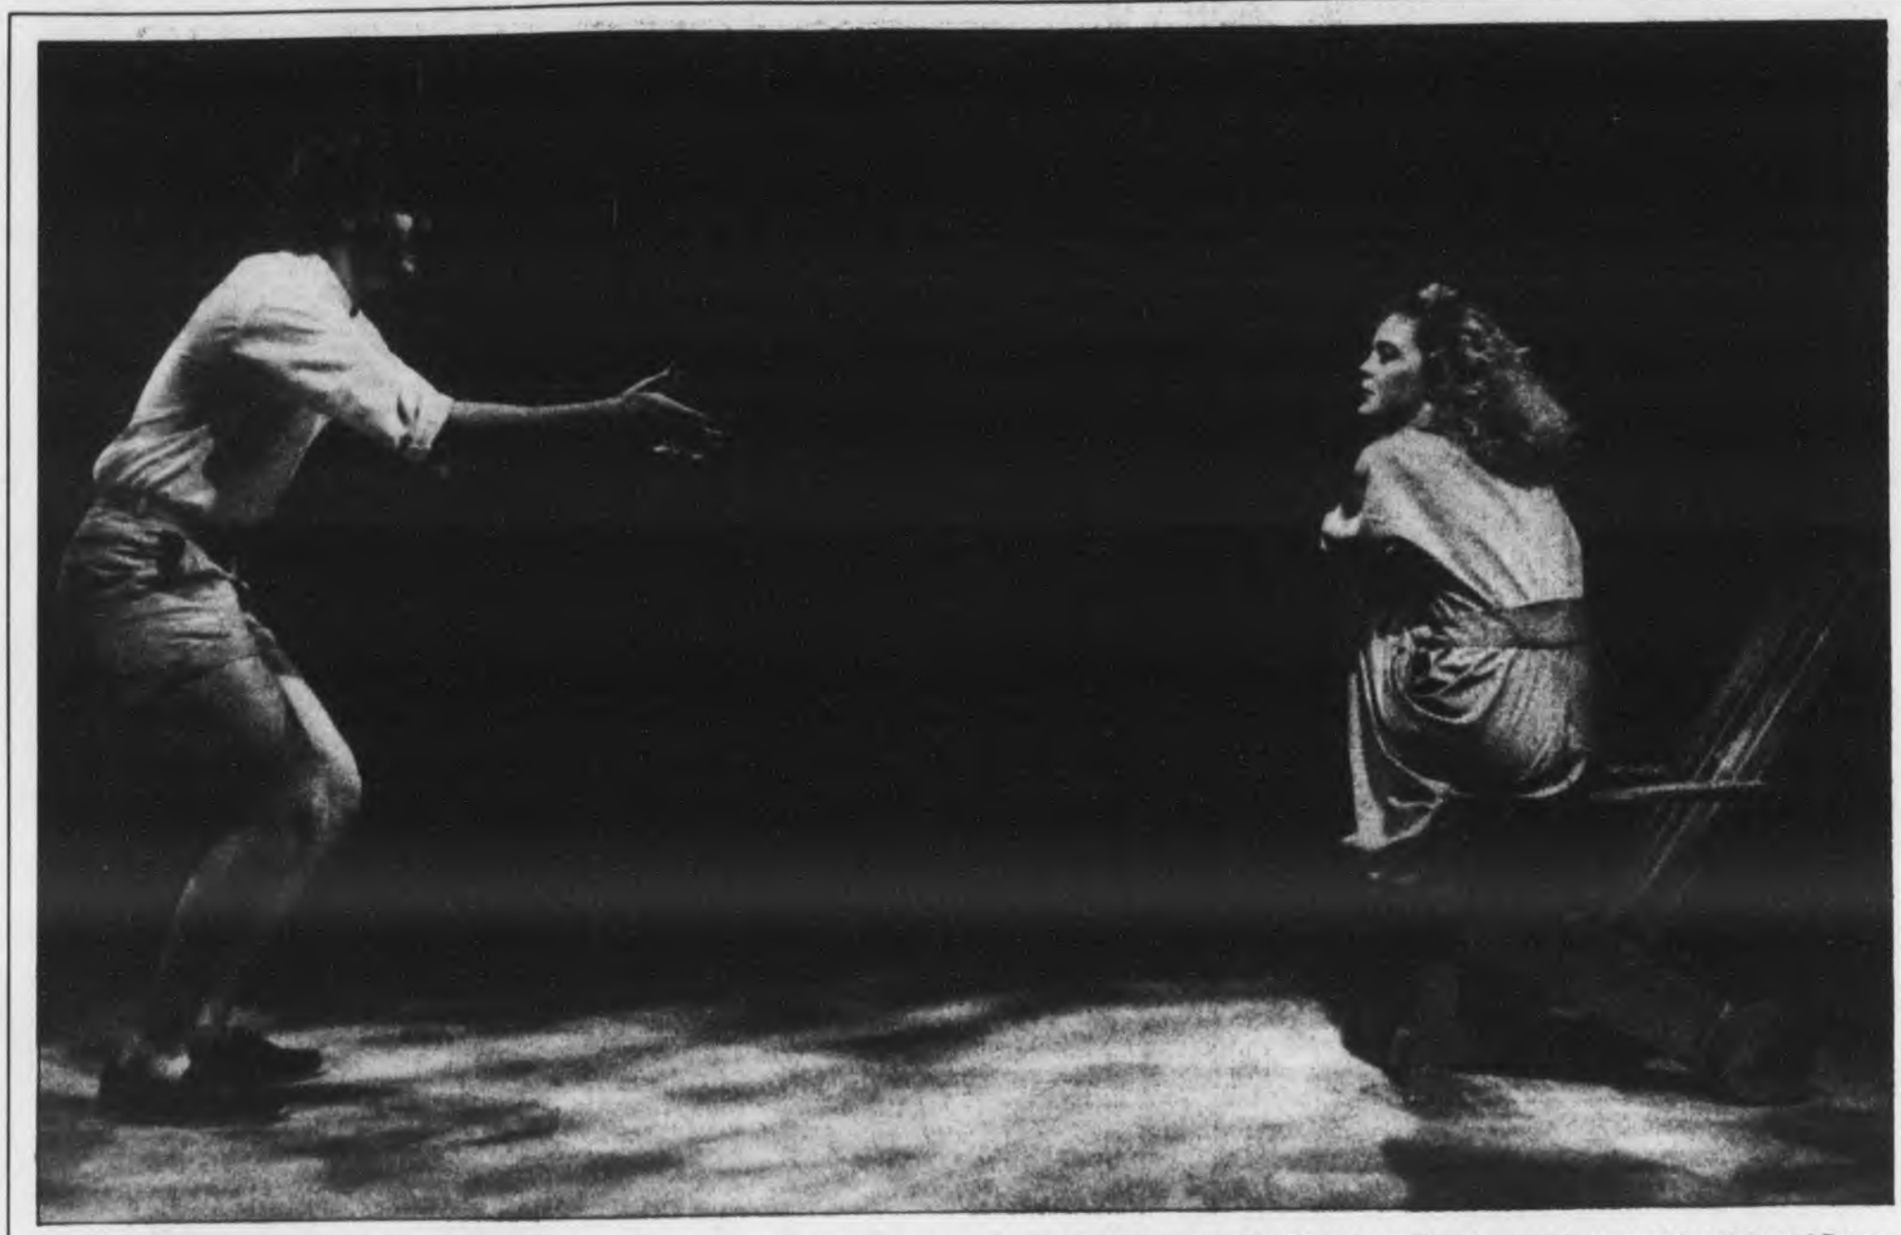
5) In the event any prize winner is a minor, the cash award will be made to his/her parent or guardian.

6) Awards to individuals will be reported as income on IRS Form 1099. All taxes are the responsibility of the recipients.

7) Award winners will be required to sign publicity releases and affidavits of eligibility and compliance with all rules governing the competition. Failure to return executed affidavits and releases within 15 days of receipt will cause the award to be null and void.

8) All entries become the property of NCR and will not be returned.

9) By participating in this competition entrants agree to these rules and the decisions of the judges which shall be final in all respects, and further agree to the use of their names, likenesses and entries for NCR advertising and publicity purposes without any further compensation.



State and territorial judges will consist of panels that include NCR stakeholders. Final selections will be made from state and territory winners by a national panel of judges.

If clarification is necessary, call (513) 445-1667, 8am–5pm EST.

Award winners will be notified on or about May 16, 1988. To obtain a list of finalists, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to:

NCR's Mission: Create Value for Our Stakeholders

Speaking with the ghost of his dead wife Gillian, played by Tamara Grothaus, David, played by Dwight Tolar, works through the process of accepting her death during the play "To Gillian on her 37th Birthday." The play, which starts at 8 tonight and Saturday in Nichols Theatre, is directed by Kate Anderson, associate professor of speech.

'Gillian' deals with loss, love

Play Review

"When your body has forgotten about me, make one more trip to my grave. Don't bring tears or flowers. Take off your shoes and leave them and learn to feel again."

I remember reading this poem at some point during this past year and thinking, "What a beautiful image about accepting loss." The K-State Players production "To Gillian on her 37th Birthday" is a beautiful story about loss and love and learning "to feel again."

The setting is a beach-front cottage, somewhere on the East Coast. This cottage is the home of David, his daughter Rachel, and lifelike memories of his wife Gillian.

The play begins just a few days before the anniversary of the boating accident which took Gillian's life.

Although two years have passed, David is still battling with the confusion, loneliness and other consequences of his wife's death.

The anniversary of Gillian's death has brought back Gillian's sister, Esther, and brother-in-law, Paul. Kevin, a former female student of David's who seems to serve as a potential replacement for Gillian, is also present at the reunion. As one might expect, this reunion is more than just a little awkward.

David really doesn't appreciate any of his house guests and shows this by acting aloof, losing his temper, and going for long runs with Cindy, one of his daughter's high school friends.

For the most part, David spends his evenings sitting out on the beach gazing at stars and talking to Gillian, who is still very alive in his mind. Whether Gillian's character is the embodiment of a spirit, a vivid memory, or part of an image conjured up from David's own feelings is left to the audience to decide. The fact of the matter is there are some things about Gillian's death that need to be resolved before the memories about her life can be pleasant and peaceful.

"To Gillian on her 37th Birthday" is a very good play. The characters in the cast are extremely comfortable with each other on stage, which contributes to a peacefulness and naturalness about the production.

One of the most intensive feel-

Esther, played by Deb Pierce, pleads with her brother-in-law David to give up his obsession of his dead wife Gillian. The play is a K-State Players production.

Paul, played by Donald Olsen, tries to convince a stubborn David to start teaching again.

Softball tournament organizers look forward to good weather

By The Collegian Staff

Organizers of the co-ed Winter Softball Tournament Saturday and Sunday are prepared for snowy conditions, but a favorable forecast will mean softball as usual, said Stephanie Haub, junior in accounting.

Haub is coordinating the event on behalf of the sponsors, Goodnow Hall and the Association of Residence Halls.

Sunny skies and temperatures in the 40-50 degree range are predicted for the tournament. Had it snowed, cones would have replaced bases, and an orange stripe would have been painted on the softball, Haub said.

Weather conditions last year were also sunny and "perfect," said Sam Huffman, sophomore in parks resource management.

Huffman managed last year's winning team, Haymaker 5, and said the team is ready to play again.

"We all got along together last year and we played well," he said. "We are looking forward to it."

The tournament will be set up to allow each team to play at least three or four games, Haub said.

"Lots of people just play for fun, not necessarily to win," she said.

Ten teams will compete in two divisions. The tournament will begin at 8 a.m. Saturday in the Northview and Gorman East fields east off of Tuttle Creek Boulevard on Griffith Drive.

Proceeds from the tournament will be donated to the Women's Resource Center, which will use the money to further a "Stop Date Rape" program, said Katherine Parker, director.

Parker said she plans to purchase a videotape that examines ways men and women can relate to each other without abuse. The tape will be included in future seminars and programs aimed at ending violence against women.

"I feel very good that the residence halls are doing this for the center, and they will get the benefit of (the videotape)," she said. "I'm glad they made this choice, and I want them to know that the Women's Resource Center appreciates their trust in us."

Groups to perform Sunday

By The Collegian Staff

Seven high school madrigal ensembles will have the opportunity to perform and receive coaching on their performances Sunday when they gather for the first Kansas State University Madrigal Festival.

The Madrigal Festival will take place in the Manhattan Holidome Ballroom beginning at 4 p.m. It is hosted by the K-State Choral Division and the Manhattan Arts Council. Rod Walker, professor of music and director of Choral Activities at K-State, will direct the festival.

"The purpose of the festival is to provide an opportunity for the students to hear other ensembles performing music intended for the small vocal ensemble," Walker said, "And to get acquainted with one another as well as student singers from Kansas State."

The performing high schools will be videotaped, and will receive taped comments on their performances. It will enable them to review their performances when they return to school. Walker will be giving the critiques of the performances. The K-State Madrigals will also perform during the festival.

The event will last from 4 to 7 p.m. At the close of the singing, there will be a pasta buffet for all the singers and their directors. The schools that will perform in the festival and their directors are as follows:

Olathe South High School — Texanna Ollenberger; Emporia High School — Doug Grant; Circle High School — Connie Laughridge; Wichita South High School — Tim Brown; Manhattan High School — Dan Commerford; Southeast of Saline — Bill Tuzicka; Wichita North High School — Ken Forsyth; and Bishop Carroll High School — Dan Smith.

Fund drive to begin Saturday

By The Collegian Staff

Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan hope to get a lift Saturday in the Bowling Classic.

Starting times for the fund-raiser will be at 11:30 a.m., 1:30 p.m. and 3:30 p.m. at the Union Recreation Area and at 1:30 p.m. and 3:30 p.m. at Wildcat Lanes, West Highway 18.

Money raised will go directly to help area children from single parent homes who need a big brother or big sister, said Linda Teener, executive coordinator of Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan.

Each bowler collects sponsors willing to pledge a minimum of 5 cents per pin. The bowlers then bowl two games and the best score of the two is counted when collecting the money.

The lanes and shoes will be free for participants, and food will be provided.

People interested in participating should contact Big Brothers and Big Sisters at 776-9575.

'Hawks edge 'Cats, 64-63

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

The outcome of Thursday night's K-State-University of Kansas matchup wasn't decided by Mitch Richmond or Danny Manning.

Instead, it was left up to a pair of unlikely headline grabbers to be the heroes: Kansas' Kevin Pritchard and Jeff Gueldner. Pritchard's 3-point shot and Gueldner's steal on K-State's inbounds play with three seconds left sealed a 64-63 Jayhawk win over the Wildcats in Ahearn Field House.

Pritchard, who only shot 4-of-10 from the field, nailed a three-pointer to put KU up by three, 64-61, with 29 seconds remaining. Following Richmond's 5-foot jump shot to pull K-State to within one, and a missed free throw by Kansas' Keith Harris, Gueldner stole the ball from Fred McCoy on the inbounds play.

"They made a long pass and the guy caught the ball. I'm not sure how he originally lost control of it but ... for once the ball at the end of the game bounced our way," Gueldner said.

Gueldner, who finished with 10 points, was surprised the inbounds play went almost the length of the court to McCoy.

"I was really prepared for Richmond to get the ball, but they really didn't run anything (to get Richmond clear). Maybe they were trying to use him as a decoy because McCoy hit a big shot in a previous game," Gueldner said. "We were lucky enough that he lost control of it and we came up with it."

K-State coach Lon Kruger said the play wasn't designed to go to any particular player.

"Our No. 1 priority was to catch the ball. The play was intended for an area. We wanted to break some people into that area," Kruger said

McCoy caught the ball and attempted the shot, but it was knocked away by Gueldner.

"He caught me on the arm, and I lost it. Then I got it back, and he caught me again. The ref didn't see it that way, so it really doesn't matter now," McCoy said.

The biggest play of the game, said Kansas coach Larry Brown, was Pritchard's three-pointer.

"We hit some big shots, but none bigger than Kevin's. I was trying to get the guy to look at the goal. I said more four-letter words to him (to get him) to shoot the ball," Brown said.

Pritchard, who had 12 points for KU, was admittedly nervous about taking that last shot after missing four attempts from outside the 3-point line earlier in the game.

"As a shooter you want to be consistent ... but tonight I was streaky," Pritchard said. "I thought a lot of those three-pointers I was shooting tonight was going in. They felt

K-State's Charles Bledsoe attempts to block a shot by Danny Manning during KU's 64-63 victory over K-State Thursday. Manning lead all scorers with 18 points. K-State now falls to 7-3 in the Big Eight Conference, while KU moves to 6-4 with four conference games remaining.

Richmond had 'one of those nights'

By Jenny Chaulk
Sports Editor

Kansas fans might call it poetic justice. K-State fans, on the other hand, might call it anything but. Thursday night's game with the Jayhawks in a packed Ahearn Field House and in front of a national audience on ESPN was another close, heart-wrenching defeat for the Wildcats, 64-63.

In addition to ESPN, representatives from Sports Illustrated and three professional scouts were on hand to witness the rivalry in an intense and electric atmosphere. They saw a good battle, but one ingredient in K-State's attack was off the mark.

Mitch Richmond, the 'Cats All-American candidate, leading scorer (25 points per game) and all-purpose, do-it-all player, connected on just four of 17 shots from the field and collected 11 points in 39 minutes of play. K-State's inside trio of Ron Meyer, Fred McCoy and Charles Bledsoe picked up some of the slack, but when a team's leader can't deliver in crucial games, the outcomes generally aren't good.

"It was one of those cases where, when someone has not done well, someone else has stepped up there. I thought that happened a little (Thursday)," K-State coach Lon Kruger said. "During the course of the year, you've got to have different people step forward. We just didn't quite get it done."

Richmond's performance Thursday was a welcome contrast for the Jayhawks, however, when compared with his 35-point performance in Lawrence Jan. 30. Richmond led K-State in breaking the 'Hawks 55-game winning streak, as the 'Cats pounded KU, 72-61.

"I took a lot of responsibility because last time, Mitch scored 35 points and I was guarding him most of the time," said KU forward Milton Newton, who again drew the defensive assignment on Richmond. "I just said before the game 'if he's going to score, he's going to have to do it the hard way ... he's going to have to take 25 to 30 shots.'"

Richmond didn't get 25 to 30 shots, and even if he had, the number he may have connected on is questionable because Richmond experienced what every good ball player experiences at least once in his career — a cold shooting night.

"My shots weren't falling ... it was frustrating," Richmond said. "But I'm going to have nights like this. I was rushing (my shots), didn't follow through. ...I didn't hit the shots I needed to hit."

Newton's defensive pressure can be credited for much of Richmond's bad shooting luck. Time and time again, Richmond was forced to shoot off-balanced because of KU's aggressiveness.

"I thought we did as well as we could on him," KU coach Larry Brown said. "If (Richmond) was going to beat us, he was going to beat us with a tough shot. Fortunately, he didn't make every one."

To his credit, however, Richmond contributed to the 'Cats' attack in other areas. He had a team-high seven assists, going mostly to Meyer, McCoy and Bledsoe. And he maintained his composure, which he said wasn't the case last year when the Jayhawks beat K-State, 80-75, in double overtime in Ahearn.

"I didn't try to force the issue. I tried to stay in the game by getting someone else the shot," Richmond said. "Last year was more frustrating. This year, I kept myself in the game better.

"They just got the better of us tonight. Everything was going their way," he added.

Track teams hosting 17-team meet today

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's track and field teams are hosting the KSU Open indoor meet today, as they start preparing for the Big Eight Conference's indoor meet next week.

Seventeen teams are slated to participate in the meet, which began Thursday, including defending conference champion University of Nebraska, The Wichita State University and several of the state's community colleges.

As far as K-State is concerned, track coach John Capriotti said he will be using this meet to prepare his squads for the Big Eight indoor meet.

"It's really a low-key meet. What we're doing is using this as a 'tune-up meet' for the Big Eight," Capriotti said.

"We're a little behind because we started so late (in the season) and we still have people sore. People will just be running 'down races,' which means shorter distances than they will be running at the meet next week."

Field events are scheduled for a 9:30 a.m. start today in Ahearn Field House with the long jump, triple jump and shot put competition.

The 55-meter hurdles will start track events at approximately 11:30 a.m.

America's best not good enough

By The Associated Press

CALGARY, Alberta — Speed skater Dan Jansen fell in a race for the second time Thursday, passing from tragedy to deep frustration at a Winter Olympics he had dedicated to the sister who died on Valentine's Day.

Jansen, America's world sprint champion, was on his way to what could have been a medal, maybe gold, in the 1,000 meters when he tipped over on the outside edge of his right skate on a back straightaway of the final lap.

He fell and sat on the ice in disbelief, rocking back and forth with his face buried in his hands. Coach Mike Crowe and teammate Nick Thometz helped him off the ice, although he was unhurt physically. The pain was mental, and it was excruciating.

After he left the ice, he embraced his fiancee, Canadian speed skater Natalie Grenier, and cried in her arms.

He fell, too, last Sunday, just hours after his sister died. That time he fell on the first turn of the 500 meters.

It was an Olympics in which America's best just wasn't good enough as wind played tricks with the schedule and Eastern Europeans toyed with the opposition.

Winds that reached 72 mph and blew one skier right off the course forced postponement of the women's downhill and team 90-meter jumping. America's best bet in the downhill, Pam Fletcher, was gone anyway, breaking a leg when she ran into a volunteer worker during warmups.

Bonny Warner had the best finish of any American luger in an Olympics, but she was more than two seconds behind winner Steffi Walter, who led another East German Olympic sweep. Warner was sixth, 1.875 seconds away from the bronze.

"We now have gotten right on the verge," Warner said.

That's what happened to speed skater Eric Flaim the day before when he set a U.S. record in the 5,000 meters, only to finish fourth, 1.17 seconds away from a bronze.

That's what happened to the U.S. hockey team, which staged a wild,

Last time in Ahearn no big deal

Lady Jayhawks next up for K-State

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

Kansas will travel to Manhattan to take on K-State in Ahearn Field House for the last time, as the Lady Cats will host the Lady Jayhawks at 7:30 p.m. Saturday.

For Lady Cat coach Matilda Mossman, the feeling of an intrastate rivalry with the Lady Jayhawks is not quite as strong as it is for the men, who played Thursday night.

"The men receive all the hype," she said. "They're much more vocal about it than what we are."

And while it is the last game the Lady Jayhawks will play in Ahearn, the feeling of a "big game" is not quite present.

"When the women average anywhere between 200 and 1,000 fans per game, the building doesn't add much of a difference to a game," Mossman said. "These girls are ready to get out of Ahearn. They're ready to move into Bramlage (Coliseum)."

The Lady Cats lost the first matchup with Kansas Jan. 30, 52-50, on a finger roll layup with two seconds remaining by Deborah Richardson. Mossman is expecting the same type of game — close.

"We're a better team (than we were then)," she said. "I'm sure that KU is also playing better. It'll be a close game as before. It's an even matchup and we'll see how things go from there."

Guard play is the factor concerning Mossman the most entering the Saturday night matchup. In the Lady Cats' game with Colorado Wednesday night, an 86-70 CU win, the guard position was responsible for 15 of the 22 turnovers.

"That's pretty alarming," she said. "Kansas is a pressing team and they can convert on those mistakes."

Mossman also faces problems with the post position.

"Kristie (Bahner) shouldn't have been playing Wednesday night in the first place, because she was sick," she said. "We just haven't gotten as much production out of (the post position) as we should have this year."

Despite these difficulties, Mossman still thinks the ballclub has improved, despite having an 8-16 overall record and a 1-10 conference record.

"We're starting to get more shots than turnovers, but we still have the turnovers," she said.

Mossman's biggest concern, however, is finding a consistent starting five.

"We're still struggling there," she said. "It seems that we just can't get five people onto the court with good awareness of what's going on and who's doing what."

Pep rally in Union prepares fans for KU, K-State game in Ahearn

By Becky Ives
Collegian Reporter

For those instructors who noticed a large number of students missing from their classes early Thursday afternoon, they were probably attending Beat the Jayhawks 101.

At least that's what Mitch Holthus, the Voice of the Wildcats, called the pep rally in the Union Courtyard in preparation for the basketball game between K-State and the University of Kansas Thursday night.

Students lined the railings on every level of the Union and filled the floor around the Courtyard in preparation for what Holthus said would be the final exam at the game later that night.

"The final grade is tonight, and your grade is dependent on how you act," he told the crowd, who responded with enthusiastic cheers.

The pep rally was filmed by ESPN, and there was a brief appearance by ESPN's sports announcer Larry Conley.

"(Dick) Vitale was going to come here to announce the game, but (ESPN) sent the A-Team instead," Conley said.

Holthus, keeping in the classroom setting, introduced head coach Lon Kruger as "the instructor of the class." Students who were concerned about their grade in Beat the Jayhawks 101 were immediately put at ease.

"You all get A's — no question about it," Kruger said. He continued his praise to include more than just the students.

"We have the best broadcaster in the state (Holthus), the best cheerleaders in the country and a group of players working hard to give you the best team in the state," Kruger said.

Kruger had one assignment for his "class": to continue to be the supportive crowd they've been all year.

"Picture with me the rest of the day," Kruger said. "I want you to get over to the game early, be loud and noisy and give the basketball team your support.

"At the conclusion of the game, when we go to celebrate, let's do it with class," he added.

The students seemingly took Kruger's advice to heart.

"As soon as the doors open, I plan to be there," said Kelly Klap, senior in environmental design.

"As soon as class is over, I am going to the game," said Mike Hamacher, senior in marketing. "Everybody is going to get excited for the game."

Stephanie Deatrick, senior in music, was a little disappointed with the pep rally but still was excited about the game.

"I'm definitely all prepared for the game," Deatrick said. "I was just hoping that they would have introduced all the players (at the pep rally)."

Panel selects new UPC president

By The Collegian Staff

The Union Programming Council has announced the appointment of Mike Ribble as president of its nine executive committees.

Ribble, junior in secondary education, is the current chairman of the feature films committee. His new position will entail the overseeing of UPC's executive committees and reporting to UPC Director Sylvia Scott. Ribble will move into his new position May 1, but he has already assumed the duties of his new job.

"Right now, I'm in the organization process," Ribble said. "I'm a committee chairman and also in the process of getting organized into (the president's position)."

Duties with which Ribble will be involved as president include directing UPC's 100 members and seeing that the responsiblities of the nine committees are carried out. He will also be in charge of reporting to the Union Governing Board regarding the budgeting of funds for the nine committees.

Ribble has worked for UPC for two years, during which time he has been a committee member and chairman.

He was chosen through an application and interviewing process that was conducted by the nine committee chairmen.

good."

The big difference from the last time these two teams met was Kansas was able to hit the outside shot.

K-State gambled by collapsing on Manning and held him to 18 points. But the outside trio of Milt Newton, Pritchard and Gueldner combined for 36 points — 15 from 3-point range — as the Jayhawks shot 48.1 percent (26-of-54) from the field.

"If they are going to give us the outside shot, I figure we've gotta take it," Brown said. "If the opposition is going to play Danny the way they play him, you've got to have kids step forward (and hit the outside shot). It's not the way I like to play."

In the first half, K-State built a 15-11 lead with 13:05 remaining behind the hot outside shooting of guards Steve Henson and William Scott, who finished with 13 and six points, respectively. Then Manning hit seven straight points to put the 'Hawks up by three, and Kansas led by as much as six points near the end of the half.

K-State shot only 36 percent from the field in the second half, and Richmond scored just two of his 11 total points in the final stanza. Kansas led by eight early in the second half after a pair of baskets by Newton, before the inside power of Charles Bledsoe, Ron Meyer and McCoy began to take over.

"I thought we had great control and then they started killing us on the boards," Brown said. "I think their best offense was to let Mitch shoot the ball and for them to crash the boards."

Bledsoe, Meyer and McCoy accounted for 21 of K-State's 29 second-half points, but the 'Cats could only manage a two-point lead and missed several chances inside to build their lead.

three-goal rally in the third period Wednesday night, only to lose 7-5 to the Soviets.

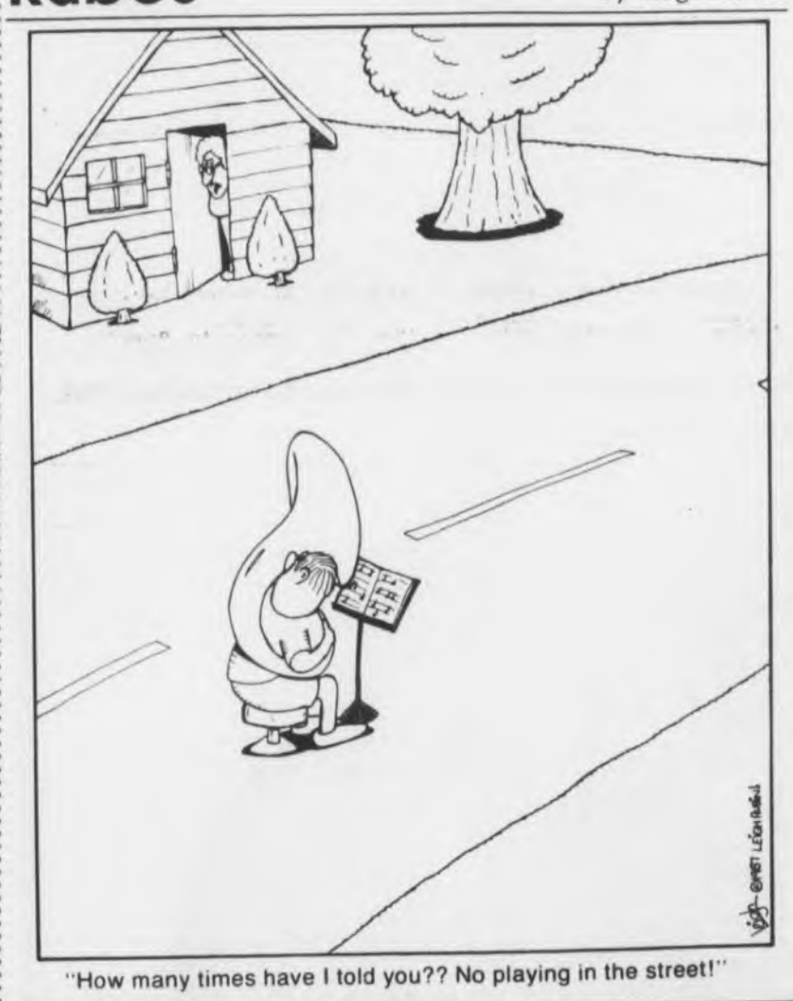
Adversity was finding America's team in bizarre ways. On Thursday, that was Fletcher's department.

Fletcher broke the small bone in the lower part of her right leg when she collided with a volunteer during training, and now she's out of the Games.

"I came down the training hill, and you have to cut over a cat-crossing to meet up with the chair lift," Fletcher said. "A man came across the exit. We tried to avoid each other. He went one way. I went one way. He went the other way. I went the other way.

"It was like hitting a tree."

The women's downhill was postponed until today by wind and blowing snow that chased Swiss skier Brigitte Oertli, the only starter, right off the mountain.



Wind also messed up the ski jumping schedule, where Matti Nykanen, the "Flying Finn," was trying to become the Olympics' first double-jumping gold medalist. The 90-meter team jumping was postponed until Wednesday.

Nykanen, who already won the 70-meter individual gold, will next take up the challenge Saturday in the 90-meter individual event, which he won four years ago.

In hockey, Poland defeated France 6-2.

tiated a special program called K-State Cares to help retain new students.

This program directs college ambassadors to call freshman the fourth or fifth week into the semester and ask if there is anything they can do to help them be more successful students, Bosco said.

Joe Karlin, junior in finance and accounting and a business ambassador, participated in the program by spending an evening calling freshman in his department.

The students were very receptive to the calls and appreciated the interest the University was showing in them, Karlin said.

"It was important to work with the large (incoming) class through the new freshman orientation program to ensure they were doing well," Bosco said.

With the enrollment issue so important to the University, he said a selective admissions policy must also be regarded as something affecting enrollment.

Under the current selective admissions proposal, Bosco said only 70 percent of K-State's incoming freshman would have qualified for admission.

Probably the worst drawback of the selective admissions program will be responding to the late bloomer, he said, those who decide during their junior year that they want to go to one of the state's universities.

For the high school students who have not taken the required courses and who decide during their junior year that they want to go to a regents institution, they will have to look elsewhere to continue their education, Bosco said.

Because K-State offers so much through its College of Agriculture, he said it is important to "pay attention to the ramifications of policies on our rural constituencies."

Bosco said he does not want the ag-oriented student to be denied admission to the University because of a limited high school curriculum.

"Kansas is an ag state first and foremost," he said. "K-State is popular in the urban areas, but we are also popular across the state."

"We are not regional or urban directed; we have a statewide mission," Bosco said. "That is what makes K-State unique."

mington, Del.

"The campaign has lowered its flag but the crusade continues to march," said the former governor and congressman. He said his ideas are right for the country and "they're coming to America sooner or later."

Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee, hoping to emerge as the Democratic front-runner after Super Tuesday, said his rivals had taken positions that were out of the mainstream, and added he was the one who could lead the Democrats to victory in 1988.

"Dick Gephardt, for example, has changed one position after another. ... Jesse Jackson hasn't had a single day of experience in government. Mike Dukakis hasn't had a single day's experience in foreign policy. We're going to lay it on the line in this campaign, and the next 19 days are going to be very interesting," he said.

Dukakis, who won the New Hampshire primary on Tuesday and is aiming for a victory next week in Minnesota, threw his support behind union paperworkers on strike in Maine.

"I'm not here to make a campaign speech," he said after he signed a proclamation supporting the United Paperworkers International Union. "But I wouldn't object to any support," he told two dozen strikers who were visiting the Massachusetts statehouse in Boston.

Illinois Sen. Paul Simon was the lone Democrat to skip the Texas debate. But he hedged on his earlier decision to quit the race if he couldn't win either the South Dakota primary or Minnesota caucuses next week.

On Wednesday, Simon said he'd quit next week if he couldn't come in first in one of those two states, but he and aides said he was raising enough money to stay the course at least through the 20 Super Tuesday primary and caucus contests on March 8.

ings I received from this show was a feeling of "intrusion." I found myself watching a family dealing with very private and personal experiences, which are seldom the subject of public discussion.

Technically, the show was very tight. Lighting added a nice surrealistic dimension to the show, and helped the audience members feel as though they were spending a quiet evening at the beach, the sky above speckled with stars.

The sound for this show was probably the best I have heard in Nichols Theatre. A subtle splashing of waves and calling of gulls filled the theater with images of the coast.

In evaluating the individual acting performances, the show must be considered in two sections. The first act of the show did not communicate the same magic and emotion that was contained in Act 2.

Act 1 started out with an uncomfortable amount of intensity. In the first few moments of the show, the audience was presented with a picture of David which had us questioning his sanity. Although this family reunion is not meant to be a time of fun and frolic, the opening minutes of the production cast an unnecessary gloom over the evening, which was not shaken until the second act.

Act 2 provided the audience with the images which made the show a success. The character of David, played by Dwight Tolar, junior in applied music, became a much more likable individual. David became someone the audience could empathize with rather than resent.

Nancy Zenger, junior in speech, and Ellen Sinclair, junior in pre-med, added a very pleasant innocence to the production. Nancy portrays Cindy accurately: as a child masquerading in the body of an adult.

Ellen Sinclair was very believable as an insightful 16-year-old Rachel, although some contradiction existed between Rachel's age and some of the "Daddies and Mommies" contained in her dialogue. I consider this to be a script problem, though, rather than a problem of interpretation.

Beth Sherby, senior in theater, fills the role of Kevin with her usual professional intensity. It was nice to see Kevin shaded with a little bit of nervous insecurity.

Deb Pierce, graduate in theater, develops the character of Esther into a strong, sometimes cold, but very caring individual. Her consistency is a nice anchor for the rest of the cast.

The character of Paul, played by Don Olsen, senior in theater, was a surprise. After reading the script, I viewed Paul as a one-dimensional joker, but Olsen gives the character some real substance. Don provides the audience with a lightness that is invaluable to the production.

Tamara Grothaus, sophomore in music, played the part of Gillian with authority. At first, Gillian took on the appearance of a shallow memory, but when Gillian and David confront one another, the characters become complete.

"To Gillian, on her 37th Birthday" is directed by Kate Anderson, associate professor of speech, and was written by Michael Brady.

The play is at 8 tonight and Saturday at Nichols Theatre.

Eligibility formula changed

Few students to be affected

By Greg Vogel
Collegian Reporter

The formula for determining independent students' eligibility for federal financial aid has been changed for the next academic year.

The formula, called Congressional Methodology, is not expected to affect many students receiving aid, said Christine Crenshaw, associate director of student financial assistance.

"Congressional Methodology is the legislatively mandated formula for determining student eligibility for financial aid," she said.

Until the 1986 re-authorization of the Education Act of 1965, Uniform Methodology was the formula used by nearly all colleges to determine student eligibility, Crenshaw said.

Most provisions of the re-authorization act went into effect during the 1987-88 academic year, but Congressional Methodology will go into effect for the 1988-89 academic year, she said.

Uniform Methodology was revised under Congressional Methodology, with some significant changes.

Under the prior methodology, independent students were determined eligible for financial aid based on what they expected to earn during the summer and school year for which they were being awarded aid, Crenshaw said.

One of the major changes with the new methodology for most individuals seeking aid, with the exception of one minor group, is that students' earnings from the prior year (the base-year earnings) will determine eligibility.

The parents' base-year earnings have always been used, but this is the first time students' base-year earnings will also be used to determine eligibility, Crenshaw said.

"Now, through Congressional Methodology, the formula will look at what's earned the previous year, instead of what the student expects to earn," she said.

"So for students who lay out a year, they better be saving, because it is assumed they are saving about 70 percent of what they are earning," Crenshaw said.

Swaggart admits sins, steps down

By The Associated Press

BATON ROUGE, La. — Television evangelist Jimmy Swaggart, who reportedly was photographed with a prostitute, confessed Sunday that he had sinned and said he would stop preaching until church officials complete an investigation.

"I do not plan in any way to whitewash my sin or call it a mistake," he told his tearful but apparently forgiving congregation. "I call it a sin."

The Assemblies of God denomination has been investigating Swaggart, reportedly for allegations of sexual misconduct, and a meeting with district officials was set for today.

But church leaders struck a forgiving tone, with one saying the evangelist had shown "true humility," and another minister said the door was open for Swaggart to remain in the ministry.

"I will step out of this pulpit for an undetermined, indeterminate period of time," Swaggart said. "We will leave that in the hands of the Lord."

Swaggart, who a year ago had scathingly denounced fellow Assemblies of God evangelist Jim Bakker for committing adultery, did not describe his misconduct.

"Every time I have stood before a congregation, before these television cameras, I have met and faced the issues head on. I have never skirted or sidestepped unpleasantries," he said. "I can do no less this morning."

Forest H. Hall, secretary-treasurer of the Louisiana District of the Assemblies of God, told the 7,500 people at Swaggart's sprawling family worship center that the evangelist had confessed to church officials and to his family.

"He confessed to specific incidents of moral failure," said Hall. "In the opinion of the officers of the Louisiana District, he has shown true humility and repentance and has not tried to blame anyone else for his failure."

District church officials would determine "appropriate disciplinary procedures after hearing all the facts and circumstances," Hall said.

Unlike Swaggart's apparent cooperation, officials of the denomination had said last year that Bakker shunned a church inquiry in his case when he was defrocked and chose not to exercise his right to appeal.

Swaggart was expected to be in Alexandria on Monday to meet with

House Committee gives more to MOE

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

The Appropriations Committee of the Kansas House of Representatives has approved $1.7 million more for the Margin of Excellence program Gov. Mike Hayden recommended in his 1988 budget proposal.

The funds are to eliminate inequities between salaries of teaching and non-teaching faculty, said House Majority Leader Joe Knopp, R-Manhattan.

Hayden had recommended that salary increases for teaching faculty be higher than increases for non-teaching faculty.

Knopp spoke Saturday at the bi-weekly Manhattan Chamber of Commerce Eggs and Issues Breakfast in the University Inn.

Knopp said he expected MOE to be passed by the Legislature.

Rep. Edward Rolfs, R-Junction City and chairman of the House Taxation Committee, explained aspects of the state income tax reform under consideration by legislators.

"We are dealing with tradeoffs. If the entire windfall was returned, versus the $21 million proposed by Governor Hayden, there would be cuts in programs like education and transportation and increases in property taxes," he said.

Rolfs said the committee approved by a one-vote margin an income tax reform program that is similar to the program recommended by the governor's task force on tax reform.

The governor's task force examined how to best reform Kansas' tax system and to deal with the windfall, he said.

The windfall occurred as a result of the federal tax reform in 1986 which broadened the base of what was taxable but lowered the tax rate, he said.

"While Kansas also broadened its tax base, the same old tax rates remained on the books so all of us

Schultz, Shevardnadze confer

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze claimed "good progress" Sunday in daylong talks on arms control, human rights and regional conflicts.

But a Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman sharply criticized the U.S. nuclear rebuilding program in Western Europe.

The spokesman, Gennady Gerasimov, said the modernization program in NATO countries clashed with the new U.S.-Soviet treaty to scrap intermediate-range missiles.

Gerasimov said building new missiles with a range less than 315 miles was "incompatible with the strengthening of European security."

The U.S. State Department spokesman, Charles E. Redman, dissociated the U.S. government from the Soviet criticism.

Otherwise, both sides gave extremely upbeat appraisals of the Shultz-Shevardnadze talks, he said.

"They both agreed without any hesitation whatsoever that the atmosphere was excellent throughout the day, that they were businesslike, and they both agreed we made good progress across the range of issues," Redman said.

Shultz took an hour off to meet with noted Soviet dissident Andrei D. Sakharov, who wished him well in pressing for human rights reforms. Shultz called the 1975 Nobel Peace Prize winner "an inspiration" and a "model and symbol" to the world.

They met in Sakharov's seventh-floor apartment. Sakharov said serious Soviet reforms were under way but the country had not made enough progress yet on human rights or on Afghanistan.

He was sent into internal exile in Gorky for almost seven years in 1980 for speaking out against the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan.

The treaty to ban U.S. and Soviet missiles ranging from 315 to 3,125 miles was signed by President Reagan and Mikhail S. Gorbachev at their summit meeting in December in Washington. The treaty is now before the U.S. Senate and the Supreme Soviet for approval.

Gerasimov said the Soviets were eager to see the treaty placed in force and had begun withdrawing short-range missiles from East Germany and Czechoslovakia. But he rejected assertions by U.S. officials that the Soviets were holding back on a date for the next summit meeting until the treaty was approved.

"We never stated directly that there is some sort of link," the Soviet spokesman said.

Reagan and Gorbachev agreed to meet in Moscow but did not set a date. Redman said the two sides were considering "the general time frame of mid-May or early June."

Redman said holding a summit did not

American firm to use Soviet space station

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A U.S. aerospace consulting firm has signed a multiyear agreement to put commercial scientific projects aboard the Soviet space station in the first private American deal with the Soviet space agency.

Payload Systems Inc. of Wellsley, Mass., in an enterprise approved by the Commerce Department, will grow protein crystals for U.S. industry with the help of a Soviet cosmonaut who will be given only minimal information about the projects, said Anthony Arrott, company research and development director.

Payload Systems received a two-year government license to contract with the Soviets for protein crystallization production experiments aboard the Soviet space station Mir, which is already in orbit, Arrott said in a telephone interview Sunday.

"It's a multiflight, multiyear agreement beginning in 1989," he said, adding that part of the agreement includes nondisclosure of the amount to be paid to the Soviets who reportedly have offered to carry Western experiments for between $10,000 and $15,000 a kilogram.

Arrott said the agreement was signed with the Soviet Union's agency for international trade agreements, Licensintorg. The civilian space agency, Glavkosmos, oversees the space station.

66 die in Brazilian rainstorm

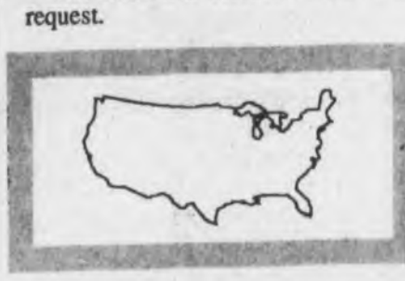
RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil — Rescuers used surfboards to reach crumbled homes and sunken cars during a third day of pounding rains Sunday, but held out little hope for 30 nursing home patients buried beneath a massive mudslide.

At least 66 people died and 11,000 were left homeless by the violent storms since Friday, which turned streets into raging torrents, threw cars like toys and carried ramshackle homes roaring down hillsides, civil defense officials said.

Authorities estimated 50,000 people eventually may have to be relocated. Throughout the city, army trucks and volunteers helped transport slum dwellers from precarious hillside homes to temporary shelters in schools, churches and public buildings.

In some cases, people refused to leave their partially destroyed homes, preferring to risk being crushed beneath their homes than leave their worldly possessions.

Nigerian AIDS patient dies



LAGOS, Nigeria — The last reported AIDS patient in Nigeria has died, a newspaper said Sunday.

Mahammadu Debas, a 42-year-old tailor from Gambia, died Friday, the Vanguard newspaper said. His death brought to 12 the number of people who have died of acquired immune defiency syndrome in Nigeria.

The newspaper said Debas was the last known AIDS victim in the country. Nigeria reported its first AIDS case only eight months ago.

Debas' case became a controversy in Nigeria when he was forcibly hospitalized by health authorities last August for five months. Several doctors disputed the AIDS diagnosis.

The man was released from a hospital last month at his own request.

Arturo Mata Gutierrez was pronounced dead at the San Fernando Community Hospital early Saturday, police Sgt. Michael Harvey said.

Gutierrez had accompanied his friends to the Copa Grenada bar Friday and became separated from them during closing time, Harvey said. When they found him outside, he said, they didn't notice he was bleeding.

CBS show falls on its 'Face'

WASHINGTON — The CBS affiliate in the Washington area, WUSA-TV, mistakenly began its "Face The Nation" broadcast Sunday with last week's preview of the New Hampshire primary.

Commentator Lesley Stahl started the show with, "Welcome to 'Face The Nation,' this is Lesley Stahl in New Hampshire," and spoke of what would happen in last Tuesday's primary.

The error was not detected until more than five minutes into the show.

At that point, Republican presidential candidate Pat Robertson was talking about prophecies concerning the "forces of evil" in the world and an embattled Israel. The tape was abruptly cut, and the show picked up with Stahl in mid-sentence asking Israeli Prime Minister Yitzak Rabin about Israeli forces being out of control in the West Bank.

Mistress: JFK met mob boss

NEW YORK — A California woman says John F. Kennedy asked her to arrange meetings between him and Chicago mob boss Sam Giancana while she and Kennedy were having an affair in 1960-61.

In an interview published in People magazine, Judith Campbell Exner says she witnessed at least one of the 10 Kennedy-Giancana meetings and repeatedly carried envelopes between Kennedy, Giancana and another mobster.

Exner, who in 1975 denied being a conduit between Kennedy and mobsters when she told of her affair with the president, said she lied then to protect herself, telling the Senate intelligence committee Kennedy was unaware of her links to Giancana.

"If I'd told the truth, I'd have been killed," she said in the interview. "I kept my secret out of fear."

Exner said she was revealing the Kennedy-Giancana link because she suffers from terminal cancer and wants "to put my life in order so that I may die peacefully."

Contractor shares dump costs

LITTLE ROCK — A contractor and several utilities are to share the estimated $40.5 million cost of building a low-level nuclear waste dump meant to serve the five states of the Central Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Compact.

Last December, representatives from the compact chose Nebraska as the host state for the site. The member states of the compact are Arkansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Kansas.

The estimated $10.1 million tab for prelicensing costs will be shared by the utilities in the five states generating low-level nuclear waste. The utilities are: Arkansas Power and Light; Omaha Power District; Wolf Creek Operating Corp.; Nebraska Public Power District; Gulf States Uitlites Co., Cajun Electric Power Co. and the Louisiana Power and Light Co. That money will be returned to the utilities over a 15-vear period.

The contractor, U.S. Ecology of Louisville, Ky., will pay $30.4 million in construction costs of the dump, in exchange for a 20 percent return on its investment after the dump goes into operation.

The return on the company's investment will come from disposal fees that will be almost double what nuclear facilities are now being charged at other disposal facilities.

For AP&L customers, the dump will mean about 4 cents more a month on the average $100 electric bill after 1993, when federal law says the dump must be in operation.

Hunt for missing Marine causes battle

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Iranian-backed Hezbollah extremists clashed Sunday with Shiite militiamen searching for a kidnapped U.S. Marine and declared support for his abductors.

A Hezbollah leader said he believed Lt. Col. William R. Higgins had been smuggled out of south Lebanon.

"We declare solidarity with, and full support for, the strugglers against America who confront the plots of the great Satan," said a statement from Hezbollah, or Party of God. "The demands of the Organization of the Oppressed on Earth are just."

The Organization of the Oppressed on Earth on Friday claimed responsibility for Higgins' kidnapping, charging he was a CIA spy. U.S. and U.N. officials denied the charge.

Higgins, a decorated Vietnam veteran and a one-time military assistant to former U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, heads a 76-man observer group attached to a U.N. peacekeeping force in south Lebanon. He was kidnapped on Wednesday near the ancient port city of Tyre.

Hezbollah is believed to be the umbrella organization for pro-Iranian groups holding foreign hostages in Lebanon.

Police said Hezbollah and Justice Minister Nabih Berri's mainstream Shiite Amal militia clashed in a brief firefight in the southeastern Lebanese village of Ein el-Tineh. No casualties were reported.

Hezbollah militiamen opened machine-gun fire on an Amal patrol near the village in the western sector of the Bekaa valley and the patrol fired back rocket-propelled grenades, said a police spokesman, who spoke on condition of anonymity according to regulations.

When the 30-minute clash ended and the Amal patrol left, Hezbollah gunners pounded Israel's self-designated security zone in south Lebanon with mortars, the spokesman said.

He said Israel retaliated by shelling 13 southern Shiite villages for three hours. Four civilians were wounded, police said.

Police said the clash was caused by the ongoing search for Higgins and the recent arrest of Hezbollah members linked to the kidnapping.

Ein el-Tineh, a Hezbollah stronghold, is 31 miles east of Tyre, where Hezbollah claims Amal has arrested more than 150 of its members in connection with Higgins' abduction. Amal spokesmen say only 40 fundamentalists have been detained.

The abduction prompted the U.N.'s Interim Forces In Lebanon to withdraw 20 observers from Higgin's unit to its headquarters in Naqoura, near the Israel-Lebanon border, according to Timor Goksel, spokesman for the UNIFIL.

Goksel said the observers were withdrawn both for security concerns and to protest Higgins' abduction. The rest of the observer group remained Sunday in positions overlooking Beirut's green line, which divides the city into Moslem and Christian sectors, he said.

Goksel declined to comment on reports that U.N. troops had abandoned checkpoints around Tyre.

Ten UNIFIL troops were withdrawn Thursday to Naqoura from an area close to an Amal checkpoint on the Qassmieh highway bridge north of the city. But UNIFIL troops did not withdraw from any of their own checkpoints south and east of Tyre.

UNIFIL units and Amal militiamen, aided by helicopters and dogs, continued to search for Higgins Sunday in olive and citrus groves and cave-lined valleys southeast of Tyre.

Berri has called Higgins' abduction a threat to the security of the predominantly Shiite population of south Lebanon. He said Amal was bent on defending the U.N. peacekeeping force irrespective of the nationality of its officers.

An estimated 300 detainees are believed held at Khiam, run by militiamen of the Israeli-backed South Lebanon Army.

Israelis kill two as riots continue

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Israeli soldiers killed two Arabs Sunday in clashes in the West Bank. Palestinian organizers called for stepped up protests to coincide with the visit of U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz this week.

The army said soldiers shot and killed the Arabs in separate confrontations in the West Bank city of Nablus and the Deir Ammar refugee camp. Nablus hospital officials said 17 Arabs were wounded.

The army initially reported a third Arab shot and killed in Nablus but later retracted the statement. Nablus hospital officials said the man, Ahmed Abu Salhiye, in his 50s, died of a heart attack after being overcome by tear gas.

The latest deaths brought the number of Palestinians killed by Israelis since the protests began Dec. 8 to 61, according to United Nations figures.

Officials in the Economy Ministry said the government had spent $330 million to finance the crackdown on the protests. Israel's 1988 budget is $31 billion.

Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin rejected demands that he issue specific guidelines to soldiers to curb the use of excessive force against Palestinian protesters. Rabin said during a Cabinet meeting such guidelines were useless because he could not anticipate all situations soldiers might face.

Psychologists who compiled a report for the army said that brutal behavior among troops had become widespread and that some officers were issuing illegal commands, ordering random beatings.

A leaflet distributed Sunday urged Palestinians to show "national outrage in the face of the Shultz visit." The leaflet, signed by the "United National Leadership of the Uprising," called for a week of strikes and demonstrations.

Shultz is tentatively scheduled to arrive Thursday, bringing with him a plan he hopes will reignite the stalled peace process.

The leaflet called for a day of solidarity Monday with those killed, wounded or arrested in the disturbances, a national hunger strike Tuesday, general strikes Wednesday and Thursday, demonstrations Friday and a defiance of curfews Saturday.

Shultz plans to use Jerusalem as his base for several days.

Mao wanted U.S. war, Soviet says

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Mao Tse-tung wanted the Soviet Union's help in a 1958 plan to lure U.S. troops into China's heartland where they would be attacked by nuclear weapons, Soviet President Andrei Gromyko says in his memoirs, according to a published report.

The New York Times, which received an advance copy of "Memoir," soon to be published in the Soviet Union, reported in Monday's editions that Gromyko says he rejected the Chinese proposal during a secret visit to Beijing in August 1958.

Gromyko, the Soviet foreign minister from 1957 to 1985, said he was surprised by the audacity of the plan, the Times reported.

"The scenario of war described by you cannot meet a positive response by us," Gromyko says he told Mao. "I can say this with certainty."

Gromyko, 78, wrote that Mao was anticipating an American attack on China because of tensions over the Chinese islands of Quemoy and Matsu.

Mao said Chinese forces would retreat to the heartland of China, luring American soldiers after them. Then, Mao proposed, "the Soviet Union should catch them with all its means," Gromyko wrote, according to the Times.

At the time, China was expecting to receive nuclear weapons from the Soviet Union, but the Soviets withdrew their offer in 1959. Soviet officials later accused Mao of recklessness. China exploded its own nuclear bomb in 1964.

The two-volume memoir covers nearly 50 years of Soviet diplomacy, including dealings with nine American presidents, the Times said.

Gromyko denies reports that he misled President Kennedy about the presence of Soviet missiles in Cuba during the 1962 missile crisis.

It's time that Israelis address Palestine issue

From 325 A.D. until the French Revolution, the Jews of Western Europe were segregated into ghettos, kicked out of entire countries, denied certain occupations, persecuted, beaten and murdered.

After the French Revolution, Jews were emancipated and given the opportunity to assimilate themselves into the populations of Western European nations, though anti-Semitism was still a formidable force which showed itself from time to time.

Then came the defeat of Germany in World War I. The suffering inflicted upon Germany by the Allies following the war was exploited by the Nazi Party and blamed on the Jews. For their "crimes," 6 million Jews were murdered in the death and concentration camps.

In 1948, a guilty world sought to provide the Jewish refugees from the Third Reich a homeland in the British protectorate of Palestine.

Today, some inhabitants of the land formerly called Palestine find themselves denied citizenship in the nations surrounding their homes, segregated into camps and beaten indiscriminately. Some have been killed simply because of their nationality.

They are the Christian and Moslem Arab inhabitants of the West Bank and Gaza Strip. They are the Palestinians.

In 1949, Palestine was divided between the newly created state of Israel and the kingdom of Jordan. In 1967, the West Bank of the Jordan River, including Jerusalem — the part of Jordan which had once been Palestine — became part of Israel following the Six-Day War.

The Palestinians have been discriminated against by both the Arab nations, who since 1949 have kept them in refugee camps while promising them a return to their homeland, and the Israelis, who have kept them second-class citizens in the land of their parents and grandparents.

After nearly 40 years, the Palestinaians have indicated they have had enough. For weeks, they have rioted in the West Bank.

Israel, in an attempt to maintain order, has unleashed its army, which has been trained for aggressive conventional warfare, on the rioters. At least 61 Palestinians are known to be dead from shootings and beatings by Israeli soldiers.

While Israel, like any other nation, is attempting to maintain order within the areas under its control, its actions are mistreating a symptom of the malady and allowing the disease to spread.

Since the Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty of 1979, Israel has been committed to providing for Palestinian autonomy. For almost as long, Israel has stalled negotiations intended to bring about a forum for Palestinian national self-expression.

The time has come for Israel to solve the Palestinian problem by summoning the same type of courage which enabled it to bring about a peace treaty with Egypt in 1979. The time has come for Israel to stop treating the Palestinians in the same way the Jews of Europe were treated for nearly 1,500 years.

FBI takes witch-hunt to university libraries

Read a good — or incriminating — book lately? The FBI may want to know.

That apparently was the case recently when an FBI agent asked officials at the University of Kansas Law Library to divulge information to the agent about books checked out by a certain individual. What the FBI was looking for was never made clear.

However, what was made clear was that the library refused the FBI request.

The library's refusal was justified, and the FBI's request was not. What could a person's reading material possibly tell the FBI?

Absolutely nothing. Perhaps the individual was — God forbid — expanding his or her world view on something that the FBI has deemed bad. Is that a crime? If the FBI thinks so, then perhaps it would advocate closing universities nationwide to ensure homogeneous and "appropriate" thought.

At least individuals in the Manhattan area can rest assured that local libraries have policies similar to the KU Law Library's.

The FBI should take its witch-hunt elsewhere and leave the nation's libraries out of it.

A lawless government

Speaker to address FBI actions

Commentary

JOHN EXDELL

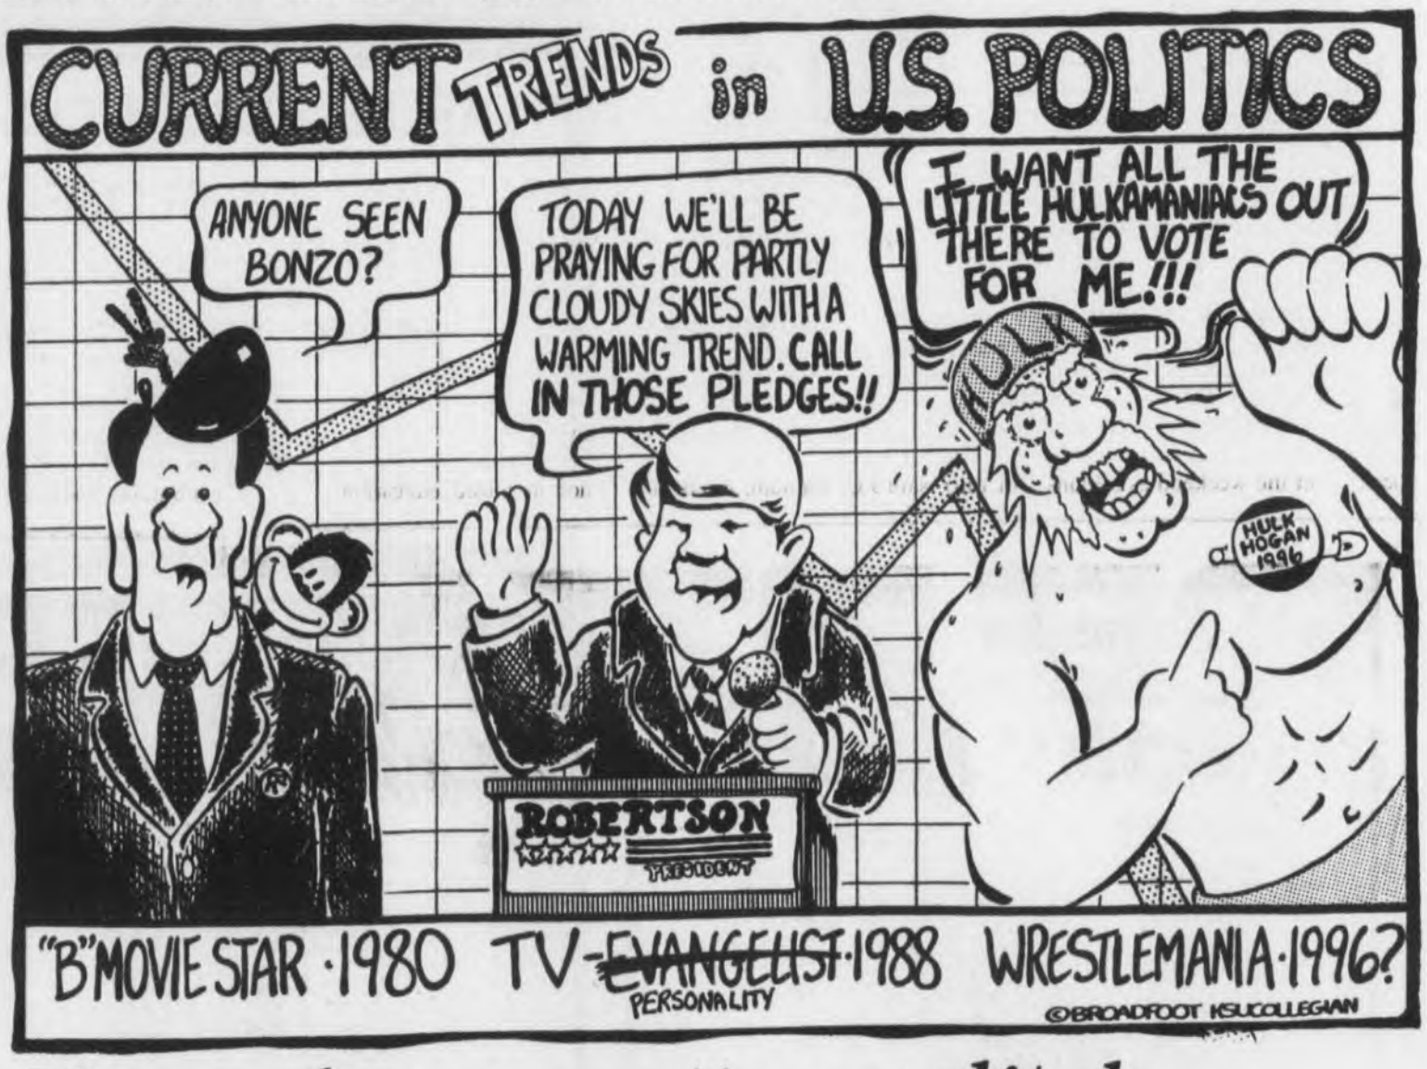
Guest Columnist

As Collegian readers now know, from 1981 until at least 1985 the FBI engaged in illegal surveillance of hundreds of groups opposed to the Reagan administration's policies in Central America. This came to light when the Center for Constitutional Rights recently released secret FBI documents obtained through the Freedom of Information Act.

We know from these documents that the bureau was active in Kansas, specifically in 1984 against a small student group at Wichita State University. Since the CCR received only 1,320 of 3,756 pages in the FBI's surveillance files, we do not yet know the full extent of the FBI's Kansas operation.

In one of the documents, however, the Kansas City office reports that it "canvassed all major university campuses." Since Manhattan and K-State have had the most active organizations in the state on Central American issues, it is very likely that the FBI was here.

This resurgence of illegal Hoover-era techniques appears to have gone well beyond mere surveillance. A former Texas FBI agent has testified to a congressional committee that he carried out wire-taps, office break-ins and the theft of organizational membership lists for the bureau (New York Times, Feb. 13, 1988). The Center for Constitutional Rights has received more than 90 reports of such incidents from anti-administration groups.



The FBI's purpose is obviously to harrass and intimidate those who oppose President Reagan's military interventions in Nicaragua and El Salvador. There may have been an even more sinister objective. We learned during the Iran-Contra hearings that the Reagan administration has formulated a plan to suspend the Constitution and declare martial law should there occur widespread public opposition to a U.S. invasion of a foreign country (Wichita Eagle-Beacon, July 5, 1987). We should not rule out the possibility that the FBI was collecting lists of those who would be jailed in the event of a U.S. invasion of Nicaragua.

This week, there is a timely opportunity for K-State students and faculty to show that they will not be cowed by their lawless government. At 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in St. Isidore's Chapel, we can hear John C. Ryan, the Illinois FBI agent recently fired for refusing orders from his superiors to investigate "terrorist" peace groups. Ryan lost his job in August of 1987, after 21 years of service to the FBI and only 10 months before he was to receive his pension.

Ryan's talk, sponsored by the Manhattan Alliance on Central America, is free and open to the public. Those who wish to support MACA and affirm their commitment to the Bill of Rights may also wish to attend the rice and beans dinner that precedes this program at 6:15 p.m. The dinner costs only $2. At this time, MACA will distribute Freedom of Information Act forms and instructions to individuals interested in getting any files the FBI may have on them personally.

Two-hundred years ago, the U.S. Constitution was ratified at the state conventions. It is therefore fitting and patriotic in this bicentennial year that we do what we can to expose FBI violations of our constitutional rights.

John Exdell is associate professor of philosophy and coordinator for the Manhattan Alliance on Central America.

If people are acting politely, then a dance must be on agenda

Commentary

MARK SCHREINER

Collegian Columnist

Dances are strange things.

The things that happen at dances are not strange, really, but they happen so rarely that they seem strange.

I am going to talk about going stag. People with dates or in mixed groups are boring to talk about because they dance all the time.

At the dance, stags sit in the back of the room. They lean way back in their chairs This lets them hide while still letting them watch everyone else.

Stags hope to find someone who will dance for a long time. But they bury this hope deep so that if it does not happen they will not be very disappointed.

People who request songs irk stags. Requested songs are always bad. If they were good, they would not have to be requested.

Dances are strange things because you have to go by looks. This is why dance rooms are dark. People look better when you cannot see them.

Dances are strange because you can judge their success by the amount of sweat on the floor.

Dances are strange because I never stop women on the sidewalk between classes and tell them my name and major while waving my body at them, but I do this at dances. And no one cares if you dance funny because other people fear that they themselves may be dancing funny.

There are three types of guys at dances. The first is the coach. While never dancing himself, the coach picks out women and then dares his buddies to ask them to dance. Coaches are good at welshing on bets and at mimicking the way you dance. Coaches say the dance was bad when it ends. When someone else says a dance was bad, it means that they did not dance.

The second type is the Joe Polka. Joe Polka just likes to dance. He has fun. At dances after weddings, he dances with cousins, aunts and grandmothers. Joe Polka can do what I can only call the twisty-dance-thing.

The third type is the average stag. Let's walk through the steps of the stag's dance.

The guy looks for a woman in his range. He wants a woman his friends will not laugh at, yet who is not so good-looking that she will turn him down. He looks for a compromise.

He wants a total stranger. How can you face a female in the hall or in class if you asked her to dance and she said "no" or only danced for one song?

Once the guy has homed in on a woman, he waits a song or two, gathering courage and seeing if she has a date who just happened to duck off to the bathroom for this song.

I offer this hint to women: If you want to get asked to dance, sit alone. It is hard asking someone in front of her friends. It is like saying, "Of the four of you, I'm only interested in this one."

Guys have the advantage because they get to pick. A guy can pick from all the women, but the woman can only pick from the guys who pick her first.

The normal way to ask a woman is to sneak up behind her, touch her arm and say "Do you want to dance?" before she can see you. Guys should ask a lot of women, and women should accept. It is only one dance. And you do not have to marry them.

Then they dance. It had better be a fast song. I do not know anyone with the guts to ask a stranger to dance a slow song.

They do not look at each other. They look at the ceiling, the floor, at other dancers. You learn to dance by copying other people. It is like a fancy dinner party where you look out of the corners of your eyes to see which fork you should use.

Maybe they try to talk. They have to use the lowest common denominator, so they exchange names — but only first names.

"What's your major?"

"Pre-vet. Yours?"

"Business."

"Oh. My roommate is a business major."

"So, what year are you? Junior? Senior?"

"Freshman."

"What do you think of the music?"

"Good" or "Bad." This answer usually shows how much fun the person is having dancing with you.

Then the song ends, and awkwardness sets in. If one says "thanks," it means he or she wants to quit and will march back to get razzed by his or her friends. If one does not want to stop, he or she will wait awkwardly to see what the other does.

If they break apart, the whole cycle starts again. If they dance, the conversation moves on to the stage of "Where are you from?"

Usually one or two songs will do it. It can last longer, but it does not really matter. A fun time can be had by all without anyone getting picked up.

Dances are strange because people are nice to each other for no good reason. This is not really strange — it just does not happen all the time.

Nugent outplays Kiss at concert

By Judd Annis
Collegian Reviewer

Kansas City's Municipal Auditorium was the site Saturday night of a concert featuring Kiss and Ted Nugent, two of the founders of high-powered arena rock.

Nugent, billed as the opening act, quickly won over the capacity crowd with favorites like "Cat Scratch Fever," "Just What the Doctor Ordered" and "Free for All."

Cramped onto a tiny stage in front of Kiss's equipment, the Detroit rocker opened his act with "Motor City Madhouse" and had the crowd in a frenzy by the time he played "Dog Eat Dog," his best song of the night.

New material off Nugent's latest album was well received, but it was clear that he had come to play the songs that had made him legendary.

Concert Review

Shirtless, wearing black leather pants with a raccoon tail pinned to his posterior, Nugent told the crowd, "It's only February — maybe I'll come back and play for you all night, Kansas City," hinting that a headline concert might be around the corner.

Next to hit the stage was Kiss, the pioneers of stage theatrics and costume, now playing without the face paint and without two of the original members.

With a giant, 35-foot KISS sign behind a tilted horseshoe-shaped stage, lead singer, guitarist and founder Paul Stanley led the group through an unbalanced set of old and new songs, including "Love Gun," "Fits Like A Glove" and "Crazy Nights."

The set also contained crowd favorites "Heaven's On Fire," "Lick It Up" and the group's current MTV smash, "Reason to Live."

Kiss ended the show with one encore, playing "Tears are Falling" and its trademark, "Detroit Rock City."

Although Nugent essentially received warm-up-band status, his show contained the sincerity and entertainment that most of the audience came to see, proving him to be a musician who loves being back on stage.

Kiss' message has been diluted since the exit of co-founders Ace Frehley and Peter Cris, and now the band seems more concerned about top twenty lists than in giving its fans a show worth the $16.50 ticket price.

Nugent, who continues to prove to his fans that insanity is in style, walked away with the honors, leaving little doubt as to whether he's still in demand.

Musical depicts lives of American workers

By Brad Atchison
Collegian Reviewer

First it was mowing lawns, babysitting, delivering newspapers. Later it was selling, teaching, driving a truck. Whatever it was, or whatever it is, working is one of those things that just about everyone can relate to.

"Working," a musical adaptation of Studs Terkel's critically acclaimed book of the same name, opened over the weekend as a Manhattan Civic Theatre production.

"Working" is a close look at people, and the jobs that make them who they are. The show is a collage of scenes depicting the life of the "American Worker."

From newsboy to hustler, from migrant worker to teacher, "Working" tells us a story which most of us are familiar with.

"Well, so far the show has been a lot of work, but it has also been a lot of fun," said J.C. Harman, senior in theater. "The most difficult part about the show was trying to get all of the cast to rehearsal on the same night. Most of us have outside responsibilities."

Harmon's biggest responsibility, outside of rehearsals, is attending classes at K-State. The same holds true for at least two other members of the production. Cast member Paul Craig is a junior in music/theater, and musical director Patty Russell is a senior in music education.

Russell has been enjoying "Working," even in the rehearsal stages.

"This show has a very nice blend of music and drama which a lot of musicals just don't have," Russell said.

As musical director, Russell might have the toughest assignment of anyone in the cast.

"It has been a real challenge," Russell said. "Some of the people in the cast have never had any type of musical training, but everyone has worked hard and made great improvement."

"Working" is not a well-known musical, but its appeal should be very broad.

"It has been said that "Working" is a show for anybody who has ever punched a cow, a clock or their supervisor," said David Atchison, director of this Civic Theatre production. "This show is intended to make people feel something — remember a good job, or a bad job, or the first time you ever had to get up in the morning and go to work."

One of the most interesting aspects of this production of "Working" can be found in the relationship cast members have with their "real life" jobs.

When Jo Richards is not playing a school teacher on stage, she is teaching kindergarten at the K-State Child Care Cooperative.

"People do Civic Theatre to maintain their mental health," she said."

Lady Cats fall to Kansas in physical battle, 74-58

Madsen goes down with injury

By Chase Clark
Sports Writer

Ice hockey is usually the sport associated with bumps, crashing bodies, fist fights, cheap shots, broken bones, bruises and bench-clearing brawls.

Saturday night in Ahearn Field House, it appeared the University of Kansas women's basketball team may be modeling itself after hockey teams — but without the fights and bench-clearing brawls — as it muscled its way to a 74-58 victory over a crippled Lady Cat squad.

Kristie Bahner, a leader inside of late for K-State, has mononucleosis and missed Saturday's game. It is unknown when Bahner will be able to resume playing.

But the deciding blow to K-State came at the 15:41 mark in the second half under the Lady Jayhawks' basket. While attempting to get a rebound, Janet Madsen, was pushed to the floor, hitting hard on her right knee. Madsen was unable to walk without assistance and was taken to the locker room for treatment.

Preliminary examinations showed swelling, but K-State coach Matilda Mossman said Madsen was in pain and further examinations would be needed before the extent of the injury is known.

"I think after Janet was injured, the reaction would have been to bear down and work harder, but we let her going down affect us too much," Mossman said. "We lost our concentration and got frustrated.

"I know I certainly let it affect me. But when one of my kids goes down, I'm going to be right there behind her," she added. "There's no excuse for (one of my players going down) happening."

Neither Mossman nor the majority of the 1,112 spectators were pleased with the officials lack of controlling the aggressive play displayed on the court throughout the game.

"It's a little amazing to me that a team can be that active and only get four fouls called in 20 minutes of basketball," Mossman said referring to KU's second half. "But that's the way it goes."

"This conference is physical," said Kansas coach Marian Washington. "There's nobody in this conference that's more physical than any other team. Last year, that's all I heard was complaints about being physical.

"I think K-State is a fine ball club. When a team is competitive like them, it's going to be physical," she added.

Kansas took an early 4-0 lead, but the Lady Cats were able to fight back and take an 8-4 lead, which didn't last long.

Kansas built up a 15-point lead, 30-15, with 8:07 left in the half, before K-State's Stephanie Lane came off the bench and scored 10 points in the remainder of the half. Lane's effort enabled the Lady Cats to pull within seven points, 40-33, at halftime.

"Stephanie did a very good job," Mossman said. "Of course, it shows up offensively, but defensively she did a very good job on Deborah Richardson inside."

K-State stayed within five to seven points early in the second half and was controlling the boards until the 10:29 mark of the game, when Kansas' Sandy Shaw hit her third 3-pointer of the evening to give the Lady Jayhawks a 51-41 edge.

From then on, it was all KU, as the Lady Jayhawks built a 19-point lead late in the second stanza before winning by 16, 74-58.

The Lady Cats have been in an offensive slump for several games and are shooting only 42 percent for the season from the field. Against Kansas, the Lady Cats connected on 22 of 63 field goals (35 percent), while Kansas shot for 30-58 from the field (52 percent).

"I think with Janet going down it affected our concentration, and we didn't shoot very well," Mossman said. "We played good defense on our end, but Kansas shot the ball extremely well. We did not shoot the ball very well and that's all it boils down to."

Diana Miller led K-State on both ends of the floor with 14 points and eight rebounds. Nadira Hazim, Stephanie Lane and Rita Matteucci scored 12 points each. Madsen netted six points and Stacey Boyle collected two points to round out K-State's scoring.

Shaw led the Lady Jawhawks on offense with 20 points and six rebounds. Lisa Dougherty collected 14 points, and Lisa Baker netted 12 points and grabbed six caroms.

Lady Cat Amy Davidson battles for a rebound against University of Kansas player Sandy Shaw on Saturday evening in Ahearn Field House. K-State ended up losing the contest 74-58 in front of a crowd of 1,112.

Brett's training regimen preparation for banner year

There are very few individuals in major league baseball who can take a team on their back and all but single-handedly carry it to greatness.

Just in case you've forgotten, one of those individuals makes his summer home a few miles east on I-70 in Kansas City. His name is George Brett.

Brett has had two consecutive "off" years, hitting only .290 in each of the past two campaigns as the Royals have fallen from World Champions in 1985 to struggling contenders in each of the past two seasons.

Brett, however, made a change in how he spent his off-season following the 1987 campaign, a season that saw Brett battle knee and rib cage injuries and a season that saw the Royals struggle to keep pace with the Minnesota Twins in the American League's Western Division, once Kansas City's own private sphere of dominance.

Brett, hoping to repeat his performance of 1985, when he hit .335, belted 30 home runs, and had 112 runs batted in while leading the Royals to their first World Series championship, repeated his much-publicized off-season training regimen of 1984 during the months following the 1987 season.

Brett's off-season workouts included running, swimming, bicycling and weightlifting. Kansas City television stations and area newspapers charted his progress, building hopes in the area that Brett could return to form and carry the Royals to yet another title.

If anyone can do just that, it's Brett.

Despite two consecutive inconsistent seasons, this is the same George Brett that hit .333 in 1976, .312 in 1977, .329 in 1979, an amazing .390 in 1980 and the aforementioned .335 in 1985. In four of those five seasons, the Royals won their division, and in two of those years the Royals went to the World Series.

Brett's move to first base last season should also help him increase his durability. The wear and tear on the body of a starting third baseman in the majors is tremendous, and playing first base should help Brett avoid the "freak" injuries that have haunted him in several of the last few seasons.

The recent signing of Steve Balboni should also help Brett in several ways probably not readily apparent. With the return of Balboni, the Royals will have a proven home run bat in the lineup on at least a platoon basis, and Brett won't have to be looked upon as the only Royal to produce the long ball on a consistent basis.

With Willie Wilson and Kevin Seitzer hitting in front of him and Danny Tartabull, Balboni and Frank White hitting right behind him, Brett could post some fairly impressive numbers if he concentrates on making contact and driving the ball like he's capable of doing.

Brett has said in past seasons that if he concentrates on driving through the ball, the power will come. On this Royals team, Brett shouldn't have to worry about providing all of the offensive punch. If Brett just takes care of business, the rest will likely fall into place.

Having John Wathan as Kansas City's manager should also help Brett. Brett is an intensely loyal man, and Wathan, as one of Brett's former teammates and best friends, will bring out that loyalty in Brett like probably no one else could. Never wanting to let a friend down will drive Brett nearly as much as his own desire to once again be considered one of the best in the game.

Kansas City, with Wathan as manager, will likely steal bases, hit and run, bunt and gamble a great deal more than the Royals have in recent years.

Brett, who had his best years in the late '70s when the Royals did these things better than any team in the game, will thrive in this type of attack if he can avoid injury while trying to break up a double play or something similar to that.

If Brett can make it through spring training, April and May relatively healthy, look for him to turn up the heat in June through October. If he does, look for the Royals to nip an improved Oakland club and a tough Minnesota team for the title.

Brett holds the key to Kansas City's success in 1988, and it's a key he hopes will start a machine as finely tuned as it's been since 1985 — his own body.

Arizona, Duke win in OT; Kentucky loses

Top 20 teams escape weekend of close calls

By The Associated Press

The Temple Owls and Purdue Boilermakers lived up to their billing as nation's top-ranked basketball teams Sunday.

No. 1 Temple did it the hard way, coming from behind in the second half on the road at Chapel Hill and routing No. 5 North Carolina 83-66. The second-ranked Boilermakers beat visting Indiana, 95-85.

In another game on Sunday, host Missouri, ranked No. 15, defeated Oklahoma State, 92-70.

Mike Vreeswyk scored 26 points, including five 3-point goals, to lead Temple, 22-1.

In Top Ten games Saturday, No. 3 Arizona beat UCLA 78-76 in overtime, No. 4 Oklahoma defeated New Mexico 120-100, No. 6 Duke outlasted Kansas 74-70 in overtime, No. 7 Brigham Young edged Hawaii 72-70, No. 8 Pittsburgh downed No. 18 Georgetown 70-65 after a brawl ended the game with four seconds left, and Florida beat No. 9 Kentucky 83-76.

No. 11 Nevada-Las Vegas defeated San Jose State 85-68, No. 12 Syracuse nipped Connecticut 73-71, No. 13 Iowa beat Minnesota 107-86, Georgia Tech downed No. 14 North Carolina State 87-84, No. 16 Vanderbilt tripped Georgia 77-71, No. 17 Bradley stopped Creighton 78-71 in overtime, No. 19 Wyoming downed Colorado State 57-50 and Loyola (Calif.) defeated Pepperdine 142-127 to clinch its first West Coast Athletic Conference title in 27 years.

At Columbia, S.C., a brawl in Louisville's 98-88 double-overtime victory resulted in the ejection of South Carolina Coach George Felton.

No. 2 Purdue 95, Indiana 85

Todd Mitchell scored 21 of his 24 points in the second half and Troy Lewis had 22 points and a career-high 14 assists as Purdue retained possession of first place in the Big Ten Conference.

Melvin McCants added a career-high 21 points for Purdue, 22-2, 11-1. Keith Smart scored 23 points and Jay Edwards 20 for Indiana, 15-18, 7-6.

No. 3 Arizona 78, UCLA 76, OT

Sean Elliott scored 24 points, including a game-tying jumper with three seconds left in regulation. The Wildcats, 25-2 and 14-1, gained their fifth straight win and their second victory at the Bruins' Pauley Pavilion in 14 games.

No. 5 North Carolina 74, Maryland 73

Reid scored 21 points, 16 in the second half as the Tar Heels extended their string of consecutive 20-win seasons to 18 Saturday. Derrick Lewis and Brian Williams led Maryland with 14 points apiece.

No. 7 Brigham Young 72, Hawaii 70

Jeff Chatman scored 22 points and Michael Smith had all of his 17 points in the second half as Brigham Young was hard-pressed in raising its record to 21-2, 10-1 in the Western Athletic Conference. Reggie Cross scored 19 points and David Halums added 18 for Hawaii, 2-21, 1-11.

No. 8 Pittsburgh 70, No. 18 Georgetown 65

It was the first win by Pitt, the Big East leader, in its last six games against Georgetown and only the second in 11. But the Hoyas didn't go down without a fight — literally.

The fight started between Georgetown's Perry McDonald and Pitt's Jerome Lane, then spread to other players. Hoyas Coach John Thompson took his players off the court to end the game, giving Pitt 19-3, 9-3 records.

Florida 83, No. 9 Kentucky 76

Vernon Maxwell recorded his 100th consecutive double-figure game, scoring 32 points for Florida, 19-8. Livingston Chatman added 18 and Dwayne Schintzius 13. Kentucky was led by Rex Chapman's 24 points.

With three games remaining, Kentucky is tied with Vanderbilt at 10-5 in the Southeastern Conference race.

No. 11 Nevada-Las Vegas 85, San Jose St. 68

Gerald Paddio scored 23 points and Jarvis Basnight has 20 points and 11 rebounds for UNLV, 23-3 and 12-2 in the Pacific Coast Athletic Association.

It was the seventh straight loss for San Jose State, which got 19 points from Ricky Berry.

No. 12 Syracuse 73, Connecticut 71

Steven Thompson stole an inbounds pass and drove from midcourt for a dunk with four seconds left to give Syracuse, a 20-6, 9-4 mark. The Orange trailed three times in the final two minutes. Sherman Douglas scored 18 points for Syracuse and Cliff Robinson had 26 for Connecticut in the Big East game.

No. 13 Iowa 107, Minnesota 86

Jeff Moe and Roy Marble each scored 24 points for the Iowa, which shot 64 percent from the field and connected on 25-of-28 from the foul line.

Moe hit six of seven 3-pointers and 6-of-6 free throws. Iowa is 18-4 overall, 8-4 in the Big Ten.

Georgia Tech 87, No. 14 North Carolina St. 84

Duane Ferrell and Tom Hammonds each scored 28 points as Georgia Tech, 19-6 and 6-4 in the ACC withstood N.C. State's second-half comeback.

No. 16 Vanderbilt 77, Georgia 71

Vanderbilt, led by Will Perdue's 17 points, scored its first win at Georgia in 11 years and broke the Bulldogs' 15-game home court winning streak.

The Commodores overcame a nine-point deficit early in the second half and took the lead for good, 66-65, on Frank Kornet's layup with 5:20 left.

No. 17 Bradley 78, Illinois St. 71, OT

Hersey Hawkins, the NCAA's top scorer, scored 34 points, including nine in overtime.

No surprises in weekend Big Eight games

By The Associated Press

Oklahoma appears to be on its way to uncontested conference championship

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — With four league games remaining, it seems most unlikely that anybody but Oklahoma will be crowned Big Eight basketball champion this season. At 9-1, the Sooners enjoy a two-game advantage over 7-3 Kansas State and a three-game bulge over the defending champion Missouri Tigers, who went to 6-4 Sunday with a 92-70 conquest of Oklahoma State.

In another rare Sunday showdown, Nebraska handed last-place Colorado a 75-67 whipping in Lincoln, Neb.

"It's just going to be very, very tough to catch Oklahoma," said K-State coach Lon Kruger. "We'll need help from somebody."

The fourth-ranked Sooners ran their overall record to 24-2 Saturday with a 120-100 pelting of New Mexico. In the Big Eight's other Saturday game, No. 6 Duke overcame a 15-point deficit early in the first half and beat Kansas 74-70 in overtime. Kansas State had the weekend off and hosts Northern Illinois Monday night.

Saturday's loss dropped the Jayhawks, 6-4 in the Big Eight, to 17-9 overall. Kansas' 1987 all-American Danny Manning scored 31 points and had 12 rebounds in the losing cause on national television, no doubt enhancing his chances to become national player of the year. But the Jayhawks would also seem in danger of being the first team since LSU to have the national player-of-the-year and not get him to the NCAA Tournament. The late Pete Maravich was voted the nation's best player in 1970. But LSU did not make the NCAA Tourney, which then included only 32 teams.

Slashing New Mexico gave the Sooners their 10th straight victory and represented the eleventh time in 12 home games the basket-happy Sooners have exceeded 100 points. Center Stacey King, one of the Big Eight's brightest stories this year, scored 31 points, had eight rebounds and three blocked shots. Ironically, King almost signed with New Mexico before opting instead for Oklahoma.

"I can't believe how much he's improved," said New Mexico Coach Gary Colson. "I thought he'd be good. But he's gone from good to bordering on great."

"I just wanted to show Coach Colson I could play and I would have been an addition to his team," King said. Oklahoma led by as many as 26 down the stretch.

"It was a tough game to prepare for and I'm sure New Mexico had the same problem since we were both out of conference," said Oklahoma Coach Billy Tubbs. "It was kind of an unusual feeling."

'Cats look to end losing skid tonight

By Jenny Chaulk
Sports Editor

Things don't get any easier as the end of a basketball season rolls around, as K-State's men's basketball team can attest to. The Wildcats, 15-7 overall and 7-3 in Big Eight Conference play, will be looking to end a three-game losing streak tonight againt the Northern Illinois Huskies in Ahearn Field House.

Tipoff is set for 7:35.

The Huskies, coached by Jim Rosborough, are not strangers to K-State. Two days before Christmas last season, they nearly knocked off the 'Cats in the Rockford, Ill., MetroCentre.

Northern Illinois went on a 19-9 scoring run during the last six minutes of the game and tied the score, 79-79, with 17 seconds remaining. It took a Steve Henson backdoor pass to Will Scott with six seconds left to secure an 81-79 K-State win.

The Huskies, an independent team, are 7-17. Saturday, they lost to interstate rival Southern Illinois, 92-84. But because of last season's near-loss and the fact the Huskies have lost some close games this year, Coach Lon Kruger isn't looking past tonight's game.

"We know very little (about them), really," he said. "Of course, we played them last year in a two-point game in Illinois, so we've got a lot of respect for their club, even though they've not won as many games as I'm sure they would have liked to.

"They have played a lot of good teams close," he added.

This season, the Huskies have played and lost to the likes of UTEP, 67-55; Bradley, 84-78; and Loyola, Chicago, 80-78.

Northern Illinois is led by 6-foot-3 senior guard Rodney Davis. Last season against the Wildcats, he scored 24 points to lead his team, and Kruger is expecting him to be tough again tonight.

"Davis has done an excellent job for (Northern Illinois)," he said. "They've also got some experience and some good size inside."

Mike Grabner is the Huskies' center and averages 11.6 points per game. Grabner, a 6-foot-9, 222 pound senior, is somewhat of an intimidating figure.

"He's without question one of our more intense kids," said Rosborough.

Rounding out the Huskies starting five are guard Brett Andricks, and forwards Brian Banks and Donnell Thomas, a highly-touted freshman from Chicago, who also averages in double figures with 11.7 ppg.

Two other players who should see considerable playing time tonight are Randy Norman, Northern Illinois' second-leading scorer (12.1 ppg) and John Culbertson (9 ppg).

Kruger said the Wildcats are still a little disappointed about their 64-63 loss Thursday to the Kansas Jayhawks in Ahearn. But they are ready to get back onto the court.

"We're very disappointed," he said. "After losses like that, you like to get back and play right away. It's been three or four long days. We need to play."

Despite losing Thursday, and prior to that, to Missouri and Oklahoma on the road, Kruger is optimistic about the final two weeks of the regular season.

"We realize there's two weeks left in the regular season," he said. "We've got to play well to be effective."

Ron Meyer, who scored 12 points in the game against the Jayhawks, will start again at center tonight.

"Ron's playing well," Kruger said. "He's been working really hard. Any time a guy works hard in practice, it's not surprising he goes out and plays well.

NOTE...K-State guard Steve Henson earned his first starting assignment in the game with the Huskies last season.

Tracksters prepare for Big 8 meet

By Russ Ewy
Sports Writer

K-State's track teams hosted the 17-team KSU Open Thursday and Friday in preparation for the Big Eight Conference indoor meet this weekend.

The meet was non-scoring, and Coach John Capriotti was pleased with the efforts of his teams.

"I thought everything went well for us," Capriotti said. "It was a good tune-up meet for us leading into the Big Eight (Conference meet).

"I think right now both teams will finish somewhere in the middle of the conference," he added.

K-State was without the services of jumper Kenny Harrison. He was in Los Angeles competing in the L.A. Times/GTE Indoor Games, the biggest meet prior to the Olympic Trials which will be held in July.

Harrison won the triple jump, leaping 55'3¾ . He also finished fourth in the long jump at 24'1". His mark in the long jump was the only good jump Harrison had, as he scratched on three of four attempts.

Positive drug test costs Polish team

By The Associated Press

CALGARY, Alberta — Poland's best hockey player has tested positive for steroids and been barred from the Winter Olympics, the International Olympic Committee said Sunday.

The result of the urine sample from Jaroslaw Morawiecki was the first positive drug test from the opening week of competition at the Games. It cost Poland two points gained in a victory over France and any chance of making the medal round.

"The team can still participate but they lose the points," Michele Verdier, the IOC spokeswoman, said.

The suspension was recommended by the IOC Medical Commission and unanimously adopted by the executive board. Verdier said further sanctions in the case were a matter for the International Ice Hockey Federation.

She also said it was up to the Polish delegation whether Morawiecki remained with the team in the Athletes' Village.

The IOC, in conjunction with the federation, stripped Poland of the two points it earned in the team standings for a 6-2 victory over France last Thursday. France's record does not change, the IOC said.

With the two points taken away, Poland had just one point from a 1-1 tie with Sweden, in which Morawiecki scored the lone goal. The Poles were fifth in the six-team A Pool, with one game remaining against Finland today, and cannot finish higher. The top three teams in the two pools qualify for the medal round.

A statement released by the IOC said that Morawiecki tested positive for testosterone above allowable levels in urine samples taken after the game with France.

"The IOC Medical Commission recommends that this athlete be disqualified" from the Winter Games, the statement added.

Verdier said testosterone, a naturally occurring male hormone, amounted to "a way of cheating, a fradulent use" in concentrations such as those found in Morawiecki's sample. Large amounts of testosterone can add to an athlete's strength.

Morawiecki did not play in Poland's 4-1 loss to Switzerland Saturday night, a loss that severely damaged Polish chances of reaching the medal round. Verdier said that had been the decision of Leszek Lejczyk, the Polish coach, who knew at that time that the first test on the player's urine had come back positive for drugs.

Morawiecki and Lejczyk were called before the IOC medical commission Saturday night after the game against Switzerland and informed of the second positive test, which the committee requires before a drug penalty can be imposed, the spokeswoman said.

Verdier said that while she was not at the meeting between the commission and the Poles, "I don't think they protested."

Prince Alexandre de Merode, medical commission chairman, was not available for comment. Calls to his hotel room were not answered.

Four members of each winning hockey team are tested at random for drugs, Verdier said. In medal events, the three medalists plus a fourth athlete picked at random are tested.

Lejczyk said Saturday night that Morawiecki was not randomly selected.

U.S. skaters shine Saturday

Speed skater first double winner

By The Associated Press

CALGARY, Alberta — Tomas Gustafson of Sweden set a world speed-skating record and became the Winter Olympics' first double gold medalist Sunday, while America still basked in the triumphs of its own two skaters.

Franck Piccard won the super giant slalom and gave France its first ski racing gold since Jean-Claude Killy took Grenoble by storm in 1968. Anita Wachter of Austria won the women's combined.

With spring-like temperatures lingering in the Rockies, Brian Boitano and Eric Flaim were America's men for all seasons — Boitano with a gold in figure skating, Flaim with a silver in speed skating.

And, while Americans could not match the mighty Soviet bloc in medals, they at least had something to talk about besides the weather.

"I got one for the USA," Boitano said Sunday, one day after his victory. "The thought has occurred to me that if we leave with no more gold medals, at least we've got this one."

Flaim, who won his silver in the 1,500 meters, finished Sunday's 10,000 in fourth place — his third No. 4 finish at these Games.

America had three medals, and its hockey team tried to stay in contention for another one Sunday night in a game against West Germany that would decide the third and final team advancing from the B pool into the medal round.

The Soviet Union beat Czechoslovakia 6-1 in a rematch of the 1984 gold medal game, and Austria met Norway in the other Group B games.

Poland's best hockey player, Jaroslaw Morawiecki, became the first athlete to test positive for steroids from urine samples taken in the first week of the Games. Morawiecki was banned from the Games, and Poland had to forfeit a victory over France, costing it any chance of winning a medal.

The Soviet Union and East Germany have 26 of the total 66 medals at these Games, including 12 of 22 golds. The Soviets have 16 medals, East Germany 10.

Gustafson, a 1984 gold medalist in the 5,000, won at the same distance last Wednesday in Olympic record time and set a world record in winning Sunday's 10,000 in 13 minutes, 48.20 seconds. The old mark was 13:48.51 by Geir Karlstad of Norway.

"How do you describe happiness?" he asked after his first gold medal. "I will have to write a poem."

Piccard, who already had a bronze in the downhill, challenged Mount Allan's super giant slalom course where others showed caution on the icy, steep hill.

He got such a rough ride, he cracked his helmet open when he hit a gate near the start and slammed his poles into the snow at the finish, fearing the worst. But he was a winner by more than a second over Helmut Mayer of Austria, and he spoiled the return to action of downhill gold medalist Pirmin Zurbriggen and the debut of Italian ace Alberto Tomba.

The Soviets won another gold medal Sunday when their women's cross-country relay team prevailed, tying East Germany with six golds. Four of the Soviet golds are in cross-country skiing, where they have won nine of 15 medals offered so far.

America's next good chance for a medal is Monday when speed skater Bonnie Blair of Champaign, Ill., renews her rivalry with East German Christa Rothenburger in the 500 meters.

Gustafson beat Michael Hadschieff of Austria, a bronze medalist at 1,500 meters, by 7.91 seconds. Leo Visser of Holland, second behind Gustafson in the 5,000, won the bronze.

Piccard's gold was the first in the Olympics for the French men since Killy won three golds in Grenoble before dissension ripped apart the team and destroyed it in the mid-1970s.

"I made lots of mistakes in the upper part, but by the bottom of the race, I was skiing better," Piccard said. "I was always trying to stay on edge and sharpen the curves."

Piccard, a non-winner in five seasons on the World Cup tour, chattered and churned his way through the course, ending in 1 minute, 39.66 seconds. Mayer was 1.3 seconds behind for the silver, and Lars-Boerje Eriksson of Sweden won the bronze.

Wachter won the gold in the combined based on her third-place finish in Saturday's downhill and second in Sunday's slalom. Swiss skiers finished 2-3, Brigitte Oertli winning the silver and Maria Walliser the bronze. Oertli won the slalom but was 11th in the downhill.

The final two runs of the two-man bobsled were postponed until Monday by deteriorating track conditions, caused by temperatures in the 60s and windblown sand.

U.S. hockey team's quest for medal ends with loss

By The Associated Press

CALGARY, Alberta — The United States lost its offense and its chance at an Olympic hockey medal Sunday night in a 4-1 defeat to a West German team it had to beat by two goals.

The loss was a bitter disappointment for the Americans, who were seeking vindication in the Olympics after finishing seventh at Sarajevo in 1984. Now, they must win a final game in the consolation round just to match that finish.

The Americans fell behind 2-0 early in the game and never could catch up, their high-powered offense bottled up by a smothering defense and West German goaltender Karl Friesen, a former member of the NHL New Jersey Devils.

In its entire 60-game exhibition schedule, the U.S. team was held to one goal only twice, and it had scored 26 goals in four previous Olympic games.

When the offense was needed the most, though, the offense failed.

The U.S. outshot the Germans 34-23, but scored only on Scott Fusco's goal early in the third period with West Germany already ahead 3-0.

The Americans ended the preliminary round with a 2-3 record, the two victories coming against the only winless teams in the same pool, Austria and Norway.

The Americans started at a disadvantage, needing not just to win but to win by two goals under Olympic tiebreaking procedures for the final berth in the medals round.

As it turned out, that calculation never entered the picture as the West Germans jumped to a 2-0 lead on goals by Dieter Hegen and Ron Fischer in the first period and clinched it on third-period goals by Peter Obresa and Roy Roedger.

Federal proposal may exclude Kansas government employees

By The Collegian Staff

A federal budget proposal to raise revenue by requiring that state and local government enployees pay Medicare hospital-insurance tax may not affect Kansans if it is passed.

K-State employees — like other Kansas government employees — have already been paying the Medicare tax since 1983 due to their participation in the Social Security system, said Jack Peterson, assistant to the director of Cooperative Extension. K-State extension faculty and staff, who are under federal appointment and are not participants in the Social Security system, have also been paying the Medicare tax since 1983, he said.

Peterson said the only areas the tax should affect are some of the larger cities that choose the tax-exempt status because they have their own retirement plans.

The proposed tax is 1.45 percent of the first $45,000 earned. Prior to 1983, state and local employees were not required to pay the tax, Peterson said.

Also included in the budget is a proposal to assist lower- and middle-income families in sending their children to college by offering savings bonds with a tax-exempt interest status to pay for the education.

Questions have already been raised as to the outcome of the program — in particular, the destiny of the money after the bond is cashed.

"I'd like to see some assurance that the money actually does go for the student," said Larry Viterna, director of Student Financial Assistance.

Another potential problem is the other financial aid a student might receive. The entire program could possibly be self-defeating, Viterna said. It's too early to tell, but if no rules governing the amount of financial aid are passed, the bond money might cause other sources to be reduced. Since this tax exemption is aimed at the middle- and lower-income students, it could do more harm than good, he added.

There are no other federal self-help programs for families trying to save money for their children's post-secondary education expenses. Kansas does not have any similar state programs in operation at this time.

Teamsters vow 'warfare'

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Talks between Pan American World Airways and representatives of 4,500 Teamsters workers broke off Sunday, and a union representative vowed to disrupt operations through "guerrilla warfare."

However, the Teamsters put off a call for a strike against the company and Pan Am officials said airline service would continue without interruption even if there eventually was a walkout.

"We can strike any time we want," said William Genoese, director of the Teamsters airline division. "We're going to pick our strategic time."

Asked when that might be, Genoese said, "Today, tomorrow, next week, next month. ...When it hurts them the most." The union originally had set a strike deadline for 12:01 a.m. Sunday.

Genoese said reservation clerks and other Teamsters members would attempt to disrupt Pan Am operations through "guerrilla warfare," starting immediately.

Rodeoin' takes time, practice, money

Rodeo contestants at this weekend's competition competed in ten events. K-State and 18 other teams from the Central Plains Region competed.

Spectators pack Weber Arena

By Audra Dietz
Collegian Reporter

Basketball went to the sidelines of entertainment this weekend as spectators packed K-State's Weber Arena for the first intercollegiate rodeo of the spring semester, in which K-State and 18 other teams from the Central Plains Region competed Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

There were ten events: six for men, three for women, and team roping. The men's events included bareback riding, calf roping, break-away roping, bronc riding, steer wrestling and bull riding. Women competed in roping, goat tying and barrel racing.

Contestants were scored on their performances and so were their animals. Steve Esau, senior in animal sciences and industry and president of the K-State Rodeo Club, said this can be a disadvantage.

"If an animal isn't hard to ride, it hurts your score. A more difficult animal would help your score," he said.

Esau said rodeo is a sport that takes more than practice; it takes money.

"It costs quite a bit to get started," Esau said. Each team member must pay for his own entry fee and for transportation and lodging when on the road. The National Intercollegiate Rodeo Association charges new members a $100 fee, and K-State's Rodeo Club fee is another $15.

Putting on a rodeo isn't cheap either. K-State spent $25,000 putting on this weekend's rodeo, Esau said. The two judges at the rodeo charge $75 dollars for each performance.

The rodeo team is recognized as a sport by the K-State Sports Council and the K-State Ag Council. The club's revenue comes from student fund-raising projects and community donations. The Sports Council also gives $1,200 to the club. Fund-raisers include parking cars at K-State basketball games, hosting an alumni rodeo, and holding a white elephant auction.

Brian Hawk, of the Fort Scott rodeo team, said rodeo is an expensive sport.

"It takes about $200 for a typical weekend," Hawk said. Entry fees start at $30 per event; K-State charged contestants $41 per event.

Robyn Cole, senior in agricultural economics and a member of the K-State team, said rodeo is worth the expense.

"It's unbelievable the feeling you get when you win, and you don't feel bad if you lose," Cole said.

It's also a good escape from studying.

"It's great to come out here and get on my horse after class," she said.

Esau said what makes rodeo unique is the people.

"You may beat someone's score, but they'll still be behind the gate yelling for you," he said.

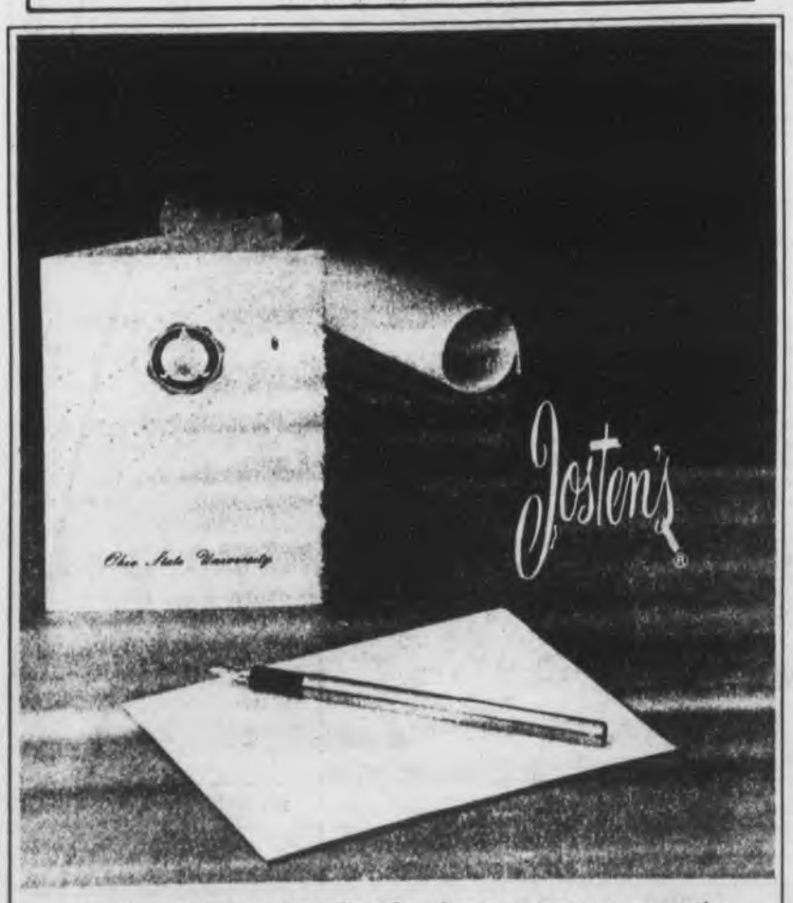
Pickles Dillman, of the Panhandle State team, was almost killed two years ago while steer-wrestling at the K-State rodeo. Dillman, now a junior, said he was pronounced dead at Manhattan Memorial Hospital after the accident.

"They couldn't find my pulse. But all I had was four broken ribs and a pinched nerve in my neck," he said, adding that the accident hasn't scared him away from Manhattan. "I still like rodeo, I still like to win, and I still like coming here." Most rodeos take two or three days, and, with practice twice a week, the sport becomes time-consuming. Esau said missing class is the hardest part.

"It's hard to juggle classes and go on the road all the time," he said.

Cole said the schedule is hectic. "I've learned to budget my time a lot better," she said.

K-State's rodeo team consists of 14 men and 8 women. There are 40 Rodeo Club members that compete for positions on the team. Anyone in the club can enter the rodeos on an individual basis; however, the points individuals earn don't count in team standings.



Starting in the fall, team members compete in 10 rodeos and accumulate points all season for national competition. The top two teams and the top two individuals in each event qualify for the national rodeo in June.

'Serpent' great story of Haitian voodoo

By Gary Leffler
Collegian Reviewer

Don't let the promotions for "The Serpent and the Rainbow" fool you. If you're expecting a slashing, hacking story from horror film director Wes Craven, then you will be deeply disappointed. If you're in the mood for an intelligent, involving story about Haitian voodoo, then by all means grab your popcorn and find a seat.

"The Serpent and the Rainbow" is a well-crafted film concerning the adventures of Dr. Dennis Alan, played by Bill Pullman, as he searches for the secret behind the appearances of zombielike beings in Haiti. While this may sound hokey, it is based upon the real-life adventures of Wade Davis, author of the book of the same title.

Early on in the film, the zombie theory is quickly shelved for a more palatable one. According to Alan's supervisors (the higher-ups in a Boston pharmaceutical firm), the buried corpses that come back to life are not truly dead to begin with. They are drugged and appear to be dead, with the drug wearing off at a later time.

Movie Review

Why should this interest a firm in Boston? If these people are truly alive but function as if they are dead, then this strange drug could ultimately replace surgical anesthesia, saving up to 50,000 lives lost every year to anesthetic shock in America alone.

After establishing this premise, the film then dives headfirst into the mysterious land of Haiti. A powerful combination is achieved by mixing voodoo with a politically unstable atmosphere. Throw in a romantic love affair and you have all the ingredients needed for success.

One fascinating motif used throughout the film is established early on as Alan is doing anthropological work in the Amazon Basin. He drinks a potion given to him by a medicine man and subsequently travels through a series of prophetic dreams.

The technique of leaving one dream and returning, not to reality, but to another dream and then to reality is established with tremendous effect. From this point on, the audience must work to determine whether they are watching reality or one of Alan's dreams.

Separating dream from reality becomes increasingly difficult as Alan is pulled deeper and deeper into the world of voodoo. The ultimate battle between good and evil is not one of a physical nature but one of the psychological realm.

It is important to note that director Wes Craven makes it perfectly clear that Haitian voodoo is not a cult tradition practiced by a few choice lunatics. It is a large part of the Haitian culture, something respected and often feared by everyone. Craven does a very fine job of mixing the serene beauty of Roman Catholicism and the frantic brutality of voodoo in a country that is described as 85 percent Catholic and 110 percent voodoo.

Another refreshing dose of realism is added to the story by framing it with the collapse of the Duvalier government. By adding these actual events to the script, the audience is consistently reminded that this is a true story, which makes what is seen even more powerful.

The performances in "The Serpent and the Rainbow" were, for the most part, very satisfying. Only on occasion did Pullman alter the character of Alan into somewhat of an Indiana Jones clone. When he wasn't being flippant and nonchalant, Pullman successfully relayed Alan's determination to bring home a potentially miraculous drug as he battles his way through a hostile and unstable country.

Cathy Tyson played Alan's closest confidante in Haiti, Dr. Mariel Duchamp. She successfully portrayed the sensible Haitian who respects the power of voodoo without being obsessed by it.

"The Serpent and the Rainbow" catches its audience and holds them until the end by mixing suspense, magic and adventure into an A-movie that is going to surprise a lot of people.

Speaker inspires black leaders during Big Eight conference

By The Collegian Staff

The pin that Toby Malichi handed out Saturday before his speech said it all in simple, gold block letters — ATTITUDE.

"Motivation is personal. Motivation is internal," Malichi said.

Malichi is a former corporate executive of General Motors Corp. and tours the United States giving motivational speeches and conducting training seminars for large corporations and organizations.

He told the more than 70 black student leaders assembled in Forum Hall that people must have a strong sense of self in order to overcome the barriers that await them in life.

"Become secure with who you are," Malichi said.

The presentation was part of the 11th Annual Big Eight Conference on Black Student Government.

Most barriers, he said, can be traced to within the person, not the outside environment.

"When you leave this college, reality is going to hit you in the face," Malichi said.

Positive results come from a positive attitude. And, this attitude needs to show through to others, he said.

"(Be sure to) tell your face," Malichi said. "Use the curves around your face you call a smile to make things right."

After the speech, some students said they felt good about themselves.

"One reason I came to the conference was to get inspired," said Valeria Henderson, junior in business at Baker University. "I feel stronger now that I heard the speech."

Brian Elmore, a sophomore in architecture and design at Kansas City, Kan., Community College, said: "Malichi has made me want to strive to do my best — to keep looking up."

Iowan wins $3 million in lotto

By The Associated Press

DES MOINES, Iowa — A west-central Iowa man is the apparent holder of the lone winning ticket for a $3 million jackpot in the Lotto America game, becoming the first big winner in the new multi-state game.

Officials of the Des Moines-based game confirmed Sunday afternoon that a check of Lotto America computers disclosed that just one ticket was sold with all seven of the numbers selected in Saturday night's televised drawing.

The ticket was sold at Mr. Bill's Foodland in Guthrie Center, and store owner Bill Boyle said the man who apparently holds that ticket has talked with him twice by phone but refused to give his name.

The prize was awarded in just the second weekly drawing of the game played in Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Oregon, Rhode Island, West Virginia and the District of Columbia. Ticket sales began on Feb. 3.

Lotto America spokesman Bret Voorhees said that to claim the prize, the ticket will have to be verified at the Iowa Lottery offices in Des Moines after 8 a.m. Monday.

Voorhees said 34 players matched six numbers, good for a prize of $1,222 each, that another 884 players will get $90 for matching five numbers and 14,723 players will get $5 for matching four of the seven numbers.

Haymaker players win championship in softball tourney

By Victoria Ohmacht
Collegian Reporter

Frozen softball fields and chilling winds couldn't stop a Haymaker Hall team from winning the Second Annual Coed Winter Softball Tournament on Saturday to help raise about $200 for the Women's Resource Center.

Ten teams participated in the tournament, which was sponsored by Goodnow Hall and the Association of Residence Halls. Other halls participating included Haymaker and Putnam.

Team captain Sam Huffman, sophomore in parks and resource management, led The Fury to a 16-15 win in the championship game over another Haymaker team, the Manhattan Motors. The Fury scored ten runs in the first two innings, but their opponents recovered in the final innings to take a 15-14 lead.

The Fury then went on to score two runs in the last inning to win the tournament.

"We all had a really good time — but we were serious at times, too," he said. In last year's tournament, Huffman coached another Haymaker team to victory.

Although The Fury beat Manhattan Motors in the final round, The Fury lost their only game of the tournment to Manhattan Motors in the first round.

"It was kind of cold, and they (the team members) really weren't ready. But after (the loss), they realized it wasn't going to get much warmer and started playing ball," Huffman said.

During the first games at 8 a.m., a light snow was falling, causing mixed reactions from players.

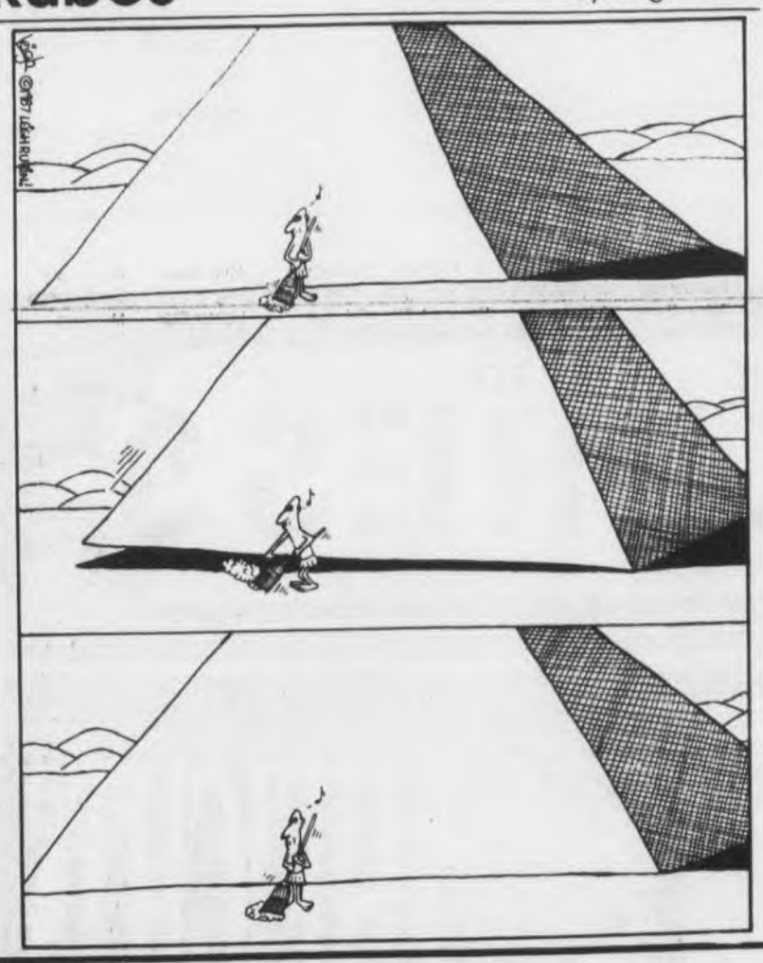
"The snow was blowing right in my face and it lowered visibility," said Darin Baldwin, junior in computer engineering technology and an outfielder for The Big Dogs of Goodnow Hall.

A member of The Snowball Express, another Goodnow team, would have liked more snow.

"Everyone would have had the same handicap and it would not have been as competitive," said Stephanie Vopat, sophomore in psychology. If there had been a foot of snow, "it would have been more fun, kind of like mud volleyball."

The teams played on the Northview and Gorman East fields off Tuttle Creek Boulevard on Griffith Drive. On the Northview field, the frozen field made the early games like playing softball on a "frozen cow pasture," said Traci Brentano, freshman in industrial engineering.

The fields later thawed as temperatures reached the 40-degree range.



"Texas rules" were used for the games, said Scott Burgett, junior in electrical engineering and a member of Haymaker's Fun Bunch.

Batters start with two balls and a strike and "basically, you get two pitches after that and it's over. Either you're on base or you're out," he said.

The 45-minute time limit for each game kept the tournament only 30 minutes behind schedule, said Stephanie Haub, sophomore in preprofessional business administration and coordinator of the tournament.

Poitier shows variety, experience in 'Shoot'

By Judd Annis
Collegian Reviewer

"Shoot to Kill," a shoot-'em-up movie with a twist, marks the long-awaited return of Sidney Poitier to motion pictures. Showing at Westloop 6 Cinema, this film would not be worth seeing if Poitier were not appearing in it.

The story centers on a ruthless killer (Clancy Brown) who, after having held a jeweler's wife for ransom, begins a flight that leads him into the Canadian wilderness. Warren Stantin (Poitier), a big city FBI agent, pursues him with the help of expert guide Jonathan Knox (Tom Berenger).

The killer, fearing the law is nearer than it really is, disguises himself as a member of a hiking party that's out for a jaunt in the wilderness.

Movie Review

To pursue his man and save everyone, Stantin needs Knox's help, while Knox just wants to save his girlfriend Sarah (Kirstie Alley), who — you guessed it — is the party's guide.

Stantin and Knox pursue the bad guy up and down the mountains, then back to the city for a not-so-fantastic conclusion.

The first 20 minutes of this movie earn an edge-of-the-seat rating, fooling the audience into believing this might be one of the year's top thrillers.

Brown is very good at being bad, portraying a cold and calculated killer on the loose. Outwitting police and FBI alike with the greatest of ease, he makes himself seemingly unstoppable, while giving this film an edge (however dull it may be). Brown would certainly be a match for 007 or those Miami Vice boys.

Poitier, who is often the only reason this film is not a total disappointment, shows variety and experience with his talented acting. Alley, well cast as a "tough" girl in distress, succeeds in livening up the screen.

Unfortunately, that's the best this movie can muster. With the introduction of mountain man Knox, (a probable stand-in for outdoorsy cigarette ads), the story moves quickly and decisively down the drain.

As if director Roger Spottiswoode knew his audience's attention would be waning, the film turns to humor for a shot of adrenaline. The resulting scenes, most poking fun at Stantin's inability to be an outdoorsman, don't belong in the film and completely disrupt its flow.

While we're not sure if Stantin and Knox are still bent on catching the killer, Spotiswoode is busy destroying Brown's character further up the mountain. Brown, who is now relying on Sarah to guide him out of the forest, begins to sexually harass her.

Evidently thinking the killer not evil enough, Spottiswoode disrupts Brown's murderish character and replaces it with a "peeping Tom." Berenger's character, on the other hand, never really has to worry about being distorted, because his acting creates little personality for Knox from the start. By the end of this film, the audience has lost most of its belief in both the story and its characters.

Some, however, will still find all of this entertaining (it is brought to us by Disney's Touchtone Pictures), while others will undoubtedly appreciate Michael Chapman's fine cinematography of the beautiful Pacific Northwest.

I'll give it a C and advise you to go see it only if there's nothing good on television.

wound up paying more state income tax," he said.

The task force found that Kansas had one of the narrowest tax bases of any state, he said.

Kansas had operated its system on a principle of conforming with the federal tax system, but diverted away from that principle after 1977, he said.

"Now each time federal tax codes are changed, Kansas becomes more out of conformity and the system becomes more complex," he said.

Rolfs said the personal exemption and standard deductions haven't changed since 1978 which has hurt lower income people who do not itemize.

He said although the Senate plan calls for the return of about $43 million of the windfall (more than double Hayden's proposal of $21 million), the plan is "pretty well on track."

Citing facts and figures from a summary sheet of the tax-reform proposal provided at the breakfast, Rolfs pointed out that Kansas' schedule of itemized deductions has been adjusted to conform fully with the federal itemized deductions schedule.

Robert Poresky, associate professor of human development and family studies, referring to the tax reform plan summary sheet, pointed out that the two categories of taxpayers who would benefit most from the tax reform plan would be the poor and the wealthy.

Rolfs responded that the charts in the summary depict combined federal and state income tax.

Poresky said he fully supported benefiting the poor via tax reform, but did not think the most wealthy were a group in need of a tax break.

After the breakfast, Poresky said the opportunity to make a fairer tax system was being avoided.

"We have a lot of programs that need funding and I'm not sure we need to return windfall in the form of tax decreases to a bunch of people who really don't need it," Poresky said.

"We have an opportunity to create greater equity and we are moving away from it as opposed to toward it," he said.

Sen. Don Montgomery, R-Sabetha and member of the Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee, said amendments to the tax reform bill could aid business by reducing the tax rate for businesses by one-half percent.

Montgomery also discussed modifications to the school finance bill.

"The goal is to provide equal dollars for each student based on district wealth; if district wealth goes up, state aid goes down," he said.

The wealth in the Manhattan-Ogden Unified School District 383 has increased by $42 million over the last year, he said.

USD 383 aid reduction would be cut to about $71,000 as compared to $257,000 that had been recommended in an earlier version of the bill, he said.

"This would mean a 9½ -mill tax levy increase if the school board decides it wants to levy the entire amount," he said.

These assumptions are used to determine approximately how much of the previous year's earnings will be available for a student to use for school, she said.

"The change is neither good nor bad, but it's a major change that will effect some students," Crenshaw said.

Unaffected by the change will be students who have not worked a significant amount during the previous year, she said.

Since the previous methodology used what the student had expected to earn as a determinant of eligibility, a loophole was created, Crenshaw said.

"A loophole in the Uniform Methodology allowed students to always say they weren't going to earn anything," she said.

"This made them eligible, if they were independent students, to receive the maximum amount of aid," Crenshaw said. "Then they would work and earn money, but when they filled out the financial aid form the following year, they would again say they weren't going to earn anything."

The new formula should close this loophole.

Another major change is how budgets are constructed. Under Uniform Methodology, if the student was independent and had a family, the budget was constructed including the basic living expenses of the entire family.

Under Congressional Methodology, the budget is constructed only for the person attending school. But if the student had children receiving child care, the budget will also include this.

Another change is financial aid administrators can now accept appeals and, with the appropriate documentation, adjustments can be made to the financial aid a student will receive, Crenshaw said.

"The appeals are based on professional judgments by the financial aid administrator," she said.

This should help students who are in an unusual situation. If their financial aid is dramatically different from the previous year, but their circumstances are the same, they can appeal and possibly have their aid adjusted.

All reviews must have very accurate information supplied to them to allow for changes, so a student must be prepared, she said.

"No one knows how the Congressional Methodology came to be created," she said. "Whether it was just legislative haggling and persuasion by various lobbyists, we just don't know."

Crenshaw said she believes that Congressional Methodology will not have a major effect on the aid received by K-State students.

"In general terms," she said, "Congressional Methodology will probably not be a significant change to most students at K-State."

Crenshaw said she doesn't know which methodology is better. "We will have to wait and see," she said.

"I think he is a man of integrity," said Janway. "I think he made a mistake. I don't think it's a fatal mistake."

Janway said he did not expect any information to be made public immediately after the private meeting Monday. Information on the meeting will have to be sent to denomination officials in Springfield, Mo., he said.

depend on completing another treaty to halve the superpowers' arsenals of long-range bombers, land-based missiles and submarines.

Negotiations in Geneva have slowed down over ways to verify the cutbacks and over the U.S. program to develop an anti-missile defense in space.

Shultz discussed verification procedures with Shevardnadze. A joint statement is to be issued after talks Monday with Gorbachev. Shevardnadze is expected to deal with the problem and also compliance with the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty, which the Soviets say prohibits much of the U.S. "Star Wars" program.

Earlier, at the opening of the talks, Shevardnadze staked out an active role for the Soviet Union in the U.S. drive to set up Arab-Israeli peace talks.

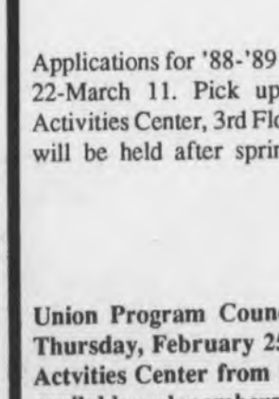
RESTLESS NATIVES

"A FANCIFUL NOTION... KEEPS YOU CHUCKLING ALL THE WAY THROUGH."
—Julie Salamon, WALL STREET JOURNAL



"A CHEERFULLY IMPISH BRITISH COMEDY... ADORABLY LOONY... HARD TO RESIST."
—Kathleen Carroll, N.Y. DAILY NEWS

Two down-on-their-luck losers become the world's unlikeliest folk heroes in this charming and offbeat comedy from Scotland. "Restless Natives" follows the delightful exploits of an unorthodox pair of criminals who steal from tourists along the scenic Scottish Highlands. Their ingenious robberies thrust these modern-day Robin Hoods into the national spotlight, where fame and fortune lie just another stickup away. Rated PG.

Film crew covers K-State in promo

By Robert Short
Collegian Reporter

Two K-State departments were in the spotlight Monday when a film crew arrived in Manhattan to tape the final footage for a 30-minute television promotion on Kansas.

The film, which will be aired on NBC-affiliate stations in April, will feature the Department of Grain Science and Industry and the Center for Controlled Automation.

It features demonstrations in computer-controlled robotics and the techniques used in the milling lab.

The film will stress Kansas' initiative development, its strengths, and serve as an example of the state's entrepreneurial spirit, said Brad Parrott, spokesman for the filming crew.

Both departments were selected for the film as "perfect" examples of what the presentation was meant to portray, he said.

The film, which was sponsored by the Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. and Dillon's stores, is designed to enhance the overall image of the state and encourage economic development within the state.

The image of hard-working, well-educated people who enjoy quality and a variety of lifestyles is the image Southwestern Bell is attempting to build through this film, Parrott said.

Leon Ault, director of photography for the five-man crew, said the most important goal of the film is to improve business' expansion and retention.

"The purpose of the film is to show people things they did not know about Kansas," Ault said.

The film, titled "Kansas: The Land, The People, The Promise," is a three-segment presentation that includes Kansas geography, individual success stories and emerging economic strengths.

The Kansas Department of Commerce selected individuals for the film from across the state to give an equal representation of business, arts and education.

The members of the Department of Commerce selected areas that they believed needed exposure, Ault said.

Parrott is working as liaison for Southwestern Bell and the Department of Commerce for the next 12 to 18 months.

The film crew has been collecting footage for the presentation for the last

Video of marine reveals captors' demands

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — The kidnappers of a U.S. Marine officer released a videotape Monday in which he recited their demands, including withdrawal by Israel from its border "security zone" in south Lebanon.

Lt. Col. William R. Higgins, who appeared to be reading from a text written by his captors, said President Reagan "has to take responsibility for the crimes he has committed against the oppressed people in the region."

Higgins was abducted last Wednesday on a highway south of Tyre, the ancient port 50 miles south of Beirut.

A group calling itself the Organization of the Oppressed on Earth, which claimed responsibility for the abduction, released the 70-second tape.

The kidnapping increased friction between two Shiite Moslem forces vying for domination in south Lebanon: the moderate Amal militia, which is trying to rescue Higgins, and Hezbollah, or Party of God, which is loyal to Iran and is believed to be an umbrella for groups holding most of the 25 foreigners missing in Lebanon.

Amal militiamen and troops of the U.N. peacekeeping force in south Lebanon, using dogs, searched the caves and groves of the Tyre area for the sixth day Monday.

NBC Nightly News reported "important progress in the search." In a report from southern Lebanon it said sources there told NBC News the three gunmen who kidnapped Higgins and three other gunmen who were in the getaway car had been caught.

It said the six are being interrogated by Amal officers.

Higgins is commander of the 76-man Observer Group-Lebanon attached to the U.N. Interim Force in Lebanon, or UNIFIL, the south Lebanon peacekeeping force.

Hezbollah claimed the 43-year-old Marine from Danville, Ky., was removed from the area despite a dragnet by Amal and U.N. security officers. Release of the tape, delivered to a Western news agency in Beirut, suggested the abductors were able to get Higgins out.

"It is hard to believe that a videotape can be produced if the captive is held in a dangerous hideout," said an independent, informed Shiite source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Amal, which supports the U.N. presence in predominantly Shiite south Lebanon, views Higgins' abduction as a Hezbollah challenge. Security sources in Tyre said Amal had closed the Iranian cultural center and Iranian Revolutionary Guards offices in the city.

Hezbollah declared full support for the kidnappers and denounced Amal's "enthusiam to determine the fate of a filthy American spy."

Nine Americans, including Higgins, are among the 25 foreigners missing in Lebanon. The hostage held longest is Terry A. Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent of The Associated Press, kidnapped March 16, 1985.

Many of his taped remarks were in poor English, indicating he did not write the message. His face was close to the camera, obscuring any background that might have indicated the location.

He appeared physically fit, was unshaven and wore the same dark green sweater as when kidnappers stopped his car on the coastal highway.

A typewritten statement in Arabic that accompanied the tape renewed the charge that Higgins was a CIA agent using the U.N. job as a cover.

Washington has denied this.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Monday the videotape "obviously ... was made under duress."

Drug's popularity growing

By Chad L. Sanborn
Staff Writer

Tiffany (not her real name) felt in tune with the live music. As the guitars rambled, so did her mouth. When she clapped her hands to the beat of the music, jolts of electricity shot up her arms to her elbows.

Talking to everyone she could in the smoke-filled room, she wanted to touch them all. Maybe to help them share in her happiness. She was as much in Ecstasy as she was on it.

A methamphetamine-related drug, Ecstasy is probably the most popular of the designer drugs — any drug whose chemical composition is constantly being changed in order to side-step laws making it illegal.

Its chemical name is 3,4 methylenedioxy-methamphetamine, but it is commonly known as MDMA. In addition to Ecstasy, its other slang names include X, XTC and ADAM. Selling for $20 to $25 a tablet, the effects of this non-addictive drug have been described as similar to the effects of mescaline and LSD, but milder.

John Uhlarik, professor of psychology, teaches a behavioral pharmacology class. He said the drug is a mild hallucinogen with a chemical structure similar to the neurotransmitter epinephrine or adrenaline and produces an induced aroused state in the user.

"An aroused state" is a mild phrase compared to Tiffany's description of her trip.

"I know this may sound strange, but you know how when you were a little kid you thought life would be a certain way? I felt like life was what I thought it would be. (Ecstasy) makes every thing fall into place," she said.

However, Tiffany, who said she is indifferent to marijuana and hates cocaine, does not believe the drug is anything more than a drug.

"I know it wasn't real, but I can't deny the way I felt," she said.

Dave (also not his real name) said in addition to head rushes and dilated pupils, the drug gives him feelings of insight to himself and things around him.

He said the drug, usually taken orally, can last from three to four hours, with the most intense period — called peaking — occurring during the first hour.

"It is fun. You see streaks and tracers (blurred tails on lights)," he said.

Although the drug is expensive, Uhlarik said most people take it in order to experiment with changing their consciousness.

"There are a whole bunch of reasons why people take the drug," he said. "It is a kind of novelty. They may take it for a new experience or enlightenment."

Once used by some psychiatrists to help patients relax their inhibitions, the drug was outlawed in 1985 due to controversy over its effectiveness and side effects. However, Tiffany said she was open and relaxed while on Ecstasy.

"I felt like touching everybody — both sexes. But it wasn't a sexual desire. I felt motherly toward women and subordinate to men," she said.

Although her perceptions of reality were changed, Tiffany said she never really felt out of control.

"I was in control. I could snap out of it at any time. It is not like (cocaine) where you are constantly on the edge. I had to act normal around some of my date's friends, and I had no problem," she said.

Some studies have found the drug kills nerves in the brains of test rats and increases cardiac output and blood pressure. However, Uhlarik said he knew of no systematic studies concerning the drug and the harmful side effects it may have.

He said fear is probably the biggest danger for the user.

"The biggest problem is when the person becomes frightened or feels like they might not get straight again," he said.

Because it is a designer drug, it is constantly being altered. Uhlarik said there is a new drug similar to Ecstasy, called EVE or EDEN, which produces the same effects.

Last year bars in Dallas were selling the drug to customers legally, he said. But he said he was not sure if the drug had made its way to Manhattan yet.

Bill Arck, director of Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service, said although national trends indicate a revival of psychedelic drug use on the campuses across the country, he has no statistics to indicate this is the case at K-State.

Secretary of Navy submits resignation

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Navy Secretary James H. Webb abruptly resigned Monday, accusing Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci of abandoning the Reagan Administration's goal of a 600-ship Navy and of demonstrating a lack of leadership and vision.

"This building needs to be led," Webb said in telling reporters of his decision. "It needs leadership. It needs some vision. I'm saying that if I had a piece of advice to give to Secretary Carlucci, it would be to spend a lot more time with the top leaders in this building.

"He's been spending a lot of time with the State Department and a lot of time on the Hill. I think they (Pentagon leaders) need to feel his vision and to understand what he believes in."

Webb, 42, a highly decorated Marine veteran of Vietnam combat and the author of the best-selling Vietnam war novel, "Fields of Fire," left after only 10 months in his Pentagon position.

He told President Reagan in his resignation letter that the president could have realized his cherished goal of building a 600-ship fleet, were it not for Carlucci.

An administration official who asked not to be identified said Carlucci wants to recommend that William L. Ball III, assistant to the president for legislative affairs, be nominated to replace Webb. The source said the White House probably would announce Ball's nomination on Tuesday, at the same time it announces formal acceptance of Webb's resignation.

Talking to reporters, Webb accused Carlucci of ordering him to keep quiet about internal budget fighting, saying the defense chief had written him a note saying he should deny news stories reporting it was the Defense Department — and not the Navy — proposing to mothball ships.

"Now, I'm not going to deny the truth," Webb said.

Carlucci declined to respond to the criticism, issuing a written statement saying only that he had learned of Webb's resignation decision "with regret."

The Pentagon added in a separate statement, however, that if Webb had decided he could not "defend the department's decisions" on the budget, then "under the circum-

More flour sales for Ag Dept.

WASHINGTON — Kansas Gov. Mike Hayden and Rep. Pat Roberts said Monday the Agriculture Department expects to make new flour sales soon under an export subsidy program.

"They were hopeful that it would be in the relatively near future," Hayden said after meeting with Deputy Agriculture Secretary Peter C. Myers and other USDA officials. "They gave us some encouraging results."

Hayden and Roberts arranged the meeting to urge USDA to step up its efforts to make flour sales to Egypt and China under the Export Enhancement Program.

Although negotiating problems may prevent any additional sales to those two countries, USDA is working to find other foreign buyers and is optimistic that some deals can be completed soon, according to Hayden and Roberts.

"They informed us there are a number of other countries that they think are on the verge of purchase," said Hayden, who is in Washington for a meeting of the National Governors Association.

Scholar's hobby is clean fun

CHERRY HILL, N.J. — Nothing sends Albert Paul Blaustein into a lather like being called odd just because he has 1,400 bars of soap in his basement.

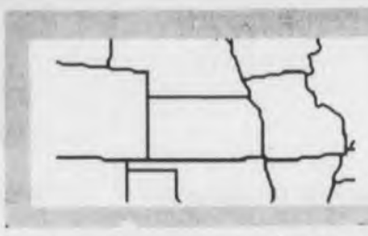
That's 1,400 catalogued bars from every hotel the 66-year-old constitutional law scholar has visited in the past 47 years.

Still, "I'm not eccentric," Blaustein said with good humor in a recent interview. "I'd rather be remembered as a nice guy who did good things for the world."

Over the years, Blaustein has helped write the constitutions of a half-dozen countries, including Peru and South Vietnam; written an 18-volume international history of constitutional law; and developed a new supreme court for South Vietnam.

He also teaches human and civil rights at Rutgers University School of Law at Camden, lectures on behalf of the U.S. government around the world and serves on occasion as an administrative law judge for federal agencies.

But when it comes to Blaustein's own history, he cites a non-legal type of bar.



Chess wiz woos schoolchildren

NEW YORK — World chess champion Gary Kasparov charmed a Bronx gymnasium full of schoolchildren Monday, then promptly beat the pawns off more than 50 of them at once.

"It's like playing Larry Bird or Michael Jordan one-on-one," explained 14-year-old K.K. Karanja, who along with one other youth played the champion to a draw. The remaining 57 lost.

A beaming Kasparov, on a visit to the United States, was greeted at the Garrett Morgan Community Elementary School by a mob of reporters, photographers, school and city officials and starstruck student chess buffs.

"It's a great day for chess," said the 24-year-old Kasparov, dashing in a gray sweater, tan slacks and green scarf. "This is the beginning of the promotion of chess in the USA."

Jackson ready for K.C. concert

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Pop star Michael Jackson was scheduled to arrive in Kansas City late Monday and immediately begin rehearsals for the start of his U.S. tour Tuesday and Wednesday.

Tickets for the two shows were "virtually sold out," according to Lee Solters, Jackson's press representative, although some limited-view seats reportedly were still available. The Kansas City Star reported Monday that some tickets could be scalped for as much as $200.

About 33,000 fans, writers and broadcasters for national and international media were expected to attend the two shows.

The 29-year-old Jackson was scheduled to go directly to Kemper Arena Monday night to check sound and rehearse, Solters said.

Court puts dentist on probation

TOPEKA — Dr. James Pratt, a Topeka dentist accused of writing prescriptions and then purporting to be a patient to get them filled, was placed on probation for three years Monday.

Pratt, 33, pleaded guilty earlier to one count of attemping to obtain a controlled substance by misrepresentation. Four other counts against him were dismissed in a plea bargain.

U.S. District Judge Richard Rogers sentenced Pratt to three years in prison, but suspended the sentence and placed him on probation, with a requirement that he enroll in a substance abuse program.

Lawmakers oppose history bill

TOPEKA — Several lawmakers said Monday they don't think Kansas high school students should be required to take Kansas history, as Gov. Mike Hayden recommended earlier this year.

Other members said they don't want the Legislature to require mandatory teaching of Kansas history at all.

Rep. Bill Reardon, D-Kansas City, told fellow members of the House Education Committee that the committee usually refuses to mandate what specific courses local school districts must teach. The state Board of Education sets most curriculum guidelines, with oversight from the Legislature.

"I don't think we have ever mandated courses," Reardon said.

But, Rep. Denise Apt, R-Iola, the committee chairwoman, said a resolution passed by the Legislature two years ago encouraging school districts to teach Kansas history hasn't done any good.

Current law requires public school districts to teach Kansas history, but doesn't say in what grades or for how long it should be taught.

Hayden had recommended teaching Kansas history in high school.

Apt amended the bill so it would require a unit of Kansas history in grades seven through 12, but many committee members said that, practically, many school districts would end up teaching it in high school.

Memo to Meese shows link with Israeli party

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A memo to Attorney General Edwin Meese III released Monday said a portion of $650 million-$700 million in Iraqi oil pipeline payments to Israel would go directly to the Israeli Labor Party although that diversion "would be denied everywhere."

The Sept. 25, 1985 memo, the focal point of a criminal investigation of the attorney general, was written by longtime Meese friend E. Robert Wallach. At issue is whether Meese knew of possibly improper payments to the Israeli political party and, if so, why he did nothing about it.

Meese has said he doesn't recall reading the reference in the document to payments to the Israeli Labor Party headed by Shimon Peres. Meese declined to comment on the newly released documents at a news conference Monday in San Diego, Calif., where he was attending a meeting of U.S. attorneys.

The fourth paragraph of the document said Swiss oilman Bruce Rappaport, who was a partner in the Iraqi pipeline with Bechtel Group Inc., "confirmed the arrangement with Peres" that the government of "Israel will receive somewhere between $65-$70 million a year for ten years out of the conclusion of the project."

"What was also indicated to me, and which would be denied everywhere, is that a portion of those funds will go directly to Labor," Wallach's memo said.

Iraq, which was considering building the $1 billion, 540-mile pipeline through parts of Iraq and Jordan, has been Israel's enemy since the Jewish state was created in 1948. The pipeline's builders feared that Israel would bomb it and were seeking Israel's assurance that it would not.

The memorandum was declassified by the office of independent counsel James McKay and was released by Meese's attorneys some three weeks after its existence was disclosed by the Los Angeles Times.

Swaggart to begin rehab

By The Associated Press

ALEXANDRIA, La. — The state hierarchy of the Assemblies of God church has ordered television evangelist Jimmmy Swaggart to immediately begin a two-year rehabilitation period that will limit his preaching and place him in counseling, an official said Monday.

Louisiana District supervisor Cecil Janway made the announcement about 10 p.m. after more than 9½ hours of meeting with Swaggart, who was accused of sexual misconduct and admitted Sunday to unspecified sins.

"The following action has been taken by the board of the Louisiana District of the Assemblies of God concerning evangelist Jimmy Swaggart: We accept his confession of specific incidents of a moral failure. Based on his detailed confession and the evidence we observed of true humility and repentance, we have offered him rehabilitation, in accordance with the bylaws of the general council and Louisiana District of the Assemblies of God," Janway said.

"Brother Swaggart has submitted to the terms of rehabilitation," he said. Swaggart made no comment as he left the meeting. He was whisked away by guards and left in a van, apparently headed for his twin-engine airplane waiting at Esler Regional Airport in Pineville.

Janway told reporters that Swaggart will be prohibited from preaching a minimum of three months, "except in fulfillment of present commitments involving foreign governments during that period."

Swaggart will be relieved of his duties as co-pastor of the Family Worship Center in Baton Rouge, but he will be allowed to return to preaching after three months, Janway said.

Group fails to represent off-campus students

Commentary

LORI SIEGRIST
Managing Editor

Off-campus students unite!

This is the cry that is being voiced by a few determined K-State students who began the Off-Campus Association.

A good idea — great, actually — if handled in the right way, for the right reasons and by the right people.

On Nov. 5, 1987, Student Senate allocated $103.20 to form an organization for off-campus residents, which I understood to mean students who do not already have organized representation. This would include only people who live in apartments or houses.

But it seems the group is allowing any K-State student — residence hall member, Greek house resident, Jardine tenant, apartment dweller, etc. — to join what is being called the Off-Campus Association.

Misleading, to say the least.

Yes, I realize that fraternities, sororities, the Jardine Terrace Apartments and a few buildings within the Department of Housing are located off-campus, but I've always believed the term applies only to those people who are living in individual dwellings that have no actual ties to the University.

Most of the other living places have a dynamic structure that not only gives the members representation, but allows for the organizing of many varied activities.

In the Nov. 6, 1987, Collegian, Doug Folk, then Student Senate vice chairman, said the Senate wanted to organize a group that would enable off-campus students to unite to discuss issues affecting them.

Not only is the group not being organized for off-campus students, but Greg Weisenborn, also a Senate member and an organizer of the Off-Campus Association, now says the main goal of the group is to involve off-campus students in Homecoming and sorority and fraternity philanthropies. The main goal?

Some students who choose to live off-campus — well, my definition of off-campus — do so to get away from the silliness that goes on in organized housing.

This doesn't mean, though, that they desire to give up voicing their opinion on issues or being part of a larger group that sponsors innovative, informative activities.

That's why the Off-Campus Association has such a golden opportunity to meet the needs of the individuals who make up more than 60 percent of K-State's enrollment.

I had high hopes for the organization. The Collegian article said the group might sponsor speakers who would address issues concerning off-campus students. Weisenborn said this is still a possibility and would involve issues such as tenant/landlord relationships.

This same project was attempted a few years ago, but the organization had "poor leadership, and the program flopped," Weisenborn said.

The newspaper article said the idea for the current association began as a campaign promise made by Michelle Benoit when she was vying for 1987-88 student body president.

Weisenborn said that last year he, Benoit and Folk — all Senate members — developed and proposed the idea. He also said the last attempt to form an organization like this failed simply because the leaders of the group were too close-knit and the other members felt alienated, a reason they may have joined the group in the first place.

Interesting. Consider the following:

When I first wanted to find out more about the current group, I called U-LearN. The person who answered my call told me to contact Greg Weisenborn, the president of the Off-Campus Association. President?

The group has only met twice. About 55 people showed up at the first meeting, Weisenborn said. They decided membership dues would be around $2 to $5 per year and that officers would be elected at the next meeting.

The next meeting took place on the same night as a home basketball game, so after interested individuals showed up, the meeting was canceled.

A third meeting is to take place tonight and officers will be elected at this meeting.

But why bother? Weisenborn, himself a member of a fraternity, said the trio — he, Benoit and Folk — will probably split the leadership positions among themselves. Sounds like fair representation to me.

Actually, I encourage any off-campus students to attend, perhaps to influence decisions concerning who leads the group, for whom it is formed and what the group hopes to accomplish.

Regents place control of alcohol in right place

The Kansas Board of Regents made a wise choice Thursday in giving universities' chief executive officers the responsibility of deciding what groups would be granted the privilege of serving alcohol at university events.

Previously, the regents had specified where alcohol could be served and by what groups at each institution.

As chief executive officers, the officials are paid to have control of the institutions. They know their universities better than the regents and know where the serving of alcohol would be appropriate.

The old policy did not allow for flexibility. Since the places alcohol could be served had already been designated, problems arose when new circumstances developed — such as the construction of a new building or the formation of a new group.

In those cases, the universities had to ask the regents to change their alcohol policy. The regents did not know the situations as well as the chief executive officers, but they had to decide whether the policies should be changed.

The decision does not, however, mean there will be beer-dispensing vending machines in the Union. Even if President Jon Wefald were inclined to go to such an extreme, he must justify his decisions to the regents periodically.

Plus, the new policy sets guidelines for granting the privilege. Alcohol can only be served in non-classroom areas, and it can only be served in connection with official university events or fund-raising activities for university programs.

It is a wise decision. The chief executive officers have more control, and the policy is more flexible to each institution's growth.

Countries should unite to get hostages freed

When the ninth American was taken hostage in Lebanon last week, President Reagan took a strong stand — at least initially.

He spouted the usual comments about trying everything possible and gave the impression that a rescue attempt could be made in the future.

But now, a spokesman for the Department of Defense has said the department is not responsible for the U.S. Marine officer's safety and therefore will refuse to implement a rescue operation. As part of a U.N. observation group, the officer is the United Nations' responsibility — not the Department of Defense's, an official said.

But what about the other eight Americans who are held captive in Lebanon? They are not under the control of the United Nations or the U.S. military, yet Reagan has failed to negotiate their release.

The only common bond between the nine is that they are American. They have different backgrounds and professions. But still their government denies them freedom by refusing to instigate talks for their release.

But the Americans are not alone. About 20 hostages of other nationalities are held in Lebanon. Their countries have also failed to get them released.

Only a strong, united front by all of the countries can achieve the release of the hostages. The front should not utilize military forces and should not back down at the first hurdle.

It must first open the lines of communication, and then take the steps necessary to aid the hostages' release.

Program allows students to uphold Jeffersonian ideal of citizenship

Commentary

MICHAEL NICHOLS
Collegian Columnist

"I sincerely believe ... in the general existence of a moral instinct. I think it is the brightest gem with which the human character is studded, and the want of it as more degrading than the most hideous of bodily deformities."

—Thomas Jefferson

Although he was doubtless one of the greatest statesmen this nation has ever had, Thomas Jefferson was also a radical thinker for his time. When describing morality, as above, Jefferson had in mind an ideal human being — a role model — called the citizen. The citizen was a highly responsible individual with strong community ties who regarded morality as the core of his or her existence. The citizen not only had indisputable rights and privileges but also a variety of moral duties.

While more than 200 years have passed since the birth of the United States and almost as many since Jefferson's demise, there are many places where his ideals remain alive and well in America. Fortunately, one such place is at K-State — where, through a social service program, students are given the unique opportunity to help as well as become integrated in local communities while still going to school.

Titled the Community Service Program and under the direction of Marvin Kaiser, head of the Department of Sociology, Anthropology and Social Work, this local project is a good example of how the University and its students can contribute to the state in which we live and work.

According to Kaiser, the program has three main purposes:

■ The first purpose is the aforementioned concept of citizenship, which is encouraged to students through the creation of opportunities to engage in community service. It is especially important that these opportunities are offered during the students' college careers, acting as a sort of supplement for a well-rounded educational process.

■ The second aim of the program is to help ameliorate the critical conditions that afflict many parts of Kansas. What better time to assist the depressed rural segments of our state than in the middle of an agricultural recession? The program offers a direct way in which a land-grant university can repay its home state.

■ Third, the program enables students to help because it ensures that community service is possible without any student incurring personal monetary loss.

Described by the Wichita Eagle-Beacon as a "homespun Peace Corps," the program contains four distinct parts.

The first, and perhaps largest in scale, is the community service team project, a summer-long assignment for college students in rural Kansas communities. Student teams with four or five members each are sent out under the supervision of a faculty member to one of eight Kansas communities that have solicited assistance from the program.

There are approximately 35 students chosen for this summer, all of whom are required to attend community service classes and visit their designated community at least once during this semester. The students involved each receive a $1,500 stipend for their summer work as well as a $400 scholarship for the following school year.

The second part of the program is the Volunteer Clearing House, an attempt to make volunteer opportunities more accessible to K-State students. This part makes available not only local volunteer projects but ones in the nation and worldwide. This provides students with a wider scope of volunteer opportunities from which to choose.

Third is the Home Maintenance Project, an effort to particularly help the poor and elderly. This aspect of the program deals with painting and restoring houses, fixing sidewalks, and a variety of other tasks designed to better the living conditions of low-income people.

Fourth is the Mini-Granting Agency, which provides students with funding for community service projects of their own. This segment of the program allows students to gain experience in composing their own grant proposals as well as supervising their own projects. The first date for grant proposals this year is April 1.

The Community Service Program is scheduled to operate for at least two years on an annual budget of $90,000. Most of the funding was granted by a Fund for Improvement of Post-Secondary Education grant, although other funding was provided by the Student Financial Assistance office (through Kansas work-study), KSU Foundation grants, private groups and the communities soliciting support.

The program has enormous potential because it promotes the active participation of student volunteer work throughout the entire state. The approximately 200 students who will annually become involved will participate in a variety of tasks, from the development of the historical side of Wallace County to improving the infrastructure for economic development in Goodland.

Perhaps the most laudable facet of this program is that it is not merely an exercise of good intentions. The Community Service Program is an actual example of how Jeffersonian ideals can be transposed into practical work with great benefits for all parties involved. In the words of Kaiser, the students "work not for, but with the communities. They become, for a short period of time, part of those communities."

Internships offer advantages in job searches

Endeavor yields 'hands-on' experience

By Susan Rouse
Collegian Reporter

A chance for future employment, pay and college credit is offered in an endeavor that many professors and intructors encourage their students to take part in: an internship.

An internship may help students with future employment opportunities, said Bruce Laughlin, director of the Career Planning and Placement Center. It offers students a chance for hands-on experience in the fields they have chosen for their career in a company that may become their place of future employment, he said.

"Companies have gone into hiring interns as a screening process for full-time employees," Laughlin said. "Employers can't afford to just hire anyone; they want greater confidence so they know that intern will be a good long-term employee."

Laughlin said internships are a great way to begin a career and to get experience in the field in which one is studying.

The Career Planning and Placement Center helps students find internships that are related to a student's career and ones that aren't.

Laughlin suggests students wanting to find internships should fill out a data form that can be obtained from the Career Planning and Placement Center. The form should be turned in to show an interest to companies who interview students specifically for summer employment and internships. Laughlin recommends developing a resume as soon as possible.

Many of the summer interns serve as vacation release assistants, where employers hire interns to give regular employees time off during the summer months.

"Summer employment gives students an advantage in future job searches," Laughlin said.

The Career Planning and Placement Center offers opportunities to all students for internships, he said.

"We express opportunities to students as soon as we see them. We don't focus on any type of student or major," he said.

The Career Planning and Placement Center isn't the only place students can go to find out about internships.

The various colleges and departments have internship information for students. Some departments, such as the public relations and leisure studies departments, require internships as part of the curriculum for that major. These internships are offered for credit, pay or both.

The College of Veterinary Medicine offers internships for students in the Department of Animal Science. Animal science majors can gain experience in meat-packing plants, feed yards, commercial food companies and even artificial insemination.

"We take a very broad approach," said Calvin Drake, professor of animal science and industry. "If we see it as any type of learning experience at all, and have a student and an organization to work with, we will make it fit as an internship. It is such a tremendous opportunity."

Internships are not required, but students receive a one-hour credit for every two weeks of work, Drake said. Ninety-eight percent of the internships are in the summer, with anywhere from 10 to 20 students involved.

Students in the Department of Animal Science whose homes are farms and ranches are not allowed to return there to complete their internships. They are required to seek internships at other establishments.

The College of Engineering offers a yearlong co-op program for their students, said Kenneth Gowdy, associate dean of engineering. This involves having 25 to 30 engineering students a semester work in some area of industry, earning $1,000 to $1,700 a month.

The students work as full-time employees for a semester, and don't take classes during that time. Engineering students are allowed to alternate between work and classes every semester.

"Students may have as many as five job experiences in a three-year period," Gowdy said. "It is not just one experience."

The College of Human Ecology offers internships in all its departments, said Karen Pence, assistant to the dean.

Students in Human Development and Family Studies and Hotel and Restaurant Management are two such departments.

The Department of Human Development and Family Studies has an internship for Early Childhood Education majors, in which students are able to receive eight hours of credit for student teaching on-campus, said Joyce Cantrell, instructor of human development and family studies.

Students need to take the pre-professional skills test and have at least a 2.5 grade point average to be eligible and can receive eight hours of credit.

"Students don't receive pay, but they get experience," Cantrell said.

The Department of Hotel and Restaurant Management offers field experience worth three credit hours, said Charlie Partlow, assistant professor of dietetics, restaurant and institutional management.

The students are able to work at any restaurant or hotel establishment.

"We'll help set up a program with anyone at any restaurant or hotel," Partlow said.

Guidelines are established for interns to follow and complete during their field experience, Partlow said. All students enrolled in the restaurant and hotel management program are eligible for field experience.

Public relations majors in the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications are required to have an internship, said Paul Parsons, associate professor of journalism and mass communications.

According to Parsons, a large number of internships are available for public relations majors on the K-State campus and in the Manhattan community, which makes it easy for the students to find an internship.

Students are required to work for at least one credit hour, but work for as many as three, Parsons said. One hour of credit is received for every 120 hours of work.

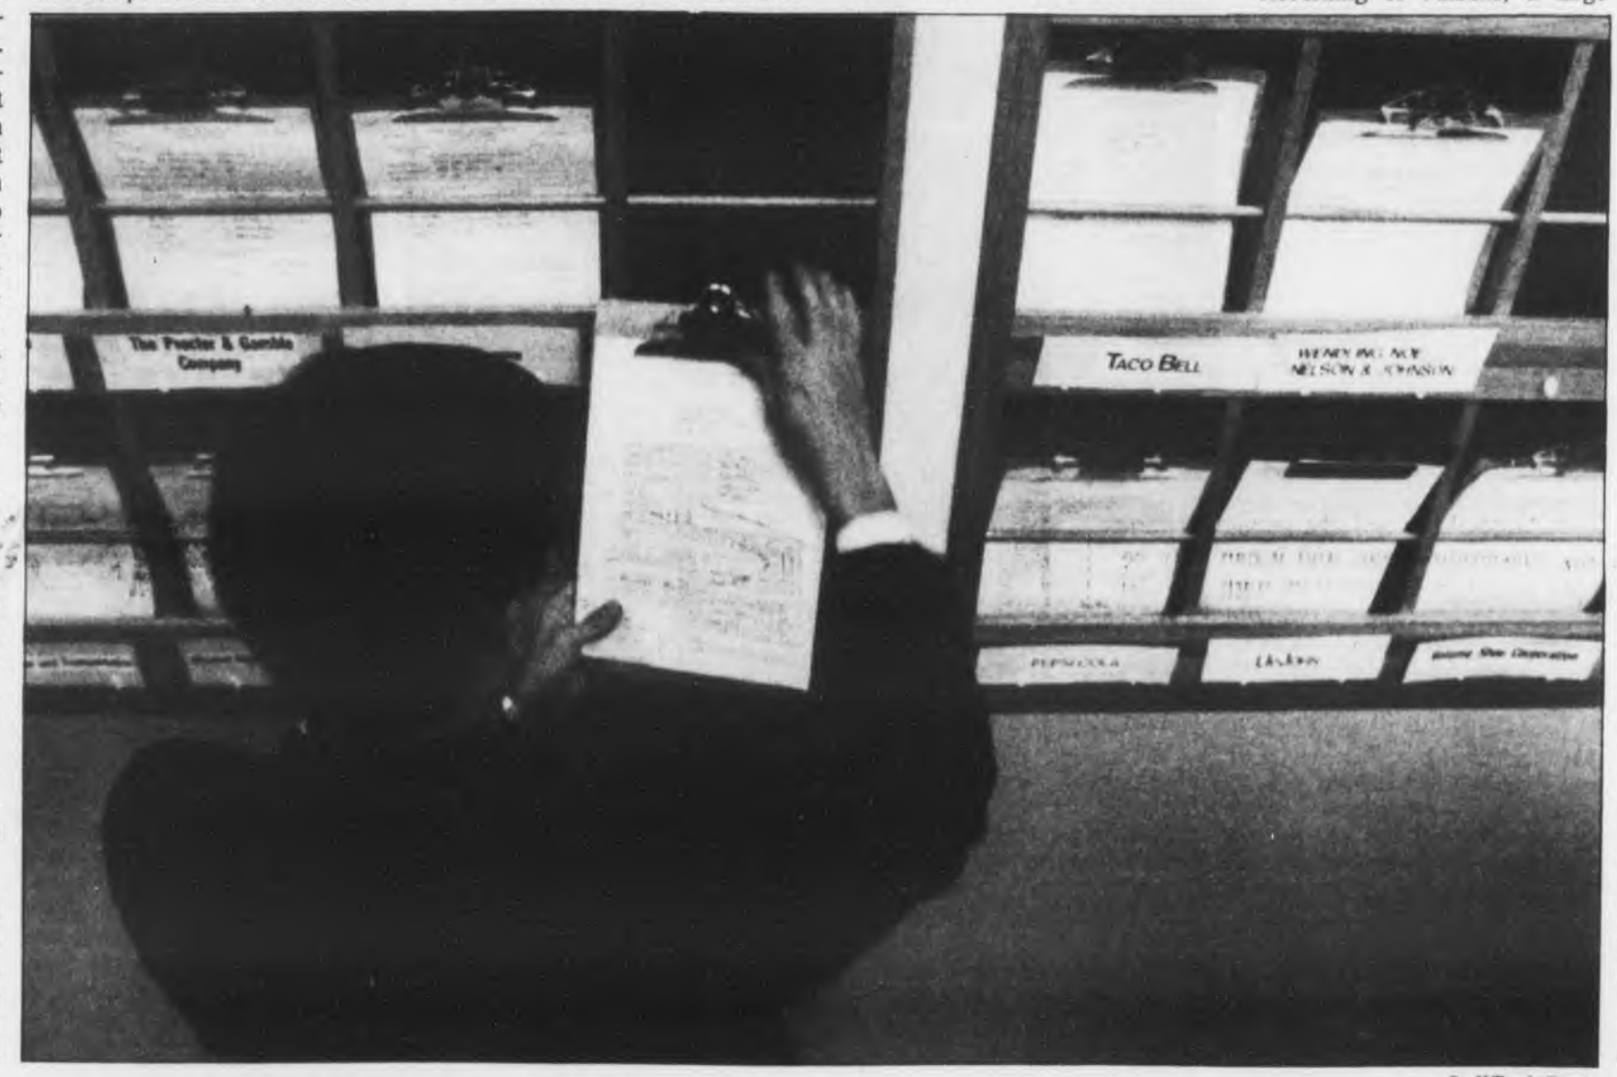
Other journalism majors have the option to take on an internship purely on a volunteer basis, Parsons said. These students, along with the students in public relations, receive credit regardless of whether the internship offers pay. They receive a grade that is figured into their GPA.

The intern is graded on a case study that includes an overview of the organization they are working for, a narrative report and a portfolio. The intern is also evaluated by the supervisor. The evaluation constitutes part of his or her grade.

Parsons said internships give students a chance to have professional references instead of only having professors. He said nearly 50 percent of the journalism students have had an internship by the time they graduate.

The Department of Leisure Studies also requires internships of its majors, said Don Lindley, associate professor of physical education, dance and leisure studies.

That department's program includes two internships for its students. The internships are required before graduation.



The pre-internship consists of 280 hours of work, usually during the student's junior year. The actual internship, which constitutes the last part of the curriculum, requires 600 hours of work during the student's senior year.

The internships offer a good deal of variety. Students can work at resorts, public or private agencies, therapeutic agencies or cruise ships.

"It enhances their marketability. It's practical hands-on experience, which involves both personal and professional growth for the students," Lindley said.

Students in the math department can receive pay as paper graders, said Tom Muenzenberger, associate professor of mathematics. The option is for students who have successfully completed courses such as College Algebra, General Calculus and Calculus I and II.

"It is job experience. It gets them into the academic business and keeps them well-tuned with what they've learned in previous semesters," Muenzenberger said. "They are primarily math majors."

Speech instructor teaches job-interviewing class

By Lori Ingmire
Collegian Reporter

The ability to communicate is the No. 1 skill employers are looking for today, said Peggy Null-Stevenson, instructor in the Department of Speech.

Null-Stevenson teaches Employment Interview, a course that examines the principles of job-interviewing techniques. Her latest research revealed that K-State and the University of Kansas are the only universities in the Big Eight Conference to offer such a course.

Employment Interview emphasizes the development of the communication skills essential in a job interview. The course, worth three hours of undergraduate credit, is offered in two sections and attracts 40-50 students each semester.

"From this course, I want my students to learn how to communicate interpersonally, emphasizing the importance of cummunication at all levels," Null-Stevenson said. "I want to motivate my students, give them insight and, most of all, I want to be a cheerleader."

Null-Stevenson said this course deals more with pragmatics and skills rather than theories of the interview. This helps the student gain the pertinent information necessary to meet interview needs.

Ingrid Tyree, senior in marketing, is currently enrolled in Employment Interview. She will graduate in May and is interviewing this semester. Tyree said she needed information on interviewing for employment because she didn't know how to get started. She wanted to be prepared so she signed up for the course.

"This course has educated me in resume and cover letter writing, business etiquette and many different things I've never thought about before," Tyree said. "When certain situations arise, I'll know how to handle them."

Tyree said the course builds confidence, teaches the student good communication skills and, most importantly, teaches the student how to relate to others in the business world.

"I think this course should be required for all to take," Tyree said. "It is needed."

Null-Stevenson began researching the topic of employment interviewing when she was first assigned to teach the course. From her research, she has compiled a book which is used in the course, "The Job Path."

"Over the years, I have tried to keep up on current trends," Null-Stevenson said. "I want the latest information for my students, training them for successful job interviews."

Null-Stevenson said copies have been sent all over the country. For example, copies have been sent to the East Coast, Yale University and even to one of Null-Stevenson's former students who was asked to teach a similar course at another university. Although Null-Stevenson makes no profit from the publication, she said she is pleased with the good reviews it has received.

"'The Job Path' is an extremely useful publication," said Paul Friedman, head of graduate studies at the University of Kansas.

Null-Stevenson does not advertise the course other than in the University's catalog, but said students learn of the course by word-of-mouth, hearing from those who have profited from it before. She said it is "a thrill and an honor" that students have shown so much interest over the years.

Retirement accounts affected by 1986 tax changes

Commentary

STEPHEN P. HARRISON
Collegian Columnist

It's been said the one thing that never changes in this world is the fact that everything changes. With the never-ending series of tax reforms enacted by Congress, this seems especially true of tax laws. One of the products that has been the target of many of these changes is Individual Retirement Accounts.

Universally introduced in 1982, IRAs and their distributions were targeted by tax reform just two years later. Even worse, it wasn't until last year that the Internal Revenue Service issued proposed regulations to help explain these new laws. No wonder people are confused! To bridge this three-year gap, a special set of transitional rules were put into place for individuals who reached age 70½ in the 1985 or 1986 tax years. Those who have reached or who will reach age 70½ in the 1987 tax year or later will contend with another set of rules that went into effect in January.

The most wide-reaching of these IRA tax changes will be the elimination of IRA aggregation. This means if you have more than one IRA, you can no longer fulfill your required distribution (minimum withdrawal of funds) from just one IRA account. Instead, you must take distributions from each of your IRA accounts. As a result, IRA owners may want to transfer the majority of all of their IRA funds into one account to lessen the confusion of withdrawing required distributions each year.

How do you calculate these required distributions? Start by obtaining your previous year-end account balance. Next, determine your life-expectancy multiple. This information is provided in unisex tables that can be found in the "1988 Master Tax Guide," a publication most certified public accountants keep on hand.

Let's work through an example. Sally Smith, who turns 70½ years of age in 1988 and is single, had an account balance of $50,000 on Dec. 31, 1987. By referring to the unisex tables, she discovers her life-expectancy multiple for 1988 is 16.0. By dividing her 1987 year-end account balance of $50,000 by her life-expectancy multiple of 16.0, she will obtain the dollar amount she must withdraw from her IRA this year. In this example the distribution would be $3,125.

If Sally wishes to do so, she can delay taking this first distribution until April 1 of the following calendar year — in this case 1989 — but she must withdraw her 1989 distribution by Dec. 31 of 1989 or she will be forced to pay a 50 percent tax penalty on the amount not withdrawn. Once Sally begins making regular withdrawals, she cannot miss any distribution or again she'll be assessed the 50 percent penalty. As you can see, it's essential to make timely withdrawals!

Another aspect of IRA distributions that has been changed by tax reform concerns calculating life expectancy. According to the IRS, recalculating life expectancy each year is the norm, and if IRA owners do not wish to recalculate their life expectancy, they must make that designation with the trustee or custodian on their IRA.

If this is the route you elect to take, once your life-expectancy multiple is determined, you simply reduce the number by one for each succeeding year. For example, let's say Fred and Betty Jones are 70 and 65 respectively and have elected not to recalculate the required distribution from Fred's IRA. They determine their life-expectancy multiple is 23.1. To calculate this year's required distribution, they simply divide his previous year-end account balance and divide it by 23.1. Next year, their life-expectancy multiple will be 22.1, the next year 21.1, and so on. If Fred and Betty should elect to recalculate their life expectancy, each year they would simply refer to the unisex tables to determine their appropriate life-expectancy multiple.

Yet another IRA change brought about by tax reform is the introduction of the incidental death benefit rule. Beginning in the 1989 tax season, if the beneficiary of your IRA is not a spouse, he or she will be allowed only a 10-year age difference when calculating life expectancy for IRA distribution. This means if your 40-year-old son is the beneficiary of your IRA and you're 70 years old, his age will be treated as though it were 60 when calculating life expectancy.

'Cats pound Huskies, 88-67

By Jenny Chaulk
Sports Editor

Just hearing the score of K-State's game with Northern Illinois Tuesday night is not enough to really understand what took place in Ahearn Field House.

But the fact practically the loudest cheer of the night was heard when Wildcat reserve Walter Wright entered the game with 1:27 left helps clarify K-State's 88-67 victory over the Huskies was less than thrilling.

A win is win, though, and Coach Lon Kruger and the 'Cats, 16-7 overall and 7-3 in the Big Eight Conference, will take it.

"This game will benefit us," Kruger said. "We didn't really open like I'd like to open. I think the contrast in the two halves in the first 10 minutes of each half was the difference."

Kruger couldn't have called it better. After taking a 16-point lead into the locker room at halftime, 40-24, K-State kept itself going in the second half, taking a 22-point lead, 55-33, at the 14:29 mark on a 3-pointer by Mitch Richmond.

"Coach Kruger had a few words for us at halftime. A loss tonight would have really dampened our hopes of (getting into the NCAA tournament)."
—Ron Meyer

During the course of the next 10 minutes, the 'Cats extended their margin by outscoring Northern Illinois 27-17, and registering their largest lead of the game, 80-50, on a 3-pointer by Buster Glover with 4:48 left.

The Huskies were able to narrow the gap during the final minutes, with Donnell Thomas scoring the final points of the game at the buzzer to pull his team to within 21 points, 88-67.

The game didn't start like it ended, however, as ragged play hampered K-State for much of the first half.

"We didn't come out well in the first half," center Ron Meyer said. "We didn't really take care of the responsibilities that we talked about the last two days that we needed to take care of. We were going through the motions in the first half."

In the first half, the 'Cats were plagued by 10 turnovers. Good shooting from the field and free throw line (57.7 percent and 76.9 percent), however, enabled them to maintain a large lead over the Huskies, who shot just 36.7 percent in the half.

Kruger, evidently, had some inspiring words for the Wildcats during the intermission which prompted them to upgrade their alertness, intensity and overall play.

"We recognized we didn't do the things we had to do (in the first half) to be successful," Kruger said. "We wanted to go out and reassure ourselves we could do what it takes."

"Coach Kruger had a few words for us at halftime," Meyer said. "He said what needed to be said, which was basically we don't have much season left and have got to start building from here. A loss tonight would have really dampened our hopes of (getting into the NCAA tournament)."

Positive factors for the 'Cats in the game included holding the Huskies' leading scorer, Rodney Davis, to just six points. Entering the game, Davis was averaging 17.6 points per game. Last year, he was Northern Illinois' primary weapon in their near-upset of K-State, scoring 24 points. The 'Cats man defense was effective in shutting him down.

Mitch Richmond also made a welcome return to K-State's offense. After scoring 11 points on 4-17 shooting Thursday against Kansas, the 6-5 senior netted a game-high 26 points on 10-14 shooting from the field and 5-6 shooting from the free throw line.

Staff/John La Barge

Northern Illinois' Donnell Thomas shoots over Wildcat Fred McCoy.

"I felt it was my duty to get my shots down," Richmond said. "I needed to get my confidence back and shoot a good percentage from the field. I think I'm a believer again."

The Wildcats were also able to play 12 players in the contest, with 10 of them recording minutes in double digits and four of them scoring in double figures.

The Huskies drew first blood in the contest at the 18:51 mark of the first half, but that was the only time they would lead. Richmond, Will Scott, Charles Bledsoe and Meyer all scored baskets to put the 'Cats up, 8-4, at the 15:58 mark.

K-State scored two more baskets to the Huskies' one to go ahead 12-6, but Northern Illinois pulled within two points twice, 12-10 and 14-12, midway through the half.

They could get no closer, as K-State steadily built its lead. Richmond scored K-State's final nine points of the half to put the 'Cats up by 16 at the half.

Hamilton's dispute with official 'rumor'

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY Mo. — Implications by Oklahoma State Coach Leonard Hamilton that basketball official Jim Bain favors Missouri unfairly are "nothing but rumors," the Big Eight's chief of officials said Monday.

"Jim Bain is one of the best officials in the country," John Overby said from his business office in Newton, Kan. "He is judged by his performance, not by rumors."

Hamilton was ejected from Sunday's Oklahoma State-Missouri game when his bench drew a third technical foul from Bain. Missouri won the game 92-70.

"I have to say that I was very concerned when I found out that Mr. Bain (was officiating)," Hamilton said. "I think he's a pretty good official. He's been to six Final Fours. I respect that."

"But I have been told by a lot of the coaches in the league that if you ever have Jim Bain at the University of Missouri that you need to really be concerned about it. I called Johnny Overby last night and voiced my concern of having Bain at Missouri. ...He said that other coaches had asked him the same thing, but he assured me that that would not be a problem."

Hamilton declined to identify the coaches, saying only that it was several. Overby, when contacted by The Associated Press Monday, declined to discuss any conversations he has had with coaches.

"Jim is accepted by his performance, not by rumors," Overby said.

Bain also officiates Big Ten games.

"Jim Bain has been a Big Eight official as long as the Big Ten," Overby said. "He takes the Big Ten, and his second assignment comes out of the Big Eight. I use Jim whenever I can. He is one of the best officials in the country, and that's how he's rated, not by rumor."

Hamilton said he would ask Oklahoma State Athletic Director Myron Roderick to contact the Big Eight about his complaints.

Bain could not be reached for comment because the Big Eight will not give out officials' telephone numbers.

Roderick told The AP he had reviewed film of the game and would transmit his thoughts to the Big Eight.

"What I'm concerned about is consistency in all places in the league," Roderick said from his office in Stillwater, Okla. "I also have some concern about some things that were not called. But when any official takes 10 or 15 minutes to visit with a coach, that is uncalled for. I think that's out of place."

Roderick said two obvious instances of traveling by Missouri players were not called and that Hamilton drew his first technical when he questioned the non-calls.

"Then he got the second when he turned around to take off his coat," Roderick said. "If that is grounds for a technical foul, then it ought to be called everywhere. We just need to be consistent. Every coach should be treated the same. You can't let one guy yell and holler and give another guy a technical for taking off his coat."

Nelson signs volleyball players

K-State volleyball coach Scott Nelson announced the signings of Rhonda Hughes and Betsy Berkley to national letters of intent Wednesday.

Hughes, a 5-foot-8 middle hitter, hails from Manhattan. She was all-I-70 League and all-class 6A as a junior and a senior for the Indians. She broke the school record for kills, defensive points and passing percentage.

Hughes, who also led her team to a pair of league championships and two state championships, has been an honor student at Manhattan High. She will major in pre-veterinary medicine at K-State.

"Rhonda is a fierce competitor with excellent concentration," said Nelson. "Her passing and defensive skills are already at a Big Eight level, and that's a tremendous advantage."

Berkley, a native of Tescott, Kan., is also a middle hitter. She lettered four times in volleyball and basketball, and she earned Post Rock League honors three times in volleyball. Tescott captured league championships each of the last two years to go with a pair of 1A regional championships. In 1986, Tescott was a sub-state runner-up.

Berkley was the valedictorian of her class and was on the honor roll four times.

"Betsy has outstanding quickness and is a very aggressive attacker and blocker," Nelson said. "I think both of these players have a chance to help us right away. We graduated two players at that position so there is certainly an opportunity.

"I'm excited about these two because they are such outstanding people. They are very good students who will make a fine addition to our team."

Ticket holders asked to meet

The K-State athletic department would like all individuals who have been season ticket holders during the 38-year basketball history of Ahearn Field House to meet for a group picture at 1 p.m. Saturday at Ahearn.

The department would like to use the group picture in the game program for the final game to be played in Ahearn in March.

Doors to the field house will open at 12:15 p.m. Saturday in conjunction with a K-State junior varsity game which will be played that day. All individuals who plan to be in the picture are asked to please be prompt so that the picture can be set up and taken at halftime of the junior varsity game.

The varsity contest between K-State and Oklahoma State will tip off at 3:10 p.m.

Walking wounded to play Iowa State

By Chase Clark
Sports Writer

As the fog starts to lift, K-State's women's basketball coach Matilda Mossman is left inspecting the wreckage of a once strong Lady Cat squad that has been dwindling in numbers throughout the season.

Tracy Bleczinski, the only returning starter, quit before the season started to pursue her education. Then, early in the season, Carol Smith was forced to redshirt because of an injury.

Kristie Bahner has now been sidelined for close to two weeks with mononucleosis. And if that isn't enough, Janet Madsen suffered a knee injury in the Lady Cats' game Saturday with the University of Kansas. She was examined by an orthopedic doctor Monday for a possible cartilage tear and is questionable for the rest of the season.

So, only eight Lady Cats will be dressed out for their game at 7 tonight against Iowa State in Hilton Coliseum in Ames, Iowa.

K-State, 8-17 overall and 1-11 in Big Eight Conference play, is hoping to pick up its second conference victory. Iowa State, 12-12 and 4-8, was the Lady Cats only conference victim, losing 83-70 Feb. 3 in Ahearn Field House.

While it appears K-State can successfully compete with Iowa State, opposing teams have found victories hard to come by in Hilton Coliseum this season. Iowa State is 4-2 at home in Big Eight play, losing only to Nebraska and Missouri, which are ranked first and second in the conference, respectively.

"I think our kids have confidence going up against Iowa State because they are the only team we have beaten in the Big Eight," Mossman said. "But it's going to be tougher because we're playing on their floor and because we don't have Janet and Kristie.

"We match up with Iowa State better than a lot of other teams. They don't have the quick inside people that Oklahoma and Colorado have," she added. "We just match up a little better against them physically."

The team hasn't allowed the losses of Bahner or Madsen to discourage them or keep them from thinking they can still compete.

"Morale is still good," Mossman said. "We've got others there, and somebody is just going to have to do a little more. It just really gives somebody else a chance to prove themselves."

Lady Luck may not be giving the Lady Cats a helping hand, but history is on their side. K-State is 21-2 against Iowa State and will be facing a Lady Cyclone squad that is in the midst of a four-game losing streak.

Baseball tickets on sale in Ahearn

By Becky Ives
Collegian Reporter

If you're a baseball fan — or even if you're not but you just like competition — K-State has a deal for you.

Wildcat season baseball tickets went on sale Monday for $5 at the Ahearn Field House ticket office, and Coach Mike Clark is hoping ticket sales will generate interest in the team as well as raise money.

The season ticket enables the holder to see 32 games on 22 different dates. K-State has 10 double-headers scheduled and 12 night games. The ticket is a bargain because without it, admission will costs $1 per game.

"We hope that this will attract people to come out, experience K-State baseball, enjoy it and come back," Clark said.

Season tickets will also be made available to the community for $20 each.

Promoting the sale of season tickets is part of a fund-raising effort by the I Contributed A Twenty club for the K-State baseball team. The tickets are being printed by Vista Drive In Restaurant and have the baseball schedule on them. Scott Scrogin, senior in mechanical engineering, is in charge of the baseball fund-raising committee.

"It is easy to promote sports like men's basketball," Scrogin said. "But in ICAT, we try to do something more for the non-revenue sports."

In their promotion efforts, members of ICAT's fund-raising committee are calling all members of ICAT. They hope to have made all the calls before the Wildcats' first home game Saturday, Scrogin said. The committee is also advertising in the Collegian and is posting fliers about the sale of tickets.

"The price is low enough, so we can get people out there," Scrogin said. "The funding is important, but they (the baseball team) are looking more for support. They would like to see the people out there."

Clark is also involved with the promotion of the tickets.

"I've been talking to different dormatories, sororities and fraternities trying to get people aware of the baseball program," Clark said. "I'm trying to do everything I can do to promote my baseball team, without spending money."

"If we can get people involved with our program, we can make up for the fact that we don't have a very big budget," Clark added.

The Wildcats finished fifth in the Big Eight Conference last year with an overall record of 28-24. It was the team's first winning season since 1982, and it was Clark's first year as head coach.

In their opener Saturday, the Wildcats will play Friends University in a 1 p.m. double-header.

Missouri Western State College comes to Manhattan Sunday for a doubleheader scheduled to start at 1 p.m.

Seminar gives freshmen help

Goal to reduce dropouts

By Julie Hanna
Collegian Reporter

K-State administrators think they have found a way to decrease the dropout rate of the freshman class by about 50 percent annually.

The current freshman dropout rate of 28 percent is average compared to any other major university, said Judith Lynch, assistant director of the Academic Assistance Center.

However, the Learning Skills Seminar program that was started in 1983 is expected to reduce that percentage by the almost 600 students who participate in the program each year.

The seminar is a voluntary program that was originally designed for freshmen with low ACT scores, said Cliff Schuette, assistant director of the Counseling Center. Freshmen with ACT scores of 15 or below have a higher dropout rate than freshmen with higher scores, he said.

The seminar is designed to teach study skills and give students specific help during their first semester. The students meet in small groups with employees of the Academic Assistance Center, who give the students individual attention, Lynch said.

After four years, enrolling in the seminar doubles a student's chances of graduating, she said.

Schuette said the program is an early guide for students.

"If they come in (to K-State), don't get help and have an ACT score of 15 or below, chances are real good that they're going to go on academic probation after their first semester. Once that happens, it's hard to get back up — especially if they go real low. What we want to do is see if we could stop that," he said.

Students are identified by their ACT score, and the files of those students who have a score of 15 or below are marked with an instruction for them to see an adviser before they enroll, Schuette said.

Math and reading tests help place the students in appropriate courses.

Most students need at least one math course to earn a degree, depending on their curriculum, Schuette said. Even those students who have had the required three years of high-school math may not be ready for their initial college math course, Lynch said.

Although the study skills class is a non-degree credit, Schuette said it's an important class.

"If it's going to make you successful over four years, then we see it as a positive investment," he said.

Because the class is voluntary, it helps students even more because they are there to learn, he said.

The seminar's goal is to help students be successful and give them a sense of satisfaction by completing a degree, Schuette said.
